I was ascending the Yang-tse-Kiang river. As we passed the city of Nan-king, two native Christians came on board and joined us. They were not in the pay of any mission, but were volunteers who had been assisting in the formation of a Christian church, under very interesting circumstances, in a part of the country never visited by a missionary. These men were greatly cheered and encouraged, and really to see their faces was as good as a sermon. They had not been long on board before a passenger asked one of them, who was a native doctor, where he was coming from and what he had been engaged in. In reply he began to give an account of the work of Christ that he had witnessed and taken part in, and his own enthusiasm so communicated itself to the little company gathered around, that they were listening to the story of the cross, and of the Saviour who came from heaven to die for sinners, with a degree of interest that one does not often see in China.

I sat at a little distance looking on with thankfulness, and raising my heart to God for his blessing, for I saw that fully a third of the passengers were collected around our medical friend, listening with interest to his story.

One among the passengers attracted my eye. I saw that he was not so interested as those around him; and very soon impatience gave way to scorn and anger. With a look which I wish I could bring home to you, he said: "Ah, yes, and we are to think, I suppose, that the missionaries are our very good friends, are we?" "Yes," said the doctor, "indeed they are. They have come thousands of miles on purpose to benefit us, and to tell us of Christ that died for sinners." "And to bring us the opium," said the man; "and to bring us the opium!"

Oh, if I could make you witness of the scene, it would satisfy you as to what is the conscience of China on the question. That sentence, and the intense scorn and anger with which it was uttered, penetrated every heart. I wished that I could sink through the floor out of sight. The little company, no longer interested, slunk away like men ashamed of themselves, as if they had been caught at something evil in listening to a doctrine which had been brought by those who bring the opium. It is worse than mockery to the Chinese to bring your opium, and then say to them, "Love your neighbor as yourself."—J. Hudson Taylor.

Recent official inspection of Russian prisons has revealed a sad state of over-crowding. A general increase of crime is reported, of which the wide-spread drunkenness now prevailing in the village communes is a principal cause. In one prison in the Caucasus there were said to be but a few weeks ago three hundred and sixty prisoners huddled together in a building designed for but eighty convicts. The Government does nothing to check this growing evil of drunkenness, but rather encourages the licensed taverns.

TO THE EMPEROR AND SUPREME EXECUTIVE COUNCIL OF CHINA.

We, the undersigned ministers and members of Christian churches, desire to record our sorrow at the moral and physical havoc which has been wrought among the people of China in consequence of the Opium Policy of the British Government—a policy which has been totally at variance with the principles of the Christian religion.

We respectfully express our deep sympathy with the supreme authorities of China in their desire to save their nation from the curse of the opium habit; and in order to further so wise and laudable an object, we would emphasize the importance of acting upon the opportunity presented in the year 1890, under the treaty of Tien-tsin, and under the additional agreement of 1885, to insist upon the termination, not later than 1891, of the legal importation of opium into China.

Christ must be the central sun. Our first allegiance must be to the church of Christ. He considered civil government more as what it ought to be, than what it was. It ought to be for the glory of Christ, and the security of life, liberty and property. He showed how all forms of civil government, whether democratic, republican or monarchical, were antagonized by secret societies such as Masonry, which proclaims its covenant irrevocable, for no law of the land can annul it, say the highest Masonic authorities. Their government is autocratic, demanding unqualified allegiance and refusing inspection, as in the abduction of Wm. Morgan. In some of their degrees they do not except even murder and treason. They claim supreme control, as in the Clan-na-Gael, even in executing the death penalty, and pledging protection to murderers and traitors. He showed how the Clan-na-Gael embarrassed and defeated the ends of justice. "An unwilling witness," was a newspaper heading of the trial. This trial, it had been estimated, would cost Cook county $500,000, and the entire cost would be near a million dollars. No man who takes such oaths is qualified to testify in a court of justice. Mr. O'Sullivan had said of Dr. Cronin, "Such men will get their deserts;" that it was another Morgan case.

Bro. Milligan aroused the convention by showing how Albert Griffin, who was high up in the orders, had accomplished more to defeat political prohibition through lodge tactics than any man in the nation.

M. A. GAULT, Sec.

The following resolutions were adopted by the State Anti-secret Convention of Iowa, at Blanchard, November 7, 1889.

The past year presents much that is encouraging to the friends of anti-secrecy in the State. Many good men are more disposed to listen to a candid discussion of the claims of secrecy; others, influenced by the spirit of Christianity and patriotism, are seceding from these institutions, and exposing their secret rituals as opposed to the best interests of society, antagonizing the church in her work, and fraught with danger to the State. We cannot too highly commend the conduct of those noble men, who, often at the risk of personal safety, renounce obligations sinfully taken to associations that are contrary to the plain requirements of Christianity. It must be confessed that these institutions are increasing in number. Designing men realize the advantage of associations in which the good name and reputation of others will shield them from suffering the righteous punishment due to their criminal acts. The revelations of anarchists, and more recently the disclosures of the Clan-na-Gael society, show the danger of good men entering associations with bad men, in which they must either conceal their disreputable acts, or endanger their life in their disclosure and in their efforts to correct them. The multiplication of so many secret societies threaten the safety of the state. French history may yet repeat itself in the United States. A combination of the different secret orders could easily overthrow constitutional authorities, and establish a reign of terror in this country as it did in France. This, followed by a division among themselves, and an effort by the different orders, each one to gain the supremacy, as in France, might make the streets of our large cities run with the blood of their inhabitants.

We recommend the adoption of the following resolutions:

1. That all oath-bound secret societies are unnecessary and sinful in their character; they are damaging to a good cause, and become the cover of deeds of darkness that will not bear the light; and some of them subvert the sacredness of the family relation by forming associations with others, and these often bad men, that are held to be more close than the sacred bond that binds husband and wife and parent and child.
2. That these antagonize the efforts of the church for the conversion of men, by teaching them that the observance of a Christless religion will fit them for heaven.
3. That many of them are adapted to defeat the ends of justice, and shield the criminal from the just punishment of his acts, as the recent expose of the Clan-na-Gael sufficiently testifies; and yet there are other associations, as, for example, Masonry, in which the oaths are more impious and infamous in their character, and the penalty for disobedience more barbarous than in the Clan-na-Gael.
4. That the charity and liberality of these associations are merely fictitious, universally confined to those who are never likely to need aid, and excluding all others.
5. That their pretended harmonious meeting of all nations, factions and professions, and forms of religion, is a mere delusion, and an attempt to harmonize Christ and Beliel.
6. That we are satisfied that the secret temperance orders do not aid, but evidently retract the progress of true temperance work, and that we are the more confirmed in this view by contrasting the grand measure of success attending the open-method work of the W. C. T. U. with the work accomplished by these orders. We regard all secret societies as part of the general lodge system, and as one in spirit, and although not all equally dangerous, yet all are building on an evil foundation, and the less objectionable tend to strengthen and popularize the worse.

7. We approve of the diligence and labors of our State agent, Rev. C. F. Hawley, recommend his reappointment, and pledge him our co-operation and support.

8. We approve of the Christian Cynosure as an able and faithful exponent of the principles of the Christian Association, opposed to secret societies, and commend it to the support of all good citizens.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Solomon's prayer, v. 54. Solomon's wonderful prayer is not contained in our lesson, but we learn certain facts about it that are interesting and instructive. It was before the ark, the symbol of God's presence, that the king kneeled. It is one of the first elements in prevailing prayer that we get near to God. This is what Solomon did. The ark or mercy seat was a type of Christ, and only through him can we have this familiar approach to Jehovah. What the temple would have been with the ark left out, such is any system of religious belief which leaves out Christ. And if Solomon had made an imitation ark and put it in the temple, ignoring the true ark, he would have done what Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship are doing in offering a false salvation without any divine Mediator. The king kneeled in sight of all the people. He, the highest in dignity, set the example of bending the lowest before God. There was never a religious nation with irreligious rulers.

2. Solomon's benediction on the people, vs. 55-61. He begins by praising God. All true blessing must come through the channel of praise. Not a word of all God had promised to Moses had failed; or, literally, fallen to the ground. But it is just as impossible for God to fail to keep a promise to the humblest individual Christian. It is to our shame that we are content with so vague an idea of our rich inheritance. How many of us have made a business of studying God's promises in all their richness of meaning; saying of each one, "It is mine; God meant that promise for me, and not a word of it can ever fail!" "The Lord our God be with us" is the highest benediction that even Solomon can pronounce; that the national heart may be inclined to him, and the national cause maintained; in order, not that Israel may become rich, and great, and powerful, but for quite another reason: "that all the people of the earth may know that the Lord is God, and that there is none else." What a sublime conception of his nation's destiny! That the American nation has been a subject of God's peculiar care; that he has blessed us as no other people has been blessed, and led and disciplined us as no other people has been led and disciplined, we cannot doubt. But it is not in order that Fourth of July orators may display their rhetoric in vaunting of our power and resources, or that other nations may do us homage; but that we may glorify God and be an object lesson to the world,—"a nation whose God is the Lord." But to fulfill the end for which a people or an individual exists, the heart must be perfect before God. There must be a sincere desire to serve him, a desire paramount to all others. This and not absolute perfection is what constitutes in the Scripture sense "a perfect heart." Philosophy as well as religion teach us that all true reform must begin with the heart. There must be a changed will before the dominion of sin can be broken.

3. Solomon's offering, vs. 62, 63. This was a type of the Gospel feast. Christ has promised, "If any man hear my voice and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me." It would not be possible for an Oriental mind to figure forth a more intimate and friendly relation. It is in itself an earnest that he will bestow upon us all and much more than we shall ask. But the heart must be dedicated to his worship alone before it can be made a temple for his presence, and it must be with a far nobler offering than Solomon's, even the sacrifice of all that we are and have freely given to his service.

PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS FROM PELOUBET'S QUARTERLY.

1. The temple is a type of the individual Christian (1 Cor. 3: 10-16). (1) Rich and costly preparations have been made by others. We are heirs of all the ages. (2) The foundation is Jesus Christ, the Rock that never can be removed. (3) The true Christian character when complete is beautiful and costly. (4) The Christian is made for the worship of God, by the incense of prayer, by sacrifice, by the commandments, by praise. (5) His soul is the Holy of Holies, in which God dwells and manifests himself. (6) His whole purpose is for the glory of God and the honor of his name.

2. The temple is the type of the church. (1) In its foundations; (2) In the preparations made for it, all the world is made tributary to its work; (3) In the silent process of its building; (4) In its beauty and grandeur as a whole; (5) In its many harmonious parts; (6) In its altars of worship; (7) In the chambers around it, showing its secular and business side; (8) In its object, the worship of God; (9) In the manifestation of God's abiding presence.

3. Every person needs a place of worship. The leaders in talent, in wealth, in position, and in influence should be also leaders in prayer. When boys see that their mothers pray, but that their fathers do not, they are taught by this that religion is for women and children, but not for men.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—The Second National Sabbath Convention, under the auspices of the American Sabbath Union, will be held in New York City on Dec. 10th and 11th.

—Mr. Spurgeon contradicts a report that he is unusually ill, and says that he is better than usual, and will not begin his vacation before the middle of November.

—The First Church, Oberlin, O., Dr. Brand, pastor, received fifty-two members Nov. 3, making a membership of 1,055. This church has twenty-seven members who are missionaries in foreign lands. They are called the Roll of Honor.

—At the Belfast meeting of the Pan-Presbyterian Council it was agreed to afford pecuniary help to the Evangelical church of Bohemia. To America was allotted the raising of $6,000, which it has signally failed, so far, to do.

—No utterance before the American Board called out a heartier response than that of Dr. R. S. Storrs, when in his eloquent address he said, "Every dollar gained in the liquor traffic ought to burn a man's hand like a bit of asphalt which is the pavement of hell."

—Rev. Edward Abbott, Cambridge, Mass., chosen Missionary Bishop of Japan by the Episcopal House of Bishops, is a brother of Dr. Lyman Abbott, and was formerly a Congregational minister. One of his reasons for changing his church connections was that the Protestant Episcopal church was the "roomiest church in America."

—Gen. S. C. Armstrong, of Hampton Institute, Virginia, is to be in Chicago Dec. 1. He will speak in the First Congregational church in the morning, in St. James Church, Episcopal, in the afternoon, and in the Second Presbyterian, Dr. McPherson's, in the evening. He is to bring with him the Hampton Quartette, who will sing Southern slave songs, and a number of educated Indian young men from the Dakota Sioux, to speak for their own people. Such a living object lesson will be peculiarly instructive. That famous institute, which has done so much to at least show how our race problem can, and can only, be solved, needs money in order to go on with its educational work. Gen. Armstrong has always made Bro. Hinman welcome when visiting the institution.

—The American Sabbath Union will hold its first anniversary in New York City, on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, Dec. 9, 10 and 11, inclusive. The meetings will begin in St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal church, corner of Fourth avenue and Twenty-second street, on Monday evening, Dec. 9, at 7:30 o'clock, and they will continue in the Broadway Tabernacle, corner Sixth avenue and West Thirty-fourth street, on Tuesday and Wednesday. Pastors in all parts of the country are earnestly invited to prepare the way for these meetings by prayer and by preaching, especially on Thanksgiving Day, or on Sabbath, Dec. 8. When the Thanksgiving offerings is not needed for other purposes, it is suggested that they might be wisely devoted to the defence of the Sabbath, as a contribution to this Union for the distribution of Sabbath documents.

—The net gain of Baptists last year was 106,904 members, according to the statistics; of Presbyterians, 43,428; of Methodists, 24,352; Congregationalists, 18,024; Episcopalians, 12,857.

—The Cumberland Presbyterians have 160,185 communicants. The Dunkards claim 113,000 communicants in the United States.

—The first woman enrolled on the list of students in the Hartford Theological Seminary is Mrs. E. G. Tewksbury. She is the wife of a student in the senior class in the same seminary, and is to take a special course to prepare herself for foreign missionary work, which she will enter upon at the graduation of her husband.

IN BRIEF.

In North and South Dakota, Washington and Idaho, school suffrage is accorded to women; and in Montana, upon all questions submitted to the vote of the taxpayers, women taxpayers can vote. In South Dakota and Washington it is provided that the question of giving women full suffrage shall be referred to a special vote of the people, and women, now voters, can vote on the question.

Claus Spreckels is beginning to try his machinery in his great Philadelphia sugar plant. The refinery and machinery are insured for $2,000,000. Spreckels says he will double even this present plant so as to get a capacity of 10,000 barrels a day. Spreckels will not make public the source of his supply of raw sugar. He has engaged his custom house brokers, as well as most of his men. His heads of departments are all on the ground, most of them having been brought to Philadelphia from San Francisco. He says he will divide his time between Philadelphia and his refinery on the Pacific coast, and during his absence in California the Philadelphia factory will be in charge of his sons, August and Rudolph.

An important deal has been consummated whereby a number of capitalists in Philadelphia, Minneapolis and St. Paul became the possessors of the Kaministiquia river, known as the Kakabeka Falls. These falls are about eleven miles from Port Arthur, Ontario, at the head of Lake Superior. The river at this point is about 500 feet wide and sixty feet deep. The falls are 125 feet high, the water dashing over a perpendicular precipice of that height. The falls will furnish an equivalent of 250,000 horse power. The syndicate has purchased 4,000 acres near to, and including the falls, and the intention is to found a great Canadian manufacturing town. Flour mills and lumber mills are the first establishments to be put in, and smelting works, for reducing the silver ore found there in abundance, will be built soon after. For the initial work $35,000 will be invested. Hydraulic engines are now at work on the ground completing the preliminaries, and the actual mill building will begin early in the spring. One of the first buildings to be erected will be a $25,000 hotel, which will be commenced this fall. Contiguous to the new town is a large area in which valuable silver deposits have been found, and the company propose to utilize the falls for the introduction of an electric smelter. A flour mill, with a capacity of 20,000 barrels per day, will be the first put in. The products of the different mills will be shipped over a line of road to be built to Port Arthur, there to connect with the Canadian Pacific and the lakes.

The reception of the Pan-American tourists at Pittsburg, Nov. 7, is told in the following dispatch: This evening the visitors were taken to the Exposition Building, where were gathered samples of the finished products of nearly all the industries here. The rival electric lighting companies had prepared an elaborate display, one of which was at an expense of $10,000. The spectacle of the visit, however, was witnessed from a great balcony on the river side of the building. In the darkness the delegates and great throngs of sight seers took places upon the river slope. Suddenly a cannon boomed, a rocket was shot in the air, and what before had been a hissing sound in the darkness deepened to a roar as the city's flow of natural gas burst into flame at the tops of four stand-pipes that had been erected from a main on the river bank. Four inches in diameter were the pipes, and the roaring flame writhed and flared up fifty feet in the night. The crowds scattered before the intense heat, and 200 feet away the travelers shielded their faces from the heat with their hands. One hundred feet from shore a volcano of water suddenly burst upward from the river surface, a rocket was hurled over the turmoil of water, and with a slow, licking movement, a tower of fire lifted itself 100 feet in air from among the boiling waters. A large main had been run out on the river-bed and the pressure had been turned on. Soon from another pipe leveled over the water shot a lurid plume of light. It changed to violet color, then to a saffron, to blue, to yellow, to green—each as various chemicals were injected into the pipe. Thus at the closing of the display five great arrows of flames were piercing the darkness and a pyramid of writhing fire was vaulting from the bosom of the river. Then cannon boomed, the infantry fired many rounds, the gas was turned off, darkness fell, and the visitors went to bed.

HOME AND HEALTH.

NEW THEORY IN REGARD TO COLDS.

When a person in the cold weather goes into the open air, every time he draws in his breath, the cold air passes through his nostrils and windpipe into his lungs, and consequently diminishes the heat of those parts. As long as the person continues in the cold air, he feels no bad effects from it; but, as soon as he returns home, he approaches the fire to warm himself, and very often takes some warm and comfortable drink to keep out the cold, as it is said. The inevitable consequence is, he will find that he has taken cold. He feels a shivering, which makes him draw nearer the fire, but all to no purpose; the more he tries to heat himself, the more he chills. All the mischief is here caused by the violent action of the heat.

To avoid this, when you come out of a very cold atmosphere, you should not at first go into a room that has fire in it, or if you cannot avoid that you should keep for a considerable time at as great a distance as possible, and, above all, refrain from taking warm or strong liquors when you are cold. This rule is founded on the same principle as the treatment of any part of the body when frost-bitten. If it were brought to the fire, it would soon mortify, whereas, if rubbed with snow, no bad consequences follow from it. Hence, the frequent colds we experience in winter would in great measure be prevented if the following rule were strictly observed: When the whole body, or any part of it, is chilled, bring it to its natural feeling and warmth by degrees.

HOW WOMEN SHOULD ACT WHEN THEIR CLOTHING IS IN FLAMES.

Dr. John Marshall, F. R. S., writes as follows: A girl or woman who meets with this accident (of setting fire to her clothes) should immediately lie down on the floor, and so any one who goes to her assistance should instantly, if she be still erect, make her lie down, or, if needful, throw her down into a horizontal position and keep her in it.

Sparks fly upwards and flames ascend. Ignition from below ascends with great rapidity, and, as a result well known to experts, the fatality of disfigurement in these lamentable cases is due to the burns inflicted about the body, neck, face and head, and not to injuries of the lower limbs. Now the very moment that the person whose clothes are on fire is in a horizontal position on a flat surface the flames will ascend, but only the air and not the flames encircle their victim. Time is thus gained for further action, and in such a crisis in a fight against a fire a few seconds are precious—nay, priceless. Once in a prone position, the person so afflicted may crawl to a bell-pull or to a door, so as to clutch at one or open the other to obtain help. The draught from an open door into the room would serve to blow the flames, if any, from the body; or, again, still crawling, the sufferer may be able to secure a rug or table cloth, or other articles at hand, to smother any remaining flames, for as soon as the horizontal position is assumed they have no longer much to feed upon, and may either go out, as the phrase is, or may accidentally or intentionally be extinguished as the person rolls or moves upon the floor. In any case, not only is the time gained, but the injury inflicted is minimized. In the event of the conditions not being self-help, but assistance from another, if it be a man that comes to the rescue, having first or instantly thrown the girl or woman down, it is easy to take off his coat and stifle the diminished flames with this or some other suitable covering, the flames playing upward now from the lower limbs or the lower part of the body of the prostrated fellow-creature.

Boils, carbuncles, and other skin eruptions indicate that the system is endeavoring to reject poisonous acids, and that Ayer's Sarsaparilla is imperatively needed. It is the most reliable of all blood medicines. Ask your druggist for it, and take no other.

Truth will Out

Therein lies the secret of the marvelous success of PYLE'S PEARLINE

Washing Compound. Those who use it like it, and tell their friends. Over one million families now use it. The sale increases—each month shows decided gains.

Do you know the truth? PEARLINE washes clothes, coarse or fine—dishes—paint—everything—in half the time, with half the labor, and better than anything else known. As it saves the worst of the rubbing, so it saves the worst of the wear; your clothes and paint last longer and look better, if washed with PEARLINE. Harmless to fabric or hands, and economical. There is nothing else like PEARLINE.

Beware of imitations being peddled or sold by means of prizes—they are dangerous—such means are not necessary to sell a good article.

Pearline is manufactured only by

JAMES PYLE, New York.

CATARRHAL DEAFNESS

A NEW TREATMENT.
Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is that a simple remedy has been discovered which permanently cures the most aggravated cases of these distressing diseases by a few simple applications made (two weeks apart) by the patient at home. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent free by A. H. DIXON & SON, 337 and 339 West King Street, Toronto, Canada.

FARM NOTES.

DISEASE IN FARM ANIMALS.

We should endeavor to prevent the appearance of disease, rather than to cure it after it has come. Sanitation, not medication, is what will reduce disease among farm animals to the minimum. Disease is by far the more common among swine than among other farm animals in this country. Annually above ten per cent of our swine die of disease. Yet there are men who have raised swine extensively for fifteen to twenty years with as little disease among them as among the best-kept horses or cattle. These men have reared pure-bred swine, and some of them are in a region where corn is largely fed. It cannot, therefore, be said that so much disease among swine is due to in-breeding, or wholly to the large feeding of corn. There is no reason why swine should be more subject to disease than other farm animals. The fact that they are, is because they are treated differently. Their quarters are allowed to become more filthy; they are given drink that other animals would not be expected to use; their feed is thrown in the mud and their own manure; and their shelters are of the poorest description and devoid of all means of ventilation. The men who have raised swine with little disease, have given their swine pure drink, a variety of clean, wholesome food, comfortable, well-ventilated shelters, and clean, dry quarters.

It must not, however, be inferred that there is among other farm animals no more disease than there should be. If more care were taken to provide sheep, cattle and horses with only healthful food, drink, shelter and surroundings, it is safe to say that there would be much less disease among them. The investigations of European veterinarians, and of Drs. Law, Grant and others in this country, have shown that bovine tuberculosis is most prevalent among cows kept in damp, foul, unventilated stables, or upon wet land where the air and food are contaminated. In other words, sanitation and hygiene are opposed to bovine tuberculosis. Nor is this disease an exception. Sanitary measures are the best preventives of every disease afflicting our farm animals.

The preponderance of evidence is that swine-plague, bovine tuberculosis, foot-rot, glanders, etc., are produced by a microbe, although the germ theory of disease is disputed by some. However, it has been established without doubt that these conditions which are unfavorable to higher animal life are most favorable to the microbes which are supposed to produce these diseases. Thus, these microbes flourish in water contaminated with decaying organic matter, or in damp, decomposing litter; and while they are not introduced into the system through pure drink or food, they are introduced through foul, dirty drink and food oftener than by any other medium.

The measures recommended for the prevention of disease would also be desirable were no disease to be feared. It is firmly established that animals in low bodily condition are more subject to disease than vigorous, thrifty animals. That which makes the farm animal thrifty and vigorous, and therefore less liable to disease, also make it profitable. The more wholesome the food, drink and surroundings of the animal, the stronger its appetite, and the more thorough its digestion. It eats well, the excess above the food of support is at the maximum, and as this measures the gain, the profit is large. As digestion is vigorous, the amount of food which escapes assimilation is reduced to the minimum. Where "poor condition" is not allowed to exist, disease is scarcely known, and at the same time the animal makes the largest return for the food consumed. While we have need for a hundred veterinarians to each one we now have, their work, as that of the physician of the human body, will be largely in teaching sanitation.—American Agriculturist.

What You Need Spring and Fall

WHEN you feel "all run down" is Ayer's Sarsaparilla. For restoring strength after sickness, or toning up the system at any time, this is the medicine of all others. Don't waste time and money on worthless compounds, whatever their pretensions; but remember that Ayer's has been the standard Sarsaparilla for nearly half a century and has no equal.

"Sometime ago I found my system entirely run down. I had a feeling of constant fatigue and languor and very little ambition for any kind of effort. A friend advised me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which I did with the best results. It has done me more good than all other medicines I have ever used."—Frank Mellows, Chelsea, Mass.

"I was all run down before I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and now I am gaining in strength every day."—Mrs. Alice West, Jefferson, W. Va.

"I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla for several years. When I feel weary and worn out, it always helps me."—A. Grommet, Kingsville, Johnson Co., Mo.

"I was long troubled with nervous debility and severe headaches. By the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla I have been restored to health."—Anthony Louis, 55 Tremont st., Charlestown, Mass.

"As a safe and reliable spring and family medicine, I think

Are always trying seasons to most constitutions, and unless the blood is purified and enriched, one becomes exposed to a variety of maladies. To make good blood, nothing is so effectual as Ayer's Sarsaparilla, the most celebrated tonic alterative in existence. Try it.

"I have found great relief from general debility in the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It tones and invigorates the system, regulates the action of the digestive and assimilative organs, and vitalizes the blood."—H. D. Johnson, Jr., 383 Atlantic ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla has a well-deserved reputation in this locality for restoring to healthy, vigorous action the vital organs when they have become weakened or exhausted. I have used it in my family for this purpose, especially after the system has become depleted from malarial attacks. I have advised its use among my neighbors in similar cases, and it has always proved invaluable."—C. C. Hamilton, Emberson, Tex.

"As a blood-purifier and general builder-up of the system, I have never found anything to equal Ayer's Sarsaparilla invaluable."—Wm. R. Ferree, 1 Chatham st., Boston, Mass.

Made by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.

It gives perfect satisfaction."—Eugene I. Hill, M. D., 381 Sixth ave., N. Y.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

CHICAGO.

The Kinney Tobacco Company, of New York, has brought a $100,000 libel suit against the Tribune Company, of Chicago. The grounds of the suit are an article published in the Tribune Nov. 16, 1888, copied from the Evening News, charging that the Kinney Company's Sweet Corporal cigarettes contained morphine and other impurities. A similar suit is pending against the Chicago Daily News Company, and a quantity of expert testimony has been taken on the subject of the quality of the cigarettes in question.

The sale of the Munger-Wheeler system of grain elevators for several millions of dollars is practically closed. A large deposit, said to exceed $100,000, has been made to close the contract. Reports come from London of many subscribers to the securities issued by the English company that will make the purchase.

Mayor Cregier, it is reported, will soon move on the Clan-na-Gael members of the police force. He finds too little sympathy with the Democratic party among them, hence his wrath.

Governor John B. Gordon, of Georgia, is to lecture at Central Music Hall Nov. 30 in the interest of the ex-Confederate monument fund.

The Clan-na-Gael "inner circle" has issued a circular to the members of the order calling upon them to contribute funds to the expenses of the defense in the Cronin case.

COUNTRY.

John Dawson, of Terre Haute, Ind., celebrated the 100th anniversary of his birth Friday. He has thirty grandchildren, sixty-four great-grandchildren, and seven great-great-grandchildren, nearly all of whom were present at the celebration.

Jay Gould has filed a mortgage for $45,000,000 at Little Rock, Ark., to secure the indebtedness of the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway.

An explosion of flash-powder occurred at a chemical manufacturing establishment in Philadelphia, Monday, by which three men were instantly killed, one fatally injured, and another seriously injured.

Various parties who spent ten days in the snow blockade between Emery Gap and Folsom, N. M., report the suffering to man and animals fully as great as shown in former reports. Patrick Casey, engineer, was eleven days making the run from Trinidad to Loxline, and return. Two days and nights he was without food. One meal he made on a jack rabbit caught in the snow. Seventy-five men shoveling snow at Mount Dora, were cut off from food two days and nights. They got some sheep out of snow drifts and roasted and ate them.

FOREIGN.

China is arming her troops on the Russian frontier with repeating rifles, and the soldiers are being drilled by German officers.

The first sod of the Nicaragua Canal was formally and officially turned Oct. 22, amid the booming of cannon and great enthusiasm. Work was really begun June 3, but owing to a misunderstanding between Nicaragua and Costa Rica, which has since been settled, the formal opening had been postponed.

There is exciting news from Brazil. Dispatches received at Washington, both by the State Department and the Brazilian legation, announce that revolution has broken out in Rio, headed by the Republicans, for the purpose of overthrowing the monarchy. The fact that the Republican movement in Brazil was so formidable, and that the lower House of Parliament was overwhelmingly against the continuance of the monarchy, has long been widely known.

The Mexican Government is said to be preparing to purchase phonographs for all of its postoffices. As a great proportion of the inhabitants of that country cannot write it is believed that the conveyance of their voices through the mails will soon grow into an immense business, yielding a large revenue.

The dockmen of London demand pay for the time allotted for meals. The directors refuse the demand, pleading that this claim is specially debarred under the recent agreement. The directors, in a letter to the papers, complain of the men's tyranny in refusing to work with non-unionists. The Tilbury dockmen have struck because the foreman and clerks refused to join the union.

The consumption of horse meat in lieu of beef is daily increasing in Berlin, and it has become almost impossible for the butchers to procure sufficient genuine beef to supply the demands of those who are able to pay the almost fabulous price which that commodity demands.

Latest papers from Guatemala, bearing date of Oct. 27, tell of the immediate downfall of the riotous outbreak which was thought at the time might result in revolution. The three leaders were shot, the others surrendered, and all is quiet.

The Fan Fulla says that Vatican circles have been led to expect the establishment of an American legation to the holy see after the return of Mgr. Satolli from Baltimore.

Bishop O'Dwyer, of Ireland, has issued a pastoral letter forbidding the clergy of the diocese to grant absolution to any person guilty of boycotting or pursuing the plan of campaign. The bishop retains to himself alone the right to absolve such persons.

Dispatches from Rio de Janeiro to London stated that a republic has been proclaimed in Brazil, with Senor Da Fonseca as President. The imperial ministers have been placed under arrest, and are kept in close confinement. The provisional government has guaranteed protection to the imperial family. The Emperor is at his summer palace at Petropolis, twenty-five miles north of Rio de Janeiro. All business in the city is suspended, but there is no danger to life or property.

You can make a large sum of money at work for us in your own locality. During the past few years, those who have thus worked have received over Five Millions of dollars for their services—more than a barrel of money. We want a few more workers at once. The work is easy, pleasant, adapted to both young and old of either sex. You can work all the time or in spare time only. Any one can do the work after studying our directions for a day or two. This is the chance of a lifetime for those who apply at once. Any one anywhere can earn $100 per month. Great workers, under the most favorable conditions, earn $20 a day and upwards. No class of people in the world are making so much money, without capital, as those at work for us. Whatever you have done, or whatever you may do, you should look into this royal chance. You will find that you can easily make all that we claim, and more. If you write to us before we secure all the workers we need, we will lay all before you FREE. Better write before you rest, and then if you conclude not to go to work, or if we cannot employ you, no harm is done. Every one of our workers makes big money. True & Co., Box 339, Augusta, Maine.

is the finest lamp in the world. It gives a pure, soft, brilliant white light of 85 candle power. Burns a brighter than gas light; softer than electric light—more cheerful than either. A marvelous light from ordinary kerosene oil! Seeing is Believing.

A "wonderful lamp" it is indeed. Never needs trimming, never smokes nor breaks chimneys, never smells of the oil, no flickering, no climbing of the flame, no annoyance of any kind, and cannot explode. And besides, it is a clear, white light 10 to 20 times size & brilliancy of any ordinary kerosene lamp. Finished in either Brass, Nickel, Gold or Antique Bronze. Also

This number of the CYNOSURE is sent to several thousands whom we hope may prove friendly to its principles, but are not subscribers. Their special attention is called to the address to New Englanders on the editorial page; to the notice of the meeting in Tremont Temple, Boston, Dec. 11 and 12; and to the Letters from the N. C. A. General Secretary on the 5th and 9th pages.

The Cronin trial draws to a close. The evidence for the defense was all in Monday morning. It was promised that a much longer time would be occupied, but in such a case it is not easy to find many witnesses to prove an alibi for each of the accused. This was about all that was attempted, and as good a case as possible made out. But it is regarded as a very weak one, and will hardly break the strong network of proof woven by the testimony of the prosecution. The jury will take the case about the last of next week, and will render a verdict as memorable as that of the anarchists if it shall be "Guilty."

Long letters from Stanley, written in August and September, are now appearing. Before the end of the year we may see his party emerge from the swamps, deserts and jungles which have for three years swallowed them, from struggles with wild beasts and wilder men, to tell the story of one of the most remarkable expeditions ever undertaken. The confidence of Emin Pasha in his treacherous followers, and the effort to persuade them to leave the country, greatly delayed the return. The Madhists have been left in control of the Nile from the Nyanza lakes to Khartoum, and the great African interior is again as fast locked as before Gordon and Baker penetrated to the lake region and took possession in the name of Egypt.

The order of "Modern Woodmen," the invention of an Iowa Freemason without any regular profession or steady business, has had a "run of luck" in some of our Western States. The order professes to have no religion; but an elaborate funeral ceremony has been provided, which is much approved by Freemasons, and for which its members are ready to fight rather than be deprived. The originator and head of this assessment lodge is now endeavoring to clear himself from several charges of a serious nature, which of late years are quite a common experience among secret societies of this character. The papers have published columns upon this lodge squabble, which is not yet over. If they could be persuaded to devote half the space to a dispassionate examination of the principles of these orders it would be a blessing to the country.

A New York G. A. R. post gave a reception to Alger, their plutocratic "commander-in-chief," last Thursday. They were told by this many-times millionaire that they would not have to live in poor houses; that the order must have a record made and kept, at the government expense, of all the G. A. R. men, so they could get their pensions easily when the great treasury grab advocated by this society comes off. This is pleasant reading possibly for the old soldiers who have not been sworn into this un-American and un-patriotic secret society. (We use these terms with respect to the order only.) But it does not so much amaze us, when we see on every side how secret lodge oaths transform the sentiments of many otherwise reasonable and honorable men until their best friends do not recognize them.

One clause in the statement last week of the new position of the Roman Catholic church respecting secret societies in America, may have escaped notice. It is this: "The Catholic church in America will from this day, through the ministrations of the confessional—for that is where such action is communicated to the laity—deal with extraordinary and hitherto unknown liberality with members of secret organizations." We emphasize the words to be particularly studied, and note that there will be no public proclamation of this ominous and fateful decree. But at the confessional the member of the lodge will find his difficulties removed, and the public is supposed to have no business with the matter one way or the other. It, therefore, does not in the least amaze us to read that Archbishop Fabre has said, and Satolli, the Pope's legate, confirms the statement, that Rome will not raise the ban against Freemasons and other secret societies. That is the declaration we might expect for the public. At the confessional there may be another.

Governor Fifer is besought by a formidable lobby to release the anarchist Neebe, who was sentenced to a fifteen years' imprisonment. He can hardly afford, for political reasons, to do so, but the day might soon come when the political reasons would be on the other side of the question. Neebe was one of the best appearing of the seven anarchists who were tried in 1886, and five of whom are buried in a cemetery on the Desplaines river, west of this city. The anniversary of their hanging was lately celebrated by the anarchist bands in several cities. In Chicago the proceedings were of little moment, except as they gave an opportunity to the widow of Parsons to show her hatred of religion as she spoke of her dead husband and child. "Do you suppose they kissed each other in the beautifully described hereafter?" she said. "Bah! Don't be deceived. So-called Christians will tell you such things. What we want is homes in this world, and let God, Christ and all religious functionaries take care of themselves. This is the teaching of anarchy, and as such it will live."

Some will wonder why the late Mr. John Crerar, whose will, bestowing some $3,500,000, has just been published, should reserve $1,500,000 for the founding of a new public library, and not rather have increased the facilities of those now existing. Chicago has already a fine public library in the City Hall, and a great building is proposed for its accommodation. The Newberry library is already founded on a most liberal basis, and with a vast income on the North Side. Why not add to these, and not divide by beginning a new enterprise of the same sort. We may not understand all the reasons actuating Mr. Crerar, but one of them is certainly clear from the following passage in his will: "I desire that books and periodicals be selected with a view to create and sustain a healthy moral and Christian sentiment in the community, and that all nastiness and immorality be excluded. I do not mean by this that there shall not be anything but hymn-books and sermons, but that dirty French novels, and all skeptical trash and works of questionable moral tone shall never be found in this library. I want its atmosphere that of Christian refinement, and its aim and object that of building up character." He could not surely have secured this end by adding to the Public Library fund: for managed as that is by politicians, it will always abound with such trash as is above described, and in this respect is a source of immorality and danger to the youth of this great city.

ONWARD AND SUNWARD.

BY VICTORIA ALEXANDRA BUCK.

The march of the truth is onward,
Old evils pass away,
And the course of the world is sunward,
Into a brighter day.
With the hosts of heaven we're marching on Through the battle's driving storm,
While God's right hand is hurling down
The lightnings of Reform!

We hear His voice, and our glad lips sing,
"He doeth all things well."
His march is o'er the mountain wave,
His home is in the storm,
And down from fiery heights He hurls
The thunders of Reform!

Behind the cloudy pillar
The God of Israel stands,
And the destinies of nations
He holds within His hands;
Stars burn and die, suns rise and set,
Yet, 'mid the roaring storm,
His hand flings back on its flaming track
The lightnings of Reform!

Send down thy winged angel, God!
And tell us now, as when
We climb the hills our fathers trod,
To be braver women and men!
As thou wast in that boat on Galilee
And stilled the raging storm,
So lift thy hand till the world grows bright
With the lightnings of Reform!

SECRET TEMPERANCE ORDERS AND PROHIBITION.

BY REV. S. A. GILLEY.

[Address before the Iowa State Convention.]

Temperance history is properly written in three chapters, entitled Moderation, Total Abstinence, and Prohibition. Our forefathers came nearer to filling the first chapter with prohibition records than many know. In 1774 the Continental Congress passed the following resolution:

"Resolved, That it be recommended to the several legislatures of the United States to immediately pass laws, the most effectual, for putting an immediate stop to the pernicious practice of distilling grain; by which the most extensive evils are likely to be derived, if not quickly prevented."

In 1787, in the convention called by Congress to frame the Federal Constitution, Dr. Benjamin Rush (author of the above resolution), ably seconded by Benjamin Franklin, urged that the manufacture of ardent spirits be forever prohibited in the States by the Constitution. He argued, that as republics must rely upon the morals of the people for their stability, and were not able to support a wise and righteous reign over a vicious people by strength of their military arm, as the people were at once subjects and sovereigns; therefore it was wisdom to prohibit whatever tended to debauch and abase the people. In conclusion he called upon all, especially the ministry, saying: "Aid me with all the weight and influence of your sacred office to save our fellow men from being destroyed by the great destroyer of their lives and souls." His arguments were not refuted; but Thomas Jefferson urged that as governments could not be sustained without financial support, this industry be made, by restrictive laws, a permanent source of revenue.

During all those early years, while Colonial history was making and following the adoption of the Federal Constitution, the highest conception of temperance principles was moderation. In 1789 two hundred of the most respectable farmers in Litchfield county, Connecticut, formed the first temperance association in the United States, with the following pledge:

"We do hereby associate, and mutually agree, that hereafter we will carry on our business without the use of distilled spirits, as an article of refreshment, either for ourselves, or for those whom we employ."

The Union Temperance Society, formed in Moreau, N. Y., in 1808, only pledged against drinking distilled liquors and drunkenness.

In 1812 Rev. James Axley moved the following resolution in the General Conference of the M. E. church:

"Resolved, That no stationed or local preacher shall retail spirituous or malt liquors without forfeiting his ministerial character among us."

The resolution was defeated. In 1826 the American Society for the Promotion of Temperance was organized at Boston, Mass., "To restrain and prevent the intemperate use of intoxicating liquors." Thus, up to that time, restrictive influences and measures alone were used.

In 1829, first in Scotland, in Ireland in 1830, in England in 1832, and in America in 1833, began that period in temperance work which forms the second chapter—Total Abstinence. For about a decade thereafter, the work was pushed on the line of moral suasion as applied to the drink habit. The efforts of the workers pivoted about the recovery of the fallen. They sought to cure rather than to prevent.

Beginning practically in 1845, when the legislature of New York decided to submit to vote of the people the question of license or no license, the march of temperance thought reached to the application of moral suasion brought to bear upon the law-makers, that the drink habit might be more effectually overcome by stopping the drink traffic. From that time candid thinkers have recognized that the only true idea of temperance, as applied to the nation, is: total abstinence for the citizen, legal prohibition for the States. National Prohibition is now the real battle-cry.

From 1845 to 1855, thirteen States passed prohibitory laws, in response to an awakened public sentiment. Before the war of the Rebellion began, in nine of those States the laws were repealed, under Republican administration.

I now come to trace more directly the relation of the secret temperance societies to this work. In 1842 the Sons of Temperance came into organic being, the Temples of Honor and Temperance in 1845, and the Good Templars in 1851. The same advance of thought, and awakening of the public mind, that forced the temperance issue on the legislatures of the various States, formed a favorable opening for the organization of these orders. The secret lodge system had been seriously interfered with by the excitement focused about the abduction of William Morgan in 1826; and lodges were abandoned, and charters surrendered. It would seem that the friends of that system sought to prepare the way for the re-establishment of Masonry, by forming these new orders with temperance interests to furnish at once excuse and occasion.

During the first years of their organization they made way slowly, and seemed not to interrupt the true work of temperance; but after they were fairly started, and during the years of their greatest activity, and in States where they increased most rapidly, the prohibitory laws were repealed. We do not charge it upon the Good Templars and Sons of Temperance that they sought this result, but we do insist that it was nevertheless superinduced by the diversion of public sentiment through the efforts made to build up their system. The central idea of all these societies is fraternity. To build up a united brotherhood is the purpose of their labors.

The entire outlay, in money, time and work, centers about the "good of the order." To attract those without, to hold those within, is the true interest of all their paraphernalia, their initiatory rites, their lodge furniture and regalia, their private and public services. All are turned by the fullest purpose toward the enlargement of the lodge in membership, wealth and influence. If, as some affirm, "Every lodge-room is a seminary of education for those who pay their fees, and become possessed of the charmed word which opens the door to them" (says Rev. W. Burgess, Newaygo, Mich.); it remains an evident fact that the graduates are not thrust out into useful endeavors "For God, and home, and native land."

At the present time we have the Sons of Temperance, with thirty-seven Grand and about 1,500 subordinate divisions; I. O. G. T., with eighty-eight Grand and 11,571 subordinate lodges (483,101 members); Royal Templars, with nineteen Grand Temples and subordinates in nearly every State; yet with all this lodge showing, the States that have recently defeated prohibition amendments are the active centers for these orders.

Since the political organization of the Prohibition party, I have had occasion repeatedly to notice that the members of secret temperance societies were mainly conspicuous by their absence from the ranks of the real workers. I do not forget that John B. Finch was at once the head of the Good Templars and chairman of the Prohibition National Committee; but I remember that when God took him to himself, many of us thought it a providential interference in the interest of our work. Such exceptional cases are workers in spite of, rather than as a result from, lodge affiliation.

The testimony of Neal Dow, the "Father of political prohibition," Chairman Dickie, General Fisk, ex-Governor St. John, and others of national repute, are all in line with the thought that secretism does not aid, but certainly delays prohibition work. Dr. Roberts of Owatome, Minn., author of the ritual of the Patrons of Husbandry, a nominal member of several secret societies, while making a run for Congress on the Prohibition ticket, confessed to me at length that he found his alliance with lodge-men, who were engaged in the liquor traffic, a great difficulty in his prohibition work. Usually the leaders in the temperance orders are members of the major societies; while the leading spirits in those major societies are most frequently connected with the saloon system. Thus members of secret temperance orders are in unholy fraternal relations with those who support the drink traffic in our land. In this unequal yoking, they become dead factors in the temperance work. In this all workers agree.

THE COLLEGE CONTEST AT ELGIN.

ADDRESS OF C. SEYMOUR BULLOCK, NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY.

Fellow Citizens, Ladies and Gentlemen: Your upturned faces, glowing with sympathy and silently inquiring: "What is to be done?" prove that humanity, like a bird upon her nest, is rustling its feathers and evincing an uneasiness which precedes a flight. Golden opportunities come to every individual, every State, every nation, when a great choice is presented, a great blessing offered, and a great future unfolded.

After the vassalage of Egypt, the weary pilgrimage in the desert, wars and captivity and servitude, God offered Israel a Saviour. Everything had gravitated toward that hour. Everything had been tending toward that center. At length, when the nation was fully ripe, Christ was held out to be accepted or rejected. Had he been accepted, whatever might have become of him as the Redeemer, Jerusalem would have become the imperial city of the world. But she rejected the Messiah, and decay and destruction ensued. In the unfolding plans of God, Israel will once more have an opportunity to accept the Christ, but the past can never be changed.

France had her opportunity when the wild wave of revolution dashed in irresistible strength against the black prison walls of the Bastille, and fell back a bloody foam-fleck of life, only to rise again and sweep before it her false altars and throne. But she did not know her hour then. She pushed back the priceless boon of liberty and hugged to her bosom an outraged constitution, and in her hand held her code of violated laws. Once again her opportunity came; she seized it and was free.

Italy had her golden moment, when the rosy fingers of dawn parted the curtains of night, and a new day seemed ready to appear; but she knew it not, and the curtains dropped and were not parted again until the unquenchable internal fires of public opinion had rocked the kingdom, and the Pope fell from his chair of temporal authority.

This country had her hour in the early part of the present century, when the light of truth was reflected from the lamp of God into the dark recesses of secret institutions, and forty-five thousand men left their lodges, like frightened bats, scared by the darkness of their own abode, never to return; but she neglected it, or was unprepared for it, and now weeps over the form of wounded justice and waits for another opportunity like the one she cast away. Will it ever come? As I look upon you to-night, I answer Yes! Hear me, ye whose temples are adorned with the silver of eighty years! It will come! Hear me, fathers, passing from the old age of youth into the youth of old age! Hear me, brothers, scarce past the buoyancy of boyhood! It will come! It must come!

The nineteenth century is crowning its gray locks with the wreath of progress. The reign of inactivity is over. The dungeon doors of imprisoned science have been broken down, and she has come forth and sits enthroned upon the tops of the mountains. Look abroad and see what men are doing. They have harnessed fiery steeds that breathe steam from their nostrils. They have wrested from the gods their thunderbolts and made them messengers of thought and love! They have melted the sand into a mighty lens to reveal the glories of the heavens. They have almost annihilated space! Will they now rest? No. Ideas are thundering in the battle field and great principles are allying themselves for conflict, and shall we rest till some irresistible influence bears us on? As well might the ship-master wait for the wind that will loose his cable, weigh his anchor, and hoist his sails. Shall we gain strength by inaction? Will we be powerful when we are powerless and our enemies have bound us hand and foot? When will we be better able to grapple the monster of secretism than now? Will it be when the tyler or gavel of a Master Mason calls the initiate members of our representation halls "from labor to refreshments?"

No, sirs, we must strike now, when the agitation of the Cronin murder has made the iron hot; and we must keep the iron hot by striking until we have marshalled the conscience of this nation to reconstruct its laws. Stupendously grand is the age in which we are living, and we must make precedents instead of following them. We must go out beyond the horizon that bounds mortal vision and sow the "hereafter" in the now. We are met to consider the secret "orders" so rapidly multiplying in our land. It is claimed that in Chicago alone there are over one thousand lodges and only about three hundred churches. Freemasons now number half a million members, and Odd-fellows as many more. Knights of Pythias, a comparatively new order, already claim three hundred thousand initiates, while insurance and so-called benevolent orders will swell the ranks by hundreds of thousands more.

What is the history of secret societies? Ask France! Ask Germany! Ask Russia or Prussia, or Spain! What have they done in Mexico? What have they done in England? What have they done in the United States? Who is he, wrapped in robes, red with the blood of innocent millions, grasping for crowns and sceptres; seizing honors and gold, and claiming to hold the keys of heaven and hell in his hands? The "PONTIFEX MAXIMUS" of a secret society!

Who, when liberty was bowed down in grief and shame over brothers drawing sword on brothers to defend her honor, opened afresh the wounds that had scarce begun to heal? The emissary of a secret society. Who bound justice with green withes while the guilty fled? Who chained the wheels of the chariot of truth, so that men grew faint for fear the murderers of a brave man would escape? Who planned the murder of Abraham Lincoln and protected his murderers? Members of secret societies!

Upon them I charge the death of William Miller, who was lured into a lodge-room and strangled, and then, with throat cut and heart exposed, his dead body was cast into the sea! Upon them I charge the death of William Morgan, the history of whose death you so very well know. Upon them, I repeat it, sirs, I charge the death of Abraham Lincoln—a man bold enough to forgive a wrong and good enough to forget it!

Let the story of his death never be told without a tear. Bending in love to bind the wounds of the smitten South, he was shot down. Knaves! parricides!! demons!!! How dare you tread the earth upon which has fallen the blood of slaughtered innocence shed by your hands? Mark it well, your sins will find you out, and the eternal God avenge your awful deeds. Though thou shouldst take the wings of the morning and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea: though thou shouldst say, the darkness shall hide me; or make thy bed in hell; thou shalt yet be arraigned, and shalt lift up thy hands, red with the blood of those whose death thou hast caused, at the awful bar of God!

Again, I charge secret societies with the death of Dr. Cronin, and when the judgment fires of Eternity throw their red glare on the records of time, and the secrets of men shall be made manifest to the assembled universe, then shall the heavens reveal their iniquities and the earth rise up against them; for it will be shown that many sudden deaths were but the fulfilled decrees of oath-bound men.

Secret societies are always dangerous to civil governments, and none is in greater danger than a republican form of government; especially is this so in a country like ours, where a man may be among the bogs and fens of Ireland, or on the vine-clad banks of the Rhine, one month, and in the next few months after leaving them, sit as a State representative here. Here no ecclesiastical power, nor any organization, can be safely permitted to usurp, in the smallest degree, the functions of government; and, yet, there is hardly a secret society in existence whose members are not pledged to uphold and vote for members of that society in preference to any other candidate for office of equal qualification. Like a curse have secret societies blighted every land where they became supreme. Americans, if ye be Americans! men, if ye be men! let not the recording angel dip his pen in our tears and blood and write: "America is fallen! The last ray of her glory is gone!"

When you say that death claims those who would, single-handed, hinder the advance of so mighty an enemy and would thus coerce me into silence, I despise your threat. What though "my throat be cut from ear to ear, and my tongue be torn out by the roots, and my body buried in the rough sands of the sea, where the tide ebbs and flows every twenty-four hours?" The earth on which falls my innocent blood will cry out, like the blood of Abel, to God for vengeance, and the sea whisper, as it kisses the lips of my grave, "Here lies an innocent man." Better be defeated and die for the right than forever fight or stifle God-given convictions and triumph in wrong.

When I speak of secret societies, it is not of any one society in particular, but against the whole system; nor would I impugn the character of all who are connected with them, though I might censure their judgment. Whether they go through the stripping, blinding and befooling of an Entered Apprentice, or the mock murder of a Master Mason, or drink wine from a human skull with profane oaths; or whether they journey to Jericho, or see whited skeletons as Odd-fellows, or Knights of Pythias; or whether they face the musket barrel in the post-room of the Grand Army of the Republic, or stand the infernal foolishness of college fraternities, or subscribe to oaths in Good Templar lodges, or trades unions, —it really makes no essential difference; the beast is the same and they receive his mark.

He who knew what was in man and what was best for him—man's perfect pattern—says: "In secret have I said nothing." Certainly no truths of the lodge are paramount to the truths Christ taught, yet his disciples were to openly teach them and show the mysteries of the kingdom.

I am not pleading that the doors of the lodge may be open to all. Never, while reason sits on her throne, will I make such a plea! I thank God that my mother can never be made a Mason, nor my sisters ever be initiated; and I bless him daily that I have no desire to be. There may be found two hundred fathoms beneath the Norwegian sea mollusca. Iberian stags may get fat on the stunted growth of Altain peaks; hedy-sarium may grow amid the desolation of Sahara, and tufts of osier on the hot lips of volcanic Surrhatton, but a pure heart and an honest life thrive in a dissipating club-house or a Christless lodge? Never!

In the name of God—who has ordained three institutions, the family, the church, and the state, to none of which secret organizations are subsidiary—I impeach them. I impeach them because by their traditions they make the Word of God of none effect and usurp the power and glory that belong to him. They think him "altogether such an one as themselves," and ascribe false names to him for worship. Tell me, where is God called in sacred Writ the "Great Commander," or the "Triple Triangle?" Is God three-cornered or nine-cornered? Shall we henceforth pray, O Lord, thou who art like unto a "Triple Triangle," hear us?

I impeach them because they have taken the sacred Word of God and robbed it of its Christ. They have called carnal things by holy names. Scarce anything, from the Tabernacle to the Lord's Supper, has escaped their prostitution. They have chosen priests and high priests and prelates to perform at their altars, and at baptismal and burial services.

I impeach them in the name of woman. How God must have smiled when he conceived the thought of mother!—if they were all to be like my mother, so rich, so divine, so full of power and beauty! If it were a second thought, then God's second thoughts are his best ones. Is it right that, having been fashioned in the hands of the Almighty, woman should be debarred from the benefits of the lodge,—if there be any benefits in it? Is it right that, having forsaken the hearthstone of loving parents, and entrusted her future to one whom she now calls husband, she should be robbed of her husband's company? Is it right to make her sit by the side of their sick child while he meets his cronies at the lodge? Is it right that he should swear secrecy from her who has no secrets from him?

I impeach them in the name of the church whose resources they cripple, whose power they thwart. The chambers of revelry at the national capital are yet resounding with the laughter of Sir Knights who could not afford to go half way to Washington for a church conference or Sabbath-school convention; but who squandered both time and money for a secret, foolish conclave. There they boasted of their charity. Is it charity to build a hospital for one's own family? Is it charity to make a poor man pay a rich man's bills? Such a charity needs another Christ to die for it.

I impeach them in the name of the independent college boys, whose every hope for gaining honors on class day perishes with the first thought because the judges belong to the Signia Phi, or some of the many other college fraternities.

In the name of God and the church, and woman and manhood, I impeach them, and stamp on their books of deception, bound together with thongs of lies: "It is a shame to speak of those things done in secret."

A FIRE AND ITS LESSONS.

BY REV. G. M. ELLIOTT.

Sabbath morning, October 27th, Selma, Ala., experienced the largest fire it has known for over twenty years. A large part of an entire block was destroyed. There was no insurance on a large portion of the property, as it belonged to a man who does not believe in insurance. In several particulars the conflagration appears remarkably strange.

1. The difficulty in arousing the people. It seems as if a deep sleep from the Lord had fallen upon the inhabitants. The fire broke out about two o'clock in the morning. One man who was among the first on the ground tells me that the fire bell rang at least half an hour before any help arrived. There were many persons who live almost in the neighborhood of the fire, yet knew nothing of it until daylight.

2. The difficulty in getting water. Though there were fire plugs right at hand, when opened, the flow of water was so slow and feeble that little was accomplished towards extinguishing the flames. Then the steam in the engine failed to be equal to the occasion. When the full pressure of the waterworks was put on, the water could not be forced to the top of a three-story building. Hence in the face of such feeble resistance, the flames swept violently forward.

3. The course of the flames is another strange feature of the fire. Of the portion burned the fire is supposed to have originated near the center of it. The wind was blowing from the north. The flames swept backward in the direction from which the wind blew and swept away a bar-room, and extended up to the third story of an adjoining building, leaped into the windows of the Masonic lodge and swept the room clean, but left intact all the lower part of the building. This lodge room is said to have been the finest and most costly furnished room of any kind in the city. The lower part of this building has been used for a drug store by Dr. Graddock for some twenty years. He is a strong temperance man, and is one of the two men of the city that votes regularly the Prohibition ticket. He is also a friend of the colored people, and for a number of years his soda fountain was the only one in Selma at which a colored person could drink. The bar-room was next door to him. It was totally destroyed. Not a dollar's worth was saved. This is the second time that the flames have swept away the adjoining buildings and left Dr. Graddock's building standing alone. These things appear strange to us.

Now what are the lessons to be learned from this fire?

1. The first is, that earthly possessions are very uncertain. A man who is rich only in this world's goods is very poor. At night he lies down wealthy; in the morning he awakes a poor man—poor in every sense. During the night his all has gone up in the flames. His riches have taken wings and flown away like an eagle toward the heavens.

2. That God in his judgments does make a distinction between the righteous and the wicked. It is true that the righteous often suffer with the wicked, but they seldom, if ever, suffer as the wicked. When Jerusalem was destroyed, we are informed that there was not a Christian in it. They were told to escape. In doing so, doubtless they had to make much sacrifice and sustained much loss, but they did not meet the awful fate of the ungodly Jews that remained. They suffered, but not as the wicked. I have always looked upon Dr. Graddock as being one of the few white men of the South that had the bearing of a true Christian. Out of his own purse he has built a house of worship for the poor who were deprived of Gospel privileges. Doubtless there is danger of pressing this point too far, yet when we see such marvelous preservation in the midst of danger, we cannot but think of the words of the Psalmist: "There shall no evil befall thee, neither shall any plague come nigh thy dwelling."

3. Judgments do not come causeless. In the day of adversity we should consider. This fire has thrown two hundred and two persons out of employment. About sixty of these are colored. The fire was in the business center of the city. The loss is great for a city as small as Selma. Why this calamity? Selma is a wicked city. God has spared it a long time. Within the past six months it seems as if it has let loose in wickedness. This visitation should cause all to think, and ask in the language of the prophet: "Shall there evil befall the city and the Lord hath not done it?"

Selma, Ala.

The saloon, the secret lodge and horrible crime are inseparably joined in the Cronin case. One of the witnesses, a member of the Clan-na-Gael camp with Cronin and O'Sullivan, the ice man, was present when the contract was made between the doctor and the conspirator for professional services. It was made in the lodge. "The doctor told some stories, and they all went out to take a drink," is the expressive language of the testimony.

The Chicago Legal News, a paper of strong Masonic affiliations and sympathies, says of Alexander Sullivan and the Cronin case: "Mr. Sullivan has a host of warm friends; he also has some enemies who would be glad to see him convicted of any crime at any price." Is Sullivan a Freemason as well as a Clan-na-Gael triangler?

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

The Massachusetts Sunday School Convention—A field for anti-secret work—A Secret Society Congress—Smoking and the lodge—A home for ex-priests.—Some sectarian teaching—A new way of voting—The report of the Rhode Island W. C. T. U. on the workings of the new license law.

The Massachusetts Sunday School Convention at Tremont Temple last week was a full and interesting meeting, and if one looks back to the days when Sunday-school work first began eighty years ago, by some devoted Christian woman gathering together a few boys and girls in the neighborhood, and teaching them some verses of Scripture without printed questions or "helps" of even the most meagre kind, it formed a fine illustration of how "Big oaks from little acorns grow."

The Sunday-school presents a field of work especially adapted for those whose time is too much occupied on week-days to engage in other branches of Christian labor, and thus it is essentially a layman's institution, which has always, from the time of its first inception, called out the best lay talent, both in teaching and in the preparation of Sabbath-school literature. That millions of children and youth gather weekly in our land for religious instruction would be an altogether hopeful and cheering sign were there no reverse side to the shield, showing that much too large a percentage of these same children and youth drift into the churchless class on reaching adult years. There are no statistics to show how many frequenters of the saloon were once Sunday-school scholars, though it is to be hoped the ratio is small; but how many are to-day supporting the saloon by their votes, and being dragged in countless numbers into the secret society maelstrom, whose names fifteen or twenty years ago were on the Sunday-school roll, thus giving some teacher a priceless opportunity, if he or she had known how to improve it, to instruct them on the nature of these evils, and their responsibility as future citizens if America is to be the model Christian Republic for the world!

The Sunday-school lesson properly taught is the best of all vehicles for instruction in needed reforms, nor is it possible to instill a pure Christianity which does not also include pure morals. Still less can we teach children the true meaning and scope of the Gospel plan, and leave them unwarned regarding the lodge, which by its very constitution rejects that plan and sets up another of human devising instead. There can be no better place than the Sunday-school to introduce the heaven of this much-needed reform. It is a subject which can be made peculiarly interesting to young and intelligent minds. In tracing the distinction between true and false worship, and the likeness between lodge ceremonies as practiced to-day, and the mysteries described in the eighth chapter of Ezekiel, is given an almost exhaustless field of inquiry. And let me add one important item. The younger the scholar, the more lasting will be the impression. It is much easier to impress reform truths on a child's mind than a youth's, and in about the same proportion as the youth is a more favorable subject to impress than the mature adult.

Another notable gathering, though in a somewhat different way, which has recently convened in Boston, is the Congress of Fraternal Societies. The most interesting part of their proceedings was the discussion on legislation. The law in New York was commended as giving most freedom of action to the fraternal orders. The Massachusetts law allows only those societies which actually do business within its jurisdiction. The Maine law is the same except that it does not recognize the endowment companies, but only those paying a death benefit. As it is these same "endowment companies" which are now carrying all before them, on the very natural principle that a man prefers a benefit while he is living to one after he is dead, it is interesting to note that the congress showed a decided spirit of opposition to the many mushroom societies of this class which are daily springing up. It was even declared by one speaker that they were generally formed for the purpose of putting money into the pockets of the organizers and promoters, one instance being cited where one of these endowment orders, name not given, provides that the head of the order shall receive $1 for each new member initiated as well as the comfortable salary of $3,000 a year. Naught of this will be news to anti-secretists. We have asserted as much all along, but to find our opinions thus confirmed by lodge men themselves is surely noteworthy, and looks as if the disintegrating principle was already beginning to work.

The Royal Society of Good Fellows, a name by the way as suggestive of low conviviality as it is anti-republican, recently dedicated its new hall at 131 Tremont street, "with solemn and impressive ceremonies, after which"—I am quoting the daily press report—"the members adjourned to the ante-room, where to the smoke of fine cigars furnished by the officers a pleasant time was passed until 11 p.m." It is pleasant to note that the "solemnity" of the dedicatory services did not interfere at all with the society's main object. But of one thing let our good W. C. T. U. women who are fighting "the weed" rest assured. Tobacco smoke is no more an essential part of the atmosphere of a saloon than it is of these lodge ante-rooms, where many a young man contracts the habit which will wreck him physically, blunt his moral nature, and render him impervious to all religious effort. The man "who finds the lodge good enough religion for him," will in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred tell you so with a cigar-scented breath.

There is some talk of a home for ex-priests in Boston, a wealthy lady of the city having offered to give liberally towards the project provided other subscriptions follow. Such an institution would help greatly in the fight against Rome, for it is hardly possible to conceive of a human creature more in need of such assistance than an ex-priest, homeless, an outcast from his kindred, and with no trade or profession on which he can rely for support; and no wonder that some have not sufficient faith in God to break away from their bondage when such a future confronts them.

Massachusetts, according to a late canvass, has now about 40,000 children in the parochial schools, the system being in operation in 21 cities and 16 towns. This is bad enough, but when a class of history in one of her public schools is given a list of questions like the following to answer, it is time to cry, Halt:—

"On what date is Easter Sunday this year?"

"How many days between Ash Wednesday and Easter Sunday?"

"What is the Friday before Easter called?"

This is certainly "sectarian teaching" with a vengeance.

The Australian ballot system is a decided stumbling-block in the way of that party which has always placed its chief reliance on the illiterate foreign element, but in the Rhode Island campaign they overcame the difficulty by giving such voters a slip of paper just the size of the ticket with holes cut in the proper places to mark the names of candidates. They had then nothing to do but to lay this paper over the ticket and mark in the places where the holes were cut. Those who believe that the new system is going to practically disfranchise the illiterate classes have certainly no "realizing sense" of the ingenuity of the average ward politician.

At the late annual convention of the Rhode Island W. C. T. U., two hours were devoted to reports from members of local unions in regard to the condition of things in that State under the repeal of the prohibitory law.

Providence has already granted between 300 and 400 licenses, and every one who cares to do so sells liquor freely. In Apponaug the town clerk has signed 44 licenses. In Bristol there was reported to be "a fearful increase of drunkenness." East Greenwich, ditto. The situation in Newport is described as "a disgrace to our city and to the State." One gentleman said that in three weeks he had seen more drunkenness than during a year of prohibition. Pawtucket, "a rum-cursed city." Two saloons in Riverside proper, one of which has been enlarged in the prospect of an increasing business. Wakefield, no licenses asked for or needed, rum being sold freely without. Woonsocket, ninety licenses have been granted, six for wholesale dealers. Antioch, "liquor men are exultant and more drunkenness is seen."

It is well, however, that the citizens, and especially the business men of Rhode Island who voted for the repeal of the Amendment, should eat the bitter fruit of their own doings. Even four months of license is convincing many that they made a mistake, and the best thing for the temperance cause in Rhode Island is to have the liquor business stride on unchecked in all the insolence of power for a year or two, when she will be forced in very self-defence to re-enact a prohibitory law that shall never again be erased from her statute book. ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 22, 1889.

Since the sale of liquors in the Washington apartment house, owned by Vice-President Morton, has been asserted and denied until it has become a national issue, it is well enough for the confused public to have the real facts in the case.

The Shoreham Flats, as the building is called, are managed, not leased, by Mr. Keenan. This gentleman applied for and was granted a bar-room license for the sale of liquors at retail. To legally sell a single drink he would have been obliged to apply for the retail license, which is called, in the form, bar-room license. Doubtless if Mr. Keenan could have employed some irreproachable sounding word instead of "bar-room license," he would have done so, but he was obliged to conform to the law. Still he is not obliged to call the annex to the Shoreham cafe, in which his liquors are dispensed, a bar-room, and he does not; he says there is no bar-room in the Shoreham. His clerk also maintains his position, and when interviewed minutely on the subject stated that no man could walk up and obtain a drink there as in a saloon. He could have liquors served with his meals, but in no other way. But despite all this twaddle, there is in this same little aforesaid annex chairs, tables, a buffet stocked with mysteriously labeled bottles, with a circular counter in front of it, and men who have wanted a drink of whisky, or anything similar, have succeeded in getting it at the Shoreham annex by asking for it.

The Fifty-first Congress will assemble in less than three weeks. Within that time, however, some important matters will have to be disposed of, the leading one being the Republican nomination for Speaker of the House. That one circumstance carries with it a weight of interest. There has not been a great battle for the Speakership since Mr. Carlisle defeated Mr. Randall and Mr. Cox, and succeeded Speaker Keifer. All of the five Speakership candidates are in the city, and their various headquarters are open and busy, although on the surface there is little sign of the work that is actually being done.

A temperance mass meeting held here several days since was attended by fully two thousand people, many of them wearing the badges of the secret orders engaged in so-called temperance work. The meeting was non-sectarian, but among the speakers the Catholic clergy predominated, many of them being strangers who had come to attend the dedication ceremonies of their new University. Bishop Ireland was received with great enthusiasm.

Rev. Dr. McKim, rector of Epiphany church, preached a sermon Sunday last on the temperance question, taking the text, "Cry aloud, and spare not, lift up thy voice like a trumpet and show my people their transgressions." Temperance, from his point of view, does not mean total abstinence. Temperance, he holds, not total abstinence, is the law of the Gospel of absolute obligation upon all; and that each individual must decide for himself whether he ought to abridge this liberty by adopting the rule of total abstinence.

At the banquet given as part of the dedicatory ceremonies of the Catholic University, the President and most of the Cabinet officers were present. When the President was urgently called upon for a speech he declined to make one, saying he had avoided speech-making heretofore on such occasions and hoped to be permitted to maintain his rule of silence at this time. Secretary Blaine, however, responded to the toast, "Our Country and her President," in a few cautious words, in which it was plainly evident that while he wanted to be gracious to his hosts, the Catholics, he was careful not to endorse them as a sect in any way that could give offense to Protestants. *

—The Washington agent has returned to headquarters. He spoke at Binghamton, New York, to a very large audience on Sabbath the 17th, and a hearty co-operation and support was promised if he will return at some time in the future.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

BOSTON, Mass., Nov. 18, 1889.

I have before me a copy of the Boston Evening Journal of the 15th inst. It contains almost a column article on "Terrible Revelations, the Dreadful Secrets of the Mormon Endowment House Exposed," etc.

There are several features in this exposure that are of special interest to Anti-masons, and must be equally so to every thoughtful member of the craft. I make a few extracts for the benefit of our readers. "John Bond told how he went through the Endowment house in January, 1868, and took certain oaths." In room 5 he took an obligation to obey the priesthood in everything temporal, spiritual, political, social and financial. He testified that the penalty for violating the oaths or divulging them was death, by cutting the throat from ear to ear, and cutting out the heart and tongue, and disembowelment. The maternity of this horrid covenant cannot be questioned for a moment by anyone conversant with the oaths and penalties of the three degrees of Blue Lodge Masonry. The penalties are identical, and the oaths, though probably differing in phraseology, cover exactly the same ground. A. T. C. Pierson a Sovereign Grand Inspector General, is authority upon this point. He says: "If we would be Masons, we must yield private judgment." Nothing more than this is required of the initiate in the Endowment house.

It is hardly a supposable case that men known to have sworn allegiance to a government compelling its members to commit the most diabolical crimes, should be adjudged worthy of citizenship in a government for the protection of the people. The public will await with interest the exposition of the secrets of this band of sworn assassins; meantime, it will be well to turn our attention to some matters nearer home.

Neither Boston or Chicago, so far as I know, have Endowment houses, or any considerable number of Mormon citizens; but both have temples of worship from which the uninitiated are as jealously excluded as from the temple at Salt Lake, and where oaths are administered with the most terrible penalties possible to impose. On the corner of Tremont and Boylston streets in this city, stands a costly structure devoted to the rites and services of the "Secret Empire." Outwardly it appears beautiful, but who can reveal the things that are done in "the secret chambers of their imagery?" Could the whited walls of that temple speak, they might disclose tales of woe as barbarous as those uncovered in the city of the "Latter-day Saints." Let us exercise the largest charity, but let us not shut our eyes to the facts. And what are the facts? Every man who aspires to membership in that religious order of Masons, must, before the secrets are communicated to him, take an oath ever to conceal and never reveal ALL the secrets of the lodge, "under no less a penalty than that of having his throat cut from ear to ear;" and as he progresses the obligations become more comprehensive and stringent, until there is not a crime in the calendar that he is not sworn to keep as inviolable in his breast as in the breast of the brother who imparts it to him. If there is not some similarity in the work of these two oath-bound societies, why should they adopt precisely the same methods, and require the same obligation of concealment and obedience? It is difficult to explain this identity of method on any other ground than that their ultimate designs are very near akin. If there is any rational explanation why the Endowment house in Salt Lake, the Masonic lodge, the Clan-na-Gael or Irish Brotherhood and the order of Jesuits are not allied in principle and in practice, I hope it will be shown in the approaching Congress of Churches in this city. The gentlemen who are to present the different departments of this great subject are certainly competent to do it justice, and after the most careful research, their words and views will have great weight with the people. No pastor or Christian within reach of Boston can afford to let this opportunity pass unimproved, to listen to one of the ablest discussions had upon this living question, which is pressing more and more upon the attention of the American people.

Let all who can, come; and those who cannot, let them help together with fervent prayer, and where God has put it into your hand, send an offering of your substance to aid in carrying forward the great work of exposing the secret lodge system. J. P. STODDARD.

COLLEGE WORK RESUMED IN THE SOUTH.

JACKSON, Tenn., Nov. 21st, 1889.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I left Chicago on the 14th inst., while a few flakes of snow were falling, and I flattered myself that I was just in time to escape the coming snowstorm. The yellow autumn sun shone upon us as we whirled into Cairo and passed by the new high bridge, over the Ohio river, and hurried on to Jackson, Tenn., where I arrived on the 15th, before the sun went down. In the morning I was astonished, when I looked out, to see the snow sifting down and covering the ground everywhere. But that was the order of things for two days until Sunday night.

On Saturday I managed to call around through snow and mud, and arranged two appointments, one for Sabbath afternoon at three o'clock, the other for Tuesday evening. Jackson is said to have some 15,000 inhabitants; but the attendance was very small in the churches that day, and I spoke to quite a limited audience on the reform topics of the N. C. A. They say here that this snowfall was greater than any they had last winter.

On Monday I visited the Baptist University. Pres. German sent me to the librarian of the Young Men's Gospel Society. I explained the nature and object of my mission, and proposed to donate a five-dollar anti-secrecy library. But, he said, it would require a vote of the society. So I gave him some tracts and went to the Lane Institute (colored). Here I found Pres. E. W. Bailey, a graduate of Fisk University, who invited me to address the students, which I did, and was applauded at the close. This is a large college for both sexes. Their modes of instruction are similar to those of Fisk, and they have an intelligent corps of teachers. I made arrangements to send them the anti-secrecy library and the Cynosure for a year.

On Tuesday evening I delivered a sermon on temperance and anti-secrecy in Rev. C. Moore's Mission Baptist church to a fair audience, who listened to the truths advanced with evident approval.

On the 20th I took the morning train for Henderson, where are two colleges. Pres. G. A. Lewellen of the W. Tennessee Christian College received me cordially and said they would accept our reform books and give the Cynosure a place in their reading room. This institution appears to be in a flourishing condition, and has adopted the late improvements in teaching. In the afternoon I visited the Methodist College of Henderson, but finding no particular opening I returned to Jackson.

On the 22nd I expect to go to McKenzie, Carroll county, and in a few days, D.V., to Memphis. As ever yours, SAM'L F. PORTER.

HELP FROM METHODIST BRETHREN IN NEW YORK.

BINGHAMPTON, N. Y., Nov. 15th, 1889.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—God wonderfully blesses me in seeking the exaltation of his dear Son's name. Should I give a full report of the past week's work, it would be but to account one victory after another, "for Christ and his kingdom." A large audience, considering the night, greeted me at West Exeter in the M. E. church. The pastor, who so kindly secured me this hearing, introduced me to the people and helped what he could.

At Garrettsville the Lord opened the door. Rev. A. S. Holland, M. E. pastor, received me cautiously at first, but became more enthusiastic as he learned more of my work. He with eight others there will read the Cynosure after this. Sabbath morning I addressed a fair audience in the Garrettsville M. E. church. In the afternoon I filled Rev. Mr. Holland's appointment in a school-house some miles in the country, and in the evening a full house welcomed me at the union service in the U. P. church. I spoke for over two hours to the evening congregation and received the undivided attention of my audience.

In accordance with their wish, expressed by a vote taken, I spoke again in the same place on Tuesday evening. This audience was about the same size as that of Sabbath evening. While on this occasion the Masons were conspicuously absent, young men more than filled their places. Before concluding this lecture, I asked the Masons, if any were present, to vote as to whether I had properly represented their institution to my audience. All who thought that I had were to keep their seats and say nothing; any differing were to have an opportunity to present their side. An elderly man, of the Universalist persuasion, arose and objected to my representation of the oath. He could not see anything wrong in Masonry. "Nine-tenths," said he, "of all the preachers are Masons," etc. After answering the "good-man" argument, I suggested that possibly he did not have on his spectacles if he could see nothing wrong in Masonry after all that had been said, and naturally commenced with him at the beginning to see if we could find anything wrong. I told how he was prepared to be made a Mason, and inquired if he was willing to testify that such was not the fact. He tried to evade the question, but when pressed for a direct answer he said, "Well, what of it?"

The audience evidently concluded there was much "of it," and applauded heartily to the confusion of him who could see nothing wrong in Masonry. In short, there was a grand victory for truth. Young men will not be easily duped into the lodge in Garrettsville. A hotel man and saloon-keeper was buried in this place not long since with Masonic honors. On several occasions of late the fraternity have had occasion to display their emblems of innocence at funerals much to the disgust of many of the more enlightened. So there is naturally a strong anti-secrecy sentiment there.

Time and space forbid my relating an interesting conversation with a Mr. Allen of this city, as we traveled together on the train from Edmiston to Sidney, N. Y. Mr. Allen has something less than forty titles as a Mason. He told me he had taken ninety-five degrees in the Egyptian mysteries, twelve degrees in the York rite, and was now visiting lodges in this jurisdiction for the purpose of instruction. He is also taking an active part in the erection of an asylum for indigent Masons near Utica. He says the grounds are secured, and they hope to go on with the work soon. He attended the Knights Templar Conclave at Washington, and thought it a grand affair. He is about six feet tall, in width at least two feet, has a smoothly-shaven, fleshy red face, double chin, weight considerable over 200 pounds. Before learning his mission and receiving an introduction, I set him down as a Catholic priest or traveling saloon agent.

I remain here for work over Sabbath. I find a strong Free Methodist society who are glad to give me a hearing. Early next week (D.V.) I return again to Washington. W. B. STODDARD.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NOTES AND FACTS FROM PENNSYLVANIA.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Allow me to say some words, first, on my estimate of our political situation. As to our campaign in Pennsylvania in June, you know all. The defeat of the amendment measure was very pronounced, though the real prohibitionists did their utmost to carry the State. The old parties joined with the whiskey men and defeated that measure. It was claimed to be a Republican plan to promote temperance, but was really intended to silence temperance people. At our election, Nov. 5, only three offices were to be filled. Much apathy was manifest. I think the real prohibitionists voted. Nearly, not quite all, the old party men fell into line with their old bosses. Some few split the tickets in behalf of prohibition. Many old party men are insolent and very abusive. Your humble correspondent stood for some hours in the focus of insult, giving out prohibition literature and tickets.

As to the lodge proclivities of our candidates I cannot be certain. I wrote to the People to look well to candidates regarding the lodge, and also stated that there are in the United States hundreds of thousands of citizens who will not vote for lodge-bound souls, "knowing them to be such." We now stand as squarely opposed to the lodge as to the liquor traffic, and cannot be consistent while we oppose liquor and vote for the lodge. We are anxious to do all that is possible against the twins—not Siamese, but Hades twins. If our temperance brethren must humor the lodge in selecting candidates for offices, we must refuse them, or be party to self-stultification.

My heart is rendered very sad in view of the death of so many of our brave workers in the cause we represent. Nothing but the cheering hope of meeting those grand men in the better land can console me, in view of the loss to the cause. Being personally acquainted with them, as I was, endears them to me more than I am able to express. May God greatly comfort the stricken families of brethren Capwell, Fairchild, Andrus, and the others embraced in the late death-list—really in the life-list now, in the city were death never enters.

Here is a brief incident: I met, recently, in the borough of Thompson, Pa., in a shop, three Masons. The shoemaker sarcastically challenged me for some information on the subject of Freemasonry in behalf of the company present. I informed the gentleman that I was a 33-degree Mason, and could tell them more about the matter than they knew. Mason No. 2 set in and said that any man who would perjure himself ought to be killed, etc., waxing madly eloquent on the subject. He was a Jew merchant. He received an answer that some killing had been done by Masons which showed them to be sincere in that view. No. 1 agreed thereto, though a member of the M. E. church. No. 3, who was the M. E. preacher in charge there, kept his jewel till in taking his leave he remarked he must get out or he should become a Mason. Whether he is not one already remains a question to be settled. He is an able man, but a user of the weed called tobacco, an expert in fishing, and a staunch Democrat. Our little discussion lasted perhaps thirty minutes, and ended quite pleasantly. I exhorted Bro. M. to either leave Masonry or the M. E. church, as they antagonize each other at all points.

As citizens of the United States and men of God, what are we to do when the times of filling offices arrive? To me this is a grave question. I cannot help vote men into power in whom I have no faith. I can get none in oath-bound vassals of the lodge. More than three out of four of all the voters are kneaded like dough. Our people may be embraced in three classes. The bosses who manipulate, the dough-faces on the kneading-board, and those who think and act first for God, then for community, or for the people, and for their own best good. To go with the multitude seems to be the rage of the masses. O, what prestige in numbers! How are the few with God and the right despised! "Help, Lord, for the godly man ceaseth, and the faithful fail."

As temporary chairman of the Pennsylvania Association, auxiliary to the N. C. A., opposed to secret societies, let me add that I am in favor of permanent organization in this State as soon as possible. I hope our energetic friends, E. J. Chalfant and J. C. Young, will move along with others to reach the organization at no distant day. We shall need the co-operation of the General Agent and his efficient son, W. B. Stoddard. So, dear brethren, let us pray and work on. How would a convention work at York or at Chambersburg? Yours for the cause of truth,

NATHAN CALENDER.

CHURCH AND STATE ALLIANCE!

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Your careful readers will, I think, be of one opinion on Rev. J. M. Foster's plea, and that he is in favor of some kind of a union of church and state. Evidently of such "an alliance" as admits of the state supporting the church by taxes, and perhaps by such payments as last month were revealed, when out of $476,000 appropriation to Indiana schools there was paid to priests and nuns the sum of $346,000, and only $130,000 to Indiana Protestants. But the Catholics and Protestants would each of course like his true religion taught and paid for more liberally! The principle, however, is the same, for State payments violate the constitution, "as well as the character of the true churches," of Christ!

If the family, the state and the church are of divine authority, as they are, then each have their own special functions, and encroachment of one upon the other tends to corruption and destruction of their respective purposes. In the family parents provide for and rule children. In the state the moral (?) rulers tax the people to maintain morality in the community. The church can neither supercede parents nor the state by any plea of right. This, however, is the root principle of the church of Rome. She claims supremacy over every civil government, and the right to compel persons, families and states to support her, and this compulsion is by force of arms if necessary, whenever possible; and where impossible or impolitic, then to use all the cunning and sophistry, familiarly called Jesuitism, to undermine her opponents. In fact, the Jesuits are a sworn brotherhood to promote the interests of the Romish church as truly as the Clan-na-Gaels are a "United brotherhood," sworn to promote the independence of Ireland; or rather, in fact, the supremacy of the Pope in Irish politics.

The Pope to-day calls himself a prisoner in Rome, because Italy has freed her government so far as to have her civil affairs independent of the priests; but in this favored country popery has developed into an immense controlling power in our party politics, and thus secures from leading parties many such favors as have been brought to light in the public schools of Boston, etc., and of the big grab at Washington.

Rome is using the very arguments that some Protestants urge, but the underlying falsehood is that Christ authorizes state compulsory support for his Gospel! Rome does this whenever she can for "another gospel," instead of having only the voluntary support of those who believe and obey. How? By Christian children honoring their parents; by Christian citizens paying their taxes, even if they have to catch fish to find the cash, and in every way trying to do good as they have opportunity; but they should not surrender their Christian liberty into the hands of lodgery. That changes their allegiance, because Christ never authorized lodgery, and it often binds them to conceal and not reveal the truth, even when the civil government needs it to punish evil-doers or protect well-doers.

Lodgery says, Swear. Both Moses and Christ said "swear not" such oaths as lodgery requires. Lev. 5: 4. They were sinful and required confession under Moses; evidently quite ancient, but not less a sin against him whose command is, "Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain." The Christian parent trains his family for time and eternity. The civil government protects society, and is worthy of support while it is a "terror to evil-doers and a praise to them who do well," but when it is of the opposite character, it should be cast off by every moral citizen. This is the domain of state duty: to preserve morality and justice among its citizens and educate them to know what morality is. But civil government must not touch the ark, or it incurs the danger of death! The church is corrupted when it accepts state payments; the state is corrupted when it offers them. The citizens are corrupt when they acquiesce in either case, and all work best for the good of all when each works apart in the discharge of its own duties—family, state, church. The Christian may dig his garden besides that of a Jew or a Mohammedan, and the state secures each in his labor, and each may keep and give only what he may choose to his religion. But when the state pays out taxes to teach one religion, she violates her moral duty and equally insults the wisdom of the risen Christ, who left his church to depend upon the willing, and not the state nor the compulsory support of his people. Very different is Mohammedanism and the Roman anti-Christ. They compel people by the sword of state to confess or suffer as heretics. And every church that takes state payments is so far a follower of Rome in that particular.

PITH AND POINT.

AN INCIDENT FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

A pleasant incident on the train was the acquaintance of a young man from Cairo, Mich., named M. R. Botsford. He is a staunch Prohibitionist and free from all secret societies. He had never heard of the N. C. A., and was glad to learn of what is being done in our line of work. He said, "The country is being ruined by rings and cliques, but I confess that I don't know what can be done to prevent it. If I knew anything that I could do I would do it. I don't understand how any professing Christian can talk temperance and then vote license. I have no hope from either of the old parties, for they are so thoroughly wedded to their idols that they will not sacrifice votes for any moral or other consideration."—J. P. STODDARD.

CYNOSURE WORK IN NEW ORLEANS.

The Cynosure is a welcome visitor to our home and hearts. It has fully converted me and my wife to the principles of the N. C. A. As soon as we can we shall send you token of our appreciation and interest.—P. J. ROBIDOUX.

NO FELLOWSHIP WITH LODGERY.

I do not break the bread with Masons. Could the rising generation not be trained against the lodge as they are about temperance? Let as many mothers as possible have tracts that expose it as anti-Christian. If I had the means I would send an exposition to every female in the States and Canada.—JOHN TROTTER, Warton, Ont.

CHURCHES AND LODGES.

Will you be so kind as to give the standing of the M. E. church, and also the Congregational church, with regard to secret societies, as near as you can, in the next.—S. Hutchinson, Minn.

The action of Congregational churches is advisory in councils and associations. The local church only can make laws for its communion. A considerable number of such churches prohibit the lodge from membership. Councils have decided that churches may adopt such rules, and associations in several States have passed resolutions condemning secret societies. The Methodist Episcopal church has been notoriously afflicted with secret societies, but many eminent preachers and some bishops are strongly opposed to them. Of late years this sentiment has been growing rapidly in some States.

LITERATURE.

The progressive tendency of the times is well exemplified in the Nineteenth Century for November, issued in this country in the original English sheets by the Leonard Scott Publication Co. It opens with a group of three notable papers, the "New Trades-Unionism," by Frederic Harrison; the "New Tories," by the Duke of Marlborough, and the "New National Party," by Montague Crackanthorpe. Sir Henry Elliot describes "Australia Fifty Years Ago" in a vivid and graphic sketch of life in the early days of the great new Britain. Lady Gaskell writes on "Women of To-Day," and shows how exhausting modern social life is to the woman who enters thoroughly into it. J. Norman Lockyer tells the history of a Star, presenting in a popular readable form the latest theories on the origin and development of the celestial bodies. J. E. C. Bodley has an important paper on "Roman Catholicism in America," which is sure to command wide attention, treating as it does of a subject of national interest. The writer's remarks on an English Pope are calculated to create considerable speculation as to the successor of Leo. XIII.

Mary Allen West, the popular editor of the Union Signal, has improved a long vacation by writing for Our Day on "Domestic Science." The paper opens the November number of Our Day. Miss West is not at present a house-keeper, but as a woman of large experience among women, and eminent good sense and piety, her views on this subject are without prejudice, and are of great practical value. With a considerable part of the human family the domestic question is an important one. Hon. Neal Dow, of Maine, writes in answer to the question, "Can the Liquor Traffic be Legalized without Sin?" The Louisiana Lottery is reviewed by Anthony Comstock in its character as a local infamy, but especially as a national scourge. "The Jesuits Estate Bill in Canada" is the title of an article we advise all to read. Now that this robbery of the Canadian treasury has been completed by the payment of $400,000 to the Jesuits, we should carefully study this case in all its details, in order to meet effectually any demand of the same character. Rev. W. F. Crafts writes ably of the "American Civil Sabbath," which he is defending as Secretary of the American Sabbath Union.

The November Statesman opens with a discussion of government ownership of the telegraph suggested by the late decision of Postmaster General Wanamaker that the government would henceforth pay a low rate which he himself set. The question is shall the telegraph be a monopoly or a pantopoly? Lawyer C. C. Bonney writes of an "International Court of Justice." Prof. Craig of Purdue University, has a historical paper on the "Formation of Federal Government." "Practical Labor Reform," "Forces which Make for Temperance," "Drainage and the Single Tax," "Asylum for the Insane," and "Old Line Insurance," are other papers which make a very full number.

Wisdom is better than riches. Wisdom guards thee, but thou must guard thy riches. Riches diminish in the using; but wisdom increases in the use of it.—Arabic Proverb.

LODGE NOTES.

The union men employed on the export docks at London have refused to work unless the company's permanent employes join the Dock-Laborers' union. This the non-union men refuse to do, and a dead-lock has resulted.

The strike of molders in the Brooks locomotive works at Dunkirk, N. Y., has ended, the men being put to work this morning on condition that the union is not to interfere with the managers' rights to employ such men as they choose. The discharged men will not be reinstated.

The National Grange meeting at Sacramento, Cal., decided upon Atlanta, Ga., as the place for holding the next annual meeting. J. H. Brigham, of Ohio; Mr. Rhone, of Pennsylvania, and John Trimble, of the District of Columbia, were appointed a committee on legislation to present the measures proposed by the National Grange to Congress. A resolution was adopted approving the Australian system of voting. About three hundred persons received the seventh degree, "Ceres," in one night.

The Knights of Labor have adopted the Henry George land scheme. In their convention at Atlanta, Ga., the following resolution was adopted as the fourth plank of the declaration of principles of the Knights: "That land, including all the natural sources of wealth, is the heritage of all the people, and should not be subject to speculative traffic. Occupancy and use shall be the only title to the possession of land. Taxes upon lands should be levied upon its full value for use, exclusive of improvements, and should be sufficient to make for the community all the unearned increment."

Beethoven lodge, Knights of Pythias, is made up mainly of North Side Germans. The secretary and treasurer of this lodge was, up to a few weeks ago, Albert Koeppe. Mr. Koeppe is a blue-eyed, blonde gentleman of winning and pleasing address. The honest Germans of Beethoven lodge had every confidence in him and trusted implicitly to his honesty. A few weeks ago Mr. Koeppe came to the trustees of the lodge and stated that he had imperative need of $500. He got it, and so great was their trust in him that the loan was not even recorded. Then Mr. Koeppe collected about $300 in dues, sold his house and furniture, and two weeks ago disappeared. The lodge is out $800 and the trusting faith of its members has been rudely shocked.—News.

The reception which was given by Mrs. John A. Logan to the Knight Templar Masons in Washington, was a recognition of the connection which her husband had with that order. In the proceedings of the Grand Commandery of Illinois at their session in 1887 the Masonic career of General Logan is given in the biographical minute of his death. It is as follows: "Raised a Master Mason in Benton Lodge, No. 64, Benton, Ill., Sept. 6, 1851. Exalted a Royal Arch Mason in Washington Chapter, No. 43, Chicago, Sept. 11, 1855. Dubbed and created a Knight Templar in Chevalier Bayard Commandery, No. 52, Knights Templar, Chicago, Dec. 1, 1885. Received the grades of the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite, four degrees to thirty-second degree in Oriental Consistory, Chicago, Nov. 11, 1880, to Oct. 6, 1883. He was elected a Sovereign Grand Inspector General, thirty-third and last degree, in the Supreme Council Ancient Scottish Rite, Northern Masonic Jurisdiction, at the Chicago session, Sept. 15, 1886. The grade was not conferred upon him on this earth, for he was summoned to receive his crown at the hands of our blessed Immanuel in the grand asylum above, Dec. 26, 1886, and was laid to rest Dec. 31, 1886. His casket was draped with our National flag, the emblem of his loyalty to country, and the beausant of Chevalier Bayard Commandery, No. 52, Knights Templar, the emblem of his faith in Christianity."

All scalp and skin diseases, dandruff, falling of the hair, gray or faded hair, may be cured by using that nature's true remedy, Hall's Hair Renewer.

Sufferers

FROM Stomach and Liver derangements—Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Sick-Headache, and Constipation—find a safe and certain relief in Ayer's Pills. In all cases where a cathartic is needed, these Pills are recommended by leading physicians.

Dr. T. E. Hastings, of Baltimore, says: "Ayer's Pills are the best cathartic and aperient within the reach of my profession."

Dr. John W. Brown, of Oceana, W. Va., writes: "I have prescribed Ayer's Pills in my practice, and find them excellent. I urge their general use in families."

"For a number of years I was afflicted with biliousness which almost destroyed my health. I tried various remedies, but nothing afforded me any relief until I began to take Ayer's Pills."—G. S. Wanderlich, Scranton, Pa.

"I have used Ayer's Pills for the past thirty years, and am satisfied I should not be alive to-day if it had not been for them. They cured me of dyspepsia when all other remedies failed, and their occasional use has kept me in a healthy condition ever since."—T. P. Brown, Chester, Pa.

"Having been subject, for years, to constipation, without being able to find much relief, I at last tried Ayer's Pills, and deem it both a duty and a pleasure to testify that I have derived great benefit from their use. For over two years past I have taken one of these Pills every night before retiring. I would not willingly be without them."—G. W. Bowman, 26 East Main st., Carlisle, Pa.

"Ayer's Pills have been used in my family upwards of twenty years, and have completely verified all that is claimed for them. In attacks of piles, from which I suffered many years, they afforded me greater relief than any medicine I ever tried."—Thomas F. Adams, Holly Springs, Texas.

THE N. C. A. FUNDS.

The General Fund is that from which the running expenses of the Association are paid. From it the agents on the field are supported.

The Foreign Fund is that from which the foreign demand for literature against the lodge is supplied to missionaries.

The Free Tract Fund clearly states by its name the object for which contributions are solicited. Millions of pages have been distributed by means of this fund.

The Cynosure Ministers' Fund. The donations to this fund have enabled the Association to send many copies of the Cynosure to the ministers of the South, especially to pastors of colored churches. The result has been a blessing to them and their churches.

Contributions to any or all these funds are urgently solicited.

FORM OF BEQUEST.—I give and bequeath to the National Christian Association, incorporated and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, the sum of — dollars for the purposes of said Association, and for which the receipt of its Treasurer for the time being shall be sufficient discharge.

The Christian Cynosure.

J. BLANCHARD, EDITOR.

HENRY L. KELLOGG, ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 28, 1889.

TO THE PASTORS AND CHRISTIAN PEOPLE OF NEW ENGLAND.

The first Masonic lodge was planted in the city of Boston in 1733, forty-three years before American Independence had burst its bud. At that time one of those mysterious, supernatural waves of salvation, which have reappeared at times and swept over the civilized nations, was just rising. Whitefield was ordained three years after that first American lodge was planted in Boston, and nations had begun to listen to him, and to the Wesleys, the two Tennents, Jonathan Edwards, and a host of like-minded men. Such "Great Awakenings" have been usually preceded by antagonistic spiritual forces. The Wickliffe revival, which overran England in 1360, when two-thirds of the English people became Lollards or Wickliffites, was resisted by the Pope's army of mendicant monks; the Lutheran Reformation was antagonized with fearful power by the Jesuits of Loyola in 1540. The overwhelming national revival described by Hume, was met by a persecution in Scotland, in which twenty-five thousand people suffered death, imprisonment, banishment or loss of goods. So our Great Awakening which preceded our seven years' war, was met by the subtle, silent, secret lodge system, which is now corrupting the politics, depraving the morals and disintegrating the churches of the United States. And no beast or living movement ever bore more unmistakable marks of Satanic craft and power than the Masonic lodge. Its origin was craft; its history fiction; its religion deism; its ritual blasphemy and burlesque on Christianity; its nature anti-Christ, and its government absolute despotism.

A United States Senator from New England, who is a member of no secret order, said to the writer a few weeks ago: "In a large legal practice I have carefully observed the influence of Masonic oaths in our courts, and while it is apparent that there is such an influence, it is also apparent that membership in churches and other societies often produces a similar bias."

But suppose every church member had taken a secret oath to have his throat cut if he did not conceal the crimes, obey the signs and aid the escape of church members "whether they were right or wrong," that would furnish a case parallel to that of the lodge. Even now justice suffers by sinful partiality in courts and juries sworn to do right. But when courts and juries come to have secret oaths and obligations, each to prefer his secret order to the state, there is an end of civil administration, and no security for property or life.

And this is precisely what we are coming to. Ex-Gov. John D. Long, who lately gave $1,000 to the Jesuits' College in Worcester, Mass., is yet a friend to our free schools, and under his direct questioning, papists admitted that their first and supreme allegiance was to the authority of Pope, cardinals and bishops, and not to the United States. We give in another column to-day the proceedings of the U. S. Court in Utah now in session, where Mormons freely swear that "Mormonism is the kingdom of God," and their first allegiance is due to it, under Masonic penalties of death. Penrose, editor of the Deseret News, is now in prison for obeying his Mormon oaths, in contempt of the U. S. Court. Masons in the upper degrees, are sworn directly that they will ever hold the lodge to be their "supreme tribunal," and if you read the Cynosure for a little while, you will see that all secret societies, from the Vatican to an Odd Fellows' lodge, are combining against Christ. "But the Lamb shall overcome them," Rev. 17: 14. His followers are to conquer "by the blood of the Lamb and the word of their testimony." There is more hope of deliverance and salvation in the churches of New England than in the whole country outside, and we pray you, therefore, to give the godly and eloquent men who are to speak at Tremont Temple Dec. 11th, a hearing.

THE CASE IN LAW of the United Brethren is briefly this: In 1841 a constitution was adopted which stood unquestioned in use forty-eight years. This constitution positively excluded secret societies, and provided: "There shall be no alteration in the foregoing constitution unless by request of two-thirds of the whole society." In 1889 "the whole society" contained 201,517 members, and the question of changing the constitution was submitted to the whole church and only 55,000 voted at all, and part of these voted against change. So less than one-third of the "whole society" (instead of two-thirds) "requested" the change. Yet the change was made, illegally and in the face of the constitution, the object being to let secret societies into the church. Therefore, the constitution of 1841 is, and that of 1889 is not, the law of the true United Brethren church.

THE OAK AND VINE.

Washington Irving's transcendently beautiful figure of the vine clinging to, and supporting the lightning-riven oak which had before supported the vine, has been universally read and admired; and not only admired as beautiful, but approved as true. Woman bears adversity better and braver than man, and when the bolt of adversity falls and shatters their fortune—the wife who, like the vine—has clung to the husband for support, has often held his shattered faculties together, and saved and restored the prosperity of the house. This amiable difference between female and male human nature, in favor of the gentler sex, is thus described by Sir Walter Scott:

"O woman! in our hours of ease,
Uncertain, coy, and hard to please;
When pain and anguish wring the brow,
A ministering angel thou!"

But Miss F. E. Willard thinks that "the oak-and-vine theory of human relationships" is overthrown by a woman who, in a gale of wind, saw naked bean poles blown down, while the poles with vines on them outstood the gale. This surely was a prodigy, provided the poles were equally well set in the earth. So, Miss Willard thinks Irving's figure of vine and oak a failure, and in her late annual speech to the W. C. T. U., says: "I suggest that the figure of a strong winged bird, rising on equal pinions, is the truer emblem" of the family, the husband and wife being the equal wings.

We decidedly prefer the taste and judgment of Irving and Walter Scott. But there is, in Miss Willard's theory of marriage and the human race, error far more fatal than bad poetry or rhetoric. In her speech she says:

"Elizabeth Chapman says that the independent thinkers on this subject [marriage] are divided into two classes: 1st, those who have abandoned all respect for marriage; and 2d, those who are profoundly dissatisfied with the institution as it exists at present, but who desire to reform it. I wish clearly to identify myself with the second class."

Again:

"It is possible to be truthful and yet to say, 'I have loved,' or 'I do love;' but to swear that you will love, implies the folly of youth, or the saintship of heaven."

So when God's Word commands husbands to "love their wives," if they promise that, they will love them. Miss Willard writes them down either fools or saints. But worse still. This same speech contains the following:

"The church does still hold woman in an attitude of subjection in marriage, which renders the husband not the wooer, but the master; and the civil contract into which she enters, no matter what the words of the ceremony by which she weds, transforms woman into the completest slave the earth has known—in theory, if not in fact."

Do the thousands of good wives and mothers who thronged to hear these atrocious sentiments at Battery D, Chicago, know that the four solid columns of such cloudy literature on marriage and motherhood, are the philosophy of Shelley and Mary Wolstoncraft, of Victoria Woodhull and Theodore Tilton?

Then Miss Willard belongs to, and trains with, the so-called Greek-letter fraternities, made up of girls in colleges, who close the doors of their night meetings; and, if they keep their vows, conceal their proceedings from their fathers and mothers. Is this to prepare them for holy marriage? And this same speech of hers exalts Terrence V. Powderly as the pink of "Modern Chivalry," and she has advised Gen. Neal Dow to join his "Knights of Labor," to do which, she knows the good general must promise "SECRECY, OBEDIENCE and ASSISTANCE" in case of strikes. (See Mr. Powderly's printed circular.) And this three-fold promise runs, not only to Mr. Powderly, but to his successors in office. She knows, too, that this same Mr. Powderly is declared by one of its cardinals, to be perfectly obedient to the Romish hierarchy, which forbids marriage to priests and grants indulgences. Yet she grasps his hand, and calls him her brother!

In her four-column dissertation on marriage, she "darkens counsel by words without knowledge," quoting English theorists, but not the Apostle Paul, who, in two brief sentences, utters more good sense and true religion on the subject than all self-projected theories that were ever written by socialistic men and women. These two sentences are: "Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it," (Eph. 5: 25); and "Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands," (Eph. 5: 22.) These two brief Scriptures obeyed, will make all marriages holy, and all families happy. We are sorry one who has done so much good should be left to utter such bad sense and worse religion.

HOW TO TREAT SECRET SOCIETIES.

"But thus shall ye deal with them; ye shall destroy their altars, and break down their images, and cut down their groves, and burn their graven images with fire." Deut. 7: 5.

What is the meaning, and what the use of the little altars in the lodge rooms all over this country? We have seen them even in the halls of railroad conductors, and often other tools and implements of worship. An officer of an "order" of railroad conductors lately showed us into their empty hall in Aurora, Ill. There stood the little altar in the midst. What did that "altar" mean? Do you say to swear in members? But oaths and altar pledges are worship! What god is worshiped at that altar? Surely not Christ! The young men worshipping there are often openly and deeply immoral. Yet every young man who enters there at night feels a sense of solemn worship creeping over him. That altar, like the one Paul saw at Athens, standing there "to the unknown God," was an altar for demon worship, and these are the altars which the rulers of the new United Brethren church have voted into their communion. O pity!

THE MORMON REVELATIONS.

The examination now proceeding in the United States court of Utah to prove that the Mormons have sworn allegiance to another power than the government of the United States, and are therefore aliens and unfit to exercise the rights of American citizenship, are of the utmost interest to the readers of this paper. We have, therefore, given some space to the dispatches on the 12th page, and shall continue their publication next week.

Saturday the Associated Press instructed its representative in Salt Lake City to call on Wilford Woodruff, president of the Mormon church, and obtain a statement of his side of the case. Woodruff pretends that the inquiry is only a bit of political clap-trap annually resorted to by the enemies of the church. With true Masonic spirit he asserts that the revelations are the overflowing of embittered spirits and not to be credited. The secrets of Mormonism are a private matter not to be inquired into by the state, and he adds:

"You might as well ask why a Mason, if he were placed on the witness stand, should refuse to reveal the rites and signs of that order. I myself am a Master Mason, and have been informed that many Masons have been indignant at the attempt that has been made to extort personal information from Mormons. Members of other benevolent societies can see that their rights and organizations would be endangered should such proceedings carry."

The president of the Latter-day Saints never spoke more truly. The same arguments that shield the Freemason or the Jesuit may be urged by the Mormon. The latter has been more faithful to obey his oath,—that is all. And if the United States court of Utah shall legally establish, by its decision, what is already known to be a fact, that the Mormon oath is incompatible with American citizenship, we shall lay up the decision as a precedent to be used legitimately against the Masonic lodge. The advocates of our reform have long prayed for an opportunity to prove the lodge alien to American interests and laws. Behold now in God's providence, how, without our effort, this is being done by the people of Cook county, Illinois, in the Cronin trial, but much more emphatically and clearly by the United States court in Salt Lake City. We shall continue this topic next week.

THE ILLINOIS SABBATH ASSOCIATION.

The annual meeting of this organization, which began its work two years ago in Elgin, was held last week in the First Methodist church near the court house in this city. The attendance was wretchedly small and discouraging, but the addresses were of high character, and so pleased the National Secretary, Mr. Crafts, that at his special request, all the speakers were appointed delegates to the National meeting in New York Dec. 9 to 11 next. Rev. C. E. Mandeville presided, and Rev. Dr. W. W. Everts was elected president for the ensuing year. Able addresses were made by George May Powell, of Philadelphia, Rev. Drs. J. D. Herr, of Milwaukee, N. C. Mallory, of Aurora, M. W. Stryker and W. W. Everts, of this city, Pres. C. A. Blanchard, Prof. W. H. M. Scott, Rev. H. A. Delano, who was temporary chairman of the Indianapolis Prohibition Convention, Judge Charles Wheaton, of Aurora, Rev. W. F. Crafts, Field Secretary of the American Sabbath Union, and Mrs. E. H. Bradley, of England, originator and superintendent of the White Shield department of the W. C. T. U., who spoke of the movement in England.

The burden of the addresses was a denunciation of, or a lament for, the doleful lack of moral courage on the part of the Christian church respecting the momentous question of Sabbath observance. One Chicago pastor, whose church is near the Stock Yards, said he would give $100 to anyone who would convert one man whom he could name, to the idea the Sunday work does not pay. Most of the male members of his church were compelled to work on the Sabbath or lose their places, and risk the bread their children must have. Rev. W. F. Crafts, of New York, spoke most hopefully of the success already secured, and the benefits of Sabbath rest.

"In Ireland," he said, "partial Sunday closing of saloons cut down the Sunday arrests 51 per cent. In Scotland more complete Sunday closing cut down the arrests seven-eighths and the total consumption of liquor one-fourth, proving Sunday closing one-fourth prohibition—a quarter loaf of unpoisoned bread. When saloons were open on Sunday in Cincinnati, I am told that the city prosecutor said that one-third of all the crimes in that city were committed on Sundays. Now that all its saloons are closed, even those of its daily papers that are most hostile to Sunday laws, report that on Sundays the police have almost nothing to do. Sabbath laws are therefore consistent with liberty in the same way as other less effective laws for the prevention of crime."

Pres. C. A. Blanchard, of Wheaton, spoke on the subject of Sabbath rest for laboring men, and for the employes on trains and street cars and in shops. He said attempts had been made to have the tenth day as a Sabbath, but they had failed; they had tried to do without any day of rest at all, and it had brought wreck and ruin on many a heart. Overwork resulted in many cases in insanity. There were varying causes of insanity—one of them the tobacco habit, another the use of liquor—for inebriation of itself is madness, and the man who spends his money uselessly is a lunatic, and apt to become one in the eye of the law. Why are our asylums filled with farmers' wives more than by any other class of women? Because of their monotonous life of toil throughout the year; the same applied to those who were compelled to spend the Sabbath as every other day in the week. Many of the professional classes, such as those present at the meeting, did not have to get to work at 7 o'clock in the morning a mile away from home, to bring back a tired hand at night, nor had they any one standing over them with a time-book and pencil. He asked them, as citizens, had they lifted their voices on behalf of the men who are robbed of their weekly rest, and sent by overwork to their graves as prematurely as if they were stabbed or shot? Clerks in stores and conductors on street cars were often almost unable to recognize their own children on account of their continual absence from home during long hours of overwork. The matter with us, he said, is, we have no backbone. The politician respects the saloon-keepers, but not the churches. The politicians expect when they do anything that hurts the saloons to hear from it, but when they hurt the churches they don't expect to hear anything at all.

The committee on resolutions reported an able paper, of which the following is an abstract:

We call upon all law-abiding citizens to aid in suppressing the great whisky rebellion, believing the closing of saloons on Sunday should be the leading issue in our fight for the civil Sabbath. We regard it as a patriotic axiom that the employes of the greatest of all corporations, that in which we are all shareholders, the United States Government, ought not to be robbed of their one day rest in seven, and therefore we ask Congress to give all its employes the same day of rest which is enjoyed by the employes of private corporations. The reduction of Sunday work that has been made in the mail service by our Postmaster General, we hope to see increased and made permanent by Congress. The Sunday opening of drug stores should be strictly limited to the compounding of prescriptions. Stores of all kinds should be closed on Sunday, and every kind of business, even the Sunday newspaper, should be suppressed in the interests of this movement.

—The ocean racer Etruria, of the Cunard line, had a little lodge fracas just after leaving Liverpool last week. The secret union men among the sailors refused to sail with companions who could not pronounce their lodge "Shibboleth," and began a mutiny. They were suppressed and imprisoned for a day for their loyalty to their oaths.

—The books advertised in our columns this week are unexceptional in character, and worth recommending to our readers. Please notice at what favorable terms these books will be furnished to all our actual subscribers. These advertisements will not appear again, nor will those of last week; therefore, mark what you wish to purchase, and order without delay.

—Governor John B. Gordon of Georgia, who is to lecture Saturday evening at Central Music Hall in this city, for the benefit of the ex-Confederate monument fund, will be tendered a reception on his arrival. A long list of city notables, beginning with Mayor Cregier, are on the reception committee, which closes with the names of the following Chicago preachers: H. W. Thomas, H. W. Bolton, G. C. Lorimer and Frank Gunsaulus. The significant fact is that these are all lodge men,—all Freemasons, excepting possibly Mr. Bolton of the First M. E. church. But he is a member of several lodges and frequently speaks for them. We are glad to note that in such an affair as this the Chicago pastors who are minding their own and the Lord's business are carefully passed by.

OMENS OF GOOD.

Not since the abduction and murder of Capt. William Morgan in 1826 has the general public been so much interested in the secret lodge discussion. The pulpit and the press are speaking with a freedom unprecedented in the last fifty years, and the signs of the times indicate more startling revelations in the near future. In reading the chronicles of events in our great daily papers, one can scarcely avoid the conviction that the time is at hand when "covered things shall be revealed, and what is heard in the ear shall be preached on the house top." It is evident that the present condition of public sentiment has not come by chance. A series of events, manifestly overruled by "Divine Providence," has filled the hearts of thoughtful citizens with grave apprehensions for the integrity of our courts and the safety of our civil institutions; while they have in some degree awakened the slumbering conscience of the church to the threatening danger. The terrible butchery of Cavendish and Burke in Phoenix Park, Ireland, sounded a voice of warning heard across the Atlantic. The bursting of a bomb, and its work of death on Haymarket Square in Chicago, followed by constant efforts to obstruct justice and shield the criminals by a secret oath-bound society, have made honest people suspicious of all kindred orders. Following the anarchist mob, comes the murder of Dr. P. H. Cronin, and the work of the Clan na-Gael in the legal investigations, hindered at every step by artifices known and practiced only by organized thugs and assassins; and while the Cronin case is pending, the public are startled by intelligence from Salt Lake disclosing the secret abominations of the Endowment house, and promising a more complete revelation of that mystery of iniquity than has hitherto been given. The disclosures already given in the Boston dailies establish the similarity of the Endowment house and Freemasonry, by the identity of the oaths and penalties by which the organizations are bound, and leave no reasonable doubt in the mind of any one that they have a common origin and are capable of being employed for like purposes. Recent disclosures prove conclusively, what some have asserted for years, that there is a bond of federation uniting the entire family of secret oath-bound fraternities into one system; that however diverse their forms of induction, there is one cardinal underlying principle of secrecy, submission and mutual succor in time of peril that allies them in one common fraternity, and it is the influence of this confederation of kindred orders upon church and state that the people want to know about. They have a right to this information, and the object of the Congress of Churches and Christians to occur in Boston, Dec. 11th and 12th next, is to present the facts and give the people the information they so greatly need. This gathering has been endorsed and will be participated in by the ablest and best known clergymen in Boston, and we may confidently expect a fair report of the speeches and proceedings by the associate press. Delegates have been appointed by conferences, associations and by some local churches, and there is time remaining to present the matter and secure a representation from every church. Will pastors who are friendly see to it that this matter is presented, and where pastors are not specially interested, will some member who is, bring it up in the prayer or conference meeting. This is a crucial point in New England. The strongest men in Boston have stepped to the front, and their timely appearance should be met by a large and enthusiastic representation from every part of New England. I trust the response may be worthy the cause, and that the work may move on in harmony with all other much needed reforms.

J. P. STODDARD.

—Several more African papers from Bro. Hazen-burg in Johannesburg, South Africa, have amazed us at the development of that new country. The Standard, a tri-weekly of fourteen pages, was mentioned last week. The last remittance contains three large dailies: the Transvaal Mining Argus, the Star and the Golden Age, and another tri-weekly, the Digger's News. These titles indicate the principal business of this new and rapidly developing country to be gold mining. These sheets enjoy an enormous advertising patronage, and in this respect give the world without many glimpses of the every-day life of this remote region. The Standard has for its motto the well known sentence of old John Knox, the Scotch iconoclast, which our reformer friends do well to remember: "I am in the place where I am demanded of conscience to speak the truth, and therefore the truth I speak, impugn it whoso list." It seems that this South African city is troubled, as is Chicago, with Sunday theatres. This being contrary to law, the authorities are agitating the question of closing them. The Golden Age defends the theatres, and urges that in a community like Johannesburg Sunday amusements are a necessity. Another editor defends the social use of wine for the same reason. The same apologies are made for the excesses of vice in our American mining communities, hastily thrown together in large numbers, as if men might be so situated as to excuse their immoralities.

CHRISTIAN CONGRESS IN BOSTON.

A Congress of Churches will be held in Tremont Temple, Boston, December 11 and 12, 1889, to consider the relation of the Secret Lodge system to Civil Liberty and the Christian Religion.

Rev. A. J. Gordon, D.D., Pastor Clarendon Street Baptist Church, Boston, will preside at the opening meeting.

The following speakers have agreed to be present and address the congress during its sessions: Dr. A. A. Miner, Boston; Dr. O. P. Gifford, Boston; Dr. I. J. Lausing, Worcester; Dr. D. McAllister, Pittsburgh; and President Charles A. Blanchard of Wheaton.

All churches or other Christian assemblies accepting Christ as the perfect example and atoning sacrifice for sin, are respectfully requested to be represented by delegates at this Congress, and all persons desiring to hear a candid discussion of the subject are cordially invited to attend.

Signed by Rev. A. J. Gordon, D.D., Rev. A. A. Miner, D.D., Prof. L. T. Townsend, D.D., Rev. N. Foynton, H. L. Hastings, Rev. James M. Gray, D.D., Rev. J. W. Hamilton, D.D., Rev. Wm. Elliott Griffiths, D.D., Rev. O. P. Gifford, all of Boston, and fifteen other pastors.

THE HOME.

THANKSGIVING.

Thanks be to God! to whom earth owes Sunshine and breeze,
The heath-clad hill, the vale's repose,
Streamlet and seas.
The snowdrop and the summer rose,
The many-voiced trees.

Thanks for the darkness that reveals
Night's starry dower;
And for the sable clouds that heals
Each fevered flower;
And for the rushing storm that peals
Our weakness and Thy power.

Thanks for the sweetly lingering might
In music's tone;
For paths of knowledge, whose calm light
Is all Thine own;
For thoughts that at the Infinite
Fold their bright wings alone.

Yet thanks that silence oft may flow
In dew-like store;
Thanks for the mysteries that show
How small our lore;
Thanks that we here so little know,
And trust Thee all the more.

Thanks for the gladness that entwines
Our path below;
Each sunrise that incardines
The cold, still snow;
Thanks for the light of love that shines
With brightest earthly glow.

Thanks for the sickness and the grief
That none may flee;
For loved ones standing now around
Thy crystal sea;
And for the weariness of heart
That only rests in Thee.

Thanks for Thine own thrice-blessed Word,
And Sabbath rest;
Thanks for the hope of glory stored
In mansions blest;
And for the Spirit's comfort poured
Into the trembling breast.

Thanks, more than thanks, to Him ascend
Who died to win
Our life, and every trophy rend
From death and sin;
Till, when the thanks of earth shall end,
The thanks of heaven begin.

—Frances R. Havergal.

OLD THANKSGIVING TIMES.

Of all our national holidays, writes Geoffrey W. Christine, in the Evangelical Messenger, none is now more universally or more joyously celebrated than that of Thanksgiving Day. Though of New England origin, and for many years confined almost exclusively to that section, it has slowly, but surely, extended itself all over our great country.

We are indebted for it to the Pilgrim Fathers, who may be said to have celebrated it for the first time upon the completion of their first harvest at Plymouth in 1621, when Governor Bradford sent out four fowls in search of game, that they "might, after a more special manner, rejoice together." But fasts were much more common among those hardy Puritans than feasts, though they occasionally observed a general Thanksgiving Day for some specially propitious occurrence. It is a thoroughly established fact that by the year 1680 it had become a fixed custom for the governors of the colonies of Plymouth and Massachusetts Bay to appoint a Thanksgiving Day late in the autumn of every year, a usage that soon extended to all the other New England colonies.

The adoption of this custom outside of New England was very slow. How slow will be readily understood from the fact that as recently as 1855 it was considered a remarkable event in Virginia, when Governor Johnson recommended the observance of a Thanksgiving Day, and that Governor Wise refused to appoint one in 1857 on the ground that he had no authority to interfere in religious matters. It was not regularly appointed by the governor of New York State until 1817.

During the Revolutionary War Congress annually recommended a general Thanksgiving Day. Washington proclaimed one in 1789, on the adoption of the Constitution, and another in 1795, for the suppression of the whisky insurrection in western Pennsylvania, while Madison proclaimed one for the peace with England in 1815. After Madison, Abraham Lincoln was the first President to proclaim a Thanksgiving Day, and he did so in 1862 and 1863 for war victories. In 1864 he proclaimed a Thanksgiving Day in November for general blessings, and his example of that year has since been annually followed by every one of his successors, and by nearly every State governor down to the present time.

But, popular as Thanksgiving Day now is throughout the length and breadth of this land, it is in New England that it still continues to be what it has been for more than two centuries, the greatest and most eagerly anticipated holiday of the entire year. The old Puritans and their descendants, who so long frowned justly and severely upon Christmas—which, indeed, many of the latter still continue to do, refusing to it any recognition whatever—found an excellent substitute for its hilarity in Thanksgiving Day.

For at least a week before the important occasion all was activity in an old-fashioned, rural New England household. A bushel or more of the best wheat was sent to mill to be converted into flour. Great rounds of beef were chopped up into mince meat. Cart-loads of yellow pumpkins, with an abundance of milk, spices, ginger, molasses and sugar, were made up into pumpkin pies. An abundance of turkeys, chickens, and geese were killed and made ready for roasting. A pair of immense plum-puddings were baked in the largest-sized earthen pots, with Indian puddings and custard puddings to match, while there was baking of pound cake, plum cake and sponge cake from morning till night.

From its very beginning divine worship was an important feature of the day's observance, and the term "divine worship" meant something very different in rural New England in old Colonial days, and even for some forty or fifty years afterward, from what it means now. A great majority of the members of the religious congregations of that time lived at a considerable distance from the meeting-house, and had to be up bright and early on Thanksgiving morning to prepare for their long drive through "a nipping and an eager air," for the weather in New England is often bitterly cold by the middle of November, and it was no uncommon thing to ride to "Thanksgiving meeting" in a sleigh.

On Thanksgiving, and on all other feast and fast days, as well as on the Sabbath, there were held two services—morning and afternoon—each of some three hours' duration, and for places of rest and refreshment during the noon intermission between them, there were erected, in the immediate vicinity of the meeting-house, for the accommodation of distant worshipers, small buildings called "Sabbath-day houses." These structures were usually built and held in partnership by two families, and consisted of two rooms some ten or twelve feet square, with a chimney between them having a fireplace in each apartment.

On Thanksgiving morning a bountiful supply of good cheer was stowed away in the wagon or sleigh that was to convey a household to meeting. Arriving in the vicinity of the sacred edifice, the "Sabbath-day house" was first visited and the provisions deposited there. A fire was then lighted, and soon all were thoroughly thawed out and well warmed after their long, cold ride. At 9 o'clock, the hour for worship, they were ready to sally forth and shiver in the cold during the three-hour morning service, for the "meeting-houses" or churches of those days were wholly unwarmed by artificial heat of any kind. As a consequence the minister preached in his overcoat and mittens, and when the services drew near to an end on a cold day, everybody was anxious to escape from the chilling atmosphere of the church and seek warmth in their adjacent homes, or "Sabbath-day houses" as soon as possible.

Apropos of this, a good anecdote is told of the Rev. Mr. Milton, a very eccentric man, who was one of the early pastors of that Congregational church at Newburyport, Mass., within whose walls lie the remains of the famous English evangelist, George Whitefield. One bitter cold Thanksgiving Day Milton had scarcely pronounced the "amen" of the benediction before the door of every pew was swung open and its occupants made a hasty rush for the aisles. But their unseemly haste was checked when their eccentric pastor leaned over the pulpit and cried out, in his peculiar nasal voice, "Ye needn't hurry; your turkies and mince pies won't get cold."

At noon the family returned to the "Sabbath-day house" where a warm room received them and where their Thanksgiving dinner was cooked and eaten, a blessing being invoked and thanks returned by the head of the family. The morning sermon formed the chief topic of discussion, all being allowed the utmost freedom in their remarks. A long prayer was offered by some one present, and then all returned to the meeting-house for another three-hour service.

The following quaint account of an old Colonial Thanksgiving church service and dinner is contained in a letter written in the year 1714, by Rev. Lawrence Conant, of the Old South Parish in Danvers, Mass., and still preserved as a most precious heirloom:

"Ye Governor was in ye house, and Her Majesty's commissioners of ye customs, and they set together in a high seat by ye pulpit stairs. Ye Governor appears very devout and attentive, although he favors Episcopacy and tolerates ye Quakers and Baptists. He was dressed in a black velvet coat, bordered with gold lace; and buff breeches with gold buckles at ye knees, and white silk stockings. There was a disturbance in ye galleries; where it was filled with divers Negroes, mulattoes and Indians, and a Negro call'd Pomp Shorter, belonging to Mr. Gardner, was called forth and put in ye broad isle, where he was reproved with great carefulness and solemnity. He was then put in ye Deacon's seat, between two Deacons, in view of ye whole congregation; but ye sexton was ordered by Mr. Prescott to take him out, because of his levity and strange contortion of countenance (giving grave scandal to ye grave Deacon), and put him in ye lobby under ye stairs; some children and a mulatto women were reprimanded for laughing at Pomp Shorter. When ye services at ye meeting house were ended ye council and other dignitaries were entertained at ye house of Mr. Epes, on ye hill near by, and we had a bountiful Thanksgiving dinner, with bear's meat and venison, the last of which was a fine buck, shot in ye woods near by. Ye bear was killed in Lynn woods, near Reading. After ye blessing was craved by Mr. Garrish, of Wrentham, word came that ye buck was shot on ye Lord's Day, by Pequot, an Indian, who came to Mr. Epes with a lye in his mouth, like Ananias of old; ye council thereupon refused to eat ye venison, but it was afterward agreed that Pequot should receive forty stripes save one, for lying and profaning ye Lord's Day, and restore Mr. Epes ye cost of ye deer; and, considering this a just and righteous sentence on ye sinful heathen, and that a blessing had been craved on ye meat, ye council all partook of it but Mr. Shepard, whose conscience was tender on ye point of venison."

A REAL RICH THANKSGIVING.

Little Mac woke up as a sunbeam struck him, and turned his cheek to it lovingly. The sunbeam came through a dirty, cracked window, and the window was in a dirty, cracked house. As for the street, I couldn't begin to tell you what that was like. There were rum-shops in it; after that you don't need to have me tell you how rickety the houses were, and what a battered, mouldy look the old place came to wear, to say nothing of the men and the women and children. O, the poor little children!

"Sunshine, Sally!" called little Mac, crawling further into the "shine" and stretching out his little blue claws to get them warm.

"Go to sleep, Mac!" said Sally, crossly. "We'll wake up soon enough! It's cold when you're awake!"

So Mac lay still in the sunshine and thought about things in his queer, wondering fashion.

The sunshine didn't warm him much after all, and there wasn't much comfort in his one poor little ragged blanket. He shivered and "wished 'twould be hotter."

"Sally!" he called again pretty soon.

He had his little red nose close to the glass, as if he was trying to see with it. There were the most wonderful things to see out there, and he nearly froze his nose trying to do it.

"Sally!" he cried eagerly, "you never saw so many turkeys! Come, look! Here's a man got one! Here's a man got one! Two men got one! Boy! 'Nother boy! 'Nother turkey got one! Sally, you'd just better come quick, 'fore they're all gone!"

"Go to sleep, Mac!" scolded poor Sally, covering up her ears. "It's nothin' only Thanksgivin'."

It comes every year. I've seen more turkeys'n you ever—eat!" she finished moderately, with a half-laugh at her own humor.

"This is a real rich Thanksgivin', I guess!" murmured Mac to himself, for want of a better listener. "O, ain't it jolly, though, to go carrying home turkeys and lots of things in bundles with strings round 'em, and plenty of real, nice warm fire and everything! 'And the little ones picked the bones, O!'" he cried, humming a nursery tune that he heard the Irishwoman down stairs crooning every day to her baby.

"Sally, why don't we have Thanksgivin'?"

"'Cause we're poor folks, that's why!" cried Sally, passionately, springing up in bed and upsetting Kate and Larry, who were cuddling together to keep warm. "'Cause our father gets drunk, that's why! 'Cause we ain't got any fire nor any clothes nor anything to eat that ain't turkeys, that's why! And nobody cares!"

The last word was swallowed up in a great sob, and the frightened children looked on aghast while Sally hid her discouraged, frowzy head in the ragged quilt and gave way to a despairing tempest of tears.

What was the matter? What had happened to Sally? It was bad enough to be hungry and cold and have your father beat you. But there was always Sally to go to—dear, scolding, jolly, cross Sally. Cross or jolly, she was the one to go to—the little mother that held the house together.

"I—guess—God—cares, don't he?" faltered Mac, helplessly. He didn't know what else to say, so he said that. I don't think he had much active faith in God just that minute. Mac felt as if the foundations were moved if Sally gave up.

"No, he don't!" cried Sally, vehemently, shaking her long black locks. "O, I don't know! It's wicked to talk so! Mother didn't use to! But nobody cares!" taking refuge in generalities. "O, I am tired taking care of these babies, and not any mother to go to!"

"You're the mother!" cried Mac, coming out of his bewilderment as Sally softened. "The best mother in the world! Us boys are going to grow up and take care of you. I'm going to buy you a yellow satin dress with ruffles—"

"And a splendid pink bonnet!" chimed in Larry, tucking his head into her hair.

"An' a pall-sol!" cooed Katie, hugging her consolingly.

"Get under the clothes, you little goosies!" scolded Sally, laughing and crying. "I want a parasol this weather! I'll get up and dress me, and we'll have a Thanksgivin'—"

"A real rich one?" cried Mac, who believed Sally could do no anything.

"Yes," said Sally, cheerfully, "with nice bread. There's a whole half-loaf. You know father, he said he'd bring us some more by-m-by, and he's been gone these three days. We'll eat it anyhow; it's Thanksgivin'."

Sally put on her shoes. She kept her clothes on at night to keep warm; so there wasn't much trouble dressing. Then she hunted the woodbox over and peeped behind the doors and under the bed, and even looked hard at the table-legs, but there really wasn't a thing to burn; so she turned her back to the hungry little stove, and told the children to get together in one bed to keep warm, and began to tell stories. O, what stories! Bears and lions and tigers—a whole menagerie! The children were soon laughing and screaming with delight at the stories, and at Sally jumping round, illustratively for the double purpose of amusing them and keeping herself warm. She pulled the black table up close to the bed and spread a newspaper for a tablecloth, and put on all the dishes they owned, and began to cut up the half-loaf of bread into a Thanksgiving dinner with half a dozen courses.

"O, ain't it jolly!" cried little Mac, rapturously smacking his lips over a make-believe bit of chicken. "I'll take the wishbone, thank you, ma'am!"

"Can't have it, sir!" said Mother Sally, severely, handing the baby an imaginary wishbone. "It's girls first whilst I'm your mother!"

"O, now, gimme a drumstick!" coaxed Larry, holding out his plate for a bone, and gnawing the crust he got with satisfaction.

"Ain't it fun?" cried Mac, again. "'Tis a real Thanksgivin'—as real as can be. Tell some more stories, Sally—a big beary one!"

"Well," said Sally, who was willing to run around a little, "once a bear was running round a stump after his tail, this way—"

"Ouch!"

This remark of Sally's was in her own person, without any regard to the bear-story. In "running round the stump" with arms outspread, she unexpectedly clasped the open door in her arms and bumped her nose.

That door wasn't open a minute ago. But it was now; and there was somebody behind it.

Sally's heart grew cold as ice when she saw it was her father. There he was; and there he had been, no doubt; for nobody knows how long.

She tried to think what they had been doing. Would he be "mad?" Would he beat them?

All at once Sally looked again and saw that he had been crying. Crying! She had seen him cross; seen him drunk; seen him angry, sulky, discouraged; she never saw him cry before. With a warm impulse she reached up her arms and kissed him.

"That's what killed me!" he used to say afterward, when he was a sober man, telling his touching little story in the reform club.

"Babies!" he said at last, when he was able to say anything, "I guess we'll have a better Thanksgiving than this in a minute! Jump into your clothes, Larry, and go get some wood. Where's your shoes?"

"Here!" said Sally, untying her's in a twinkling.

"Put on a basin, Sally, against I get back with some eggs and some crackers."

Larry was back before he was, and Sally had the fire going and the bed made, and Katie and Mac dressing when her father came back with his eggs and crackers. In fifteen minutes they had finished everything but the egg shells.

"Now," said the father, "for Thanksgiving!"

He opened the door, and there was a turkey as big as the biggest one in Mac's procession in the morning, and beside it were turnips and potatoes, and squash pies from the bake-shop, and mince turnovers and red cranberries, and the "plummiest" kind of plum-pudding.

He didn't let them have half time enough to shout over it, but held on to the children while Sally ran off down stairs with the turkey for the Irishwoman to show her how to "fix" it.

All that long afternoon they had the fun of baking it and tasting it and smelling it and longing for it, and just at the very last inch of their patience Sally announced, with a flourish of the gravy-spoon, that "the old fellow was done!"

Then the hubbub! Then the hullabaloo! the getting to the table! the getting into chairs!

"O, ain't it nish!" said Katie, sucking a real wishbone.

"It's a real rich Thanksgivin'," said Mac, in his old formula; and Larry chimed in with his purr of satisfaction. But Sally had the deepest thought of all. 'Twas when they couldn't possibly eat any more that father took a pledge out of his pocket and said if they'd be still he'd read them a bit of something; and when he had read it he gave the pledge to Sally to keep. And then they kissed him, from Katie up, and Katie spied the little blue ribbon in his buttonhole and wanted one herself, the cunning little thing. And Sally put her tired young head down among the dishes and cried, she was so glad.

"I'm thinking how I said in the morning that nobody cared," she whispered to her father, when he came round to comfort her, "and there was Somebody caring all the time."—The Well Spring.

A life full of good works is the only way on thy part to answer the mercy of God extended to thee. God hath had mercy on thee and hath saved thee from all thy distresses. The heart that is fullest of good works hath in it least room for Satan's temptation. Every promise in the Bible is thine to strengthen, quicken and encourage thy heart. Bunyan.

The older I grow the more comes back to me the words of the catechism which I learned when a child, and the fuller and deeper their meaning becomes: "What is the chief end of man? To glorify God, and enjoy him forever."—Thomas Carlyle.

Flatter not thyself in thy faith to God, if thou wantest charity for thy neighbor: and think not thou hast charity for thy neighbor if thou wantest faith in God—when they are both wanting: they are both dead if once divided.

THANKSGIVING.

Sweet was the song of the robin,
Blithe was the hum of the bee,
In the day when the drift of the blossom
Was light as the foam of the sea.
Then deeply was cloven the furrow,
And gayly they scattered the seed,
Who trusted that rainfall and sunshine
Would surely be given at need.

The robin hath flown to the tropic,
The honey-bee flitteth no more,
The reaper hath garnered the harvest,
And the fruit and the nuts are in store.
The flame hath died out on the maples,
We tread on the loose-lying leaves,
And the corn that was sturdy and stalwart
Is gathered and bound into sheaves.

And sweeter than music of springtime,
And fuller of jubilant mirth,
Are the strong-tided chorals o'erflowing
From hearts where thanksgiving has birth.
The songs of the home and the altar,
The gladness of children at play,
And the dear love of households united
Are blending in praises to-day.

For pasture-lands folded with beauty,
For plenty that burdened the vale,
For the wealth of the teeming abundance,
And the promise too royal to fail.
We lift to the Maker our anthems,
But none the less cheerily come
To thank Him for bloom and fruition,
And the happiness crowning the home.

Oh, the peace on the brow of the father,
The light in the mother's clear eyes,
The lilt in the voices of maidens
Who walk under dream-curtained skies.
The dance in the feet of the wee ones,
And the sparkle and shine in the air!
The year has no time like Thanksgiving—
A truce to our fretting and care.

Sweet was the song of the robin,
Blithe was the hum of the bee,
In the day when the drift of the blossom
Was light as the foam of the sea;
But sweeter the silence of autumn,
That maketh a space for the strain
Of the joyance of home, when the harvest
Is gathered from hillside and plain.

TEMPERANCE.

THE ROOT OF THE EVIL.

In my early days Wendell Phillips was the man of all men who said words that made men jump with joy or howl with rage. While speaking he looked like a statue—made no gestures, but gave utterance to thoughts that stirred others. Here is one of them:

"Intemperance cannot be cured by sermons. The rum-seller is the root of the evil, and until it is made a crime to sell intoxicating beverages, intemperance will continue to exist."

Years have rolled by since Mr. Phillips uttered the above words. At that time they could not be successfully combatted, and they are as true to-day as they were then. Truth is truth, and time only helps to make the truth stronger and more impressive.

"Intemperance cannot be cured by sermons."

I wish it could be, because if sermons could rid the nation of the curse it would have disappeared long ago. It cannot be preached out of the land. Preaching is good, as far as it goes, that is, if it is good, and there cannot be too much of it. But if the work of reform be left to the preachers alone, the curse will grow and increase every year in the future as it has done in the past.

"The rum-seller is the root of the evil."

If there were no rum-sellers there would be no drunkards. That is plain enough. And the rum-seller will go on selling rum in spite of all the sermons preached as long as the sermon-listeners vote to grant him the right to sell. Of course he will—why not? The only thing the rum-seller is afraid of is that the sermon will take effect on the hearts of the hearers and bring forth the fruits of righteous indignation at the ballot-box. But there is no danger of any such thing happening if the preacher votes contrary to what he preaches. —Geo. R. Scott in New York Witness.

If you would relish food, labor for it before you take it; if enjoy clothing, pay for it before you wear it; if you would sleep soundly, take a clear conscience to bed with you. —Franklin.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Why the Queen of Sheba visited Solomon, vs. 1-3. That she was one of the most remarkable women that ever lived, and that her kingdom lay to the south at a great distance from Jerusalem, is nearly all that we know definitely about the Queen of Sheba. Our chief point of interest lies in her reason for starting off on so long and perilous a journey to visit a sovereign whom she could know only by report. That it was a most remarkable undertaking is proved by our Saviour's use of her example to warn the careless and indifferent that the earnestness of this heathen queen to learn the things of the kingdom will be their condemnation in the day of judgment. For she did not seek Solomon to learn maxims of political wisdom, or to be taught science and philosophy. It was "his fame concerning the name of the Lord" which attracted her. She knew nothing of what we call to-day "the higher education of woman," but she evidently felt that to wield her sceptre righteously she needed to know more about the character and will of that Supreme Ruler of whom she was only the viceroy; and woman can never be a true queen over her kingdom until she has learned divine wisdom in the school of Christ. "Solomon told her all her questions," so a greater than Solomon admits woman to his school under the same conditions as her brother man. Heathenism always assigns her an inferior place, and Masonry shows its heathen origin in nothing more plainly than in its treatment of woman. Had Solomon really been the Grand Master of a lodge at Jerusalem, as Masonic tradition makes him, here was a subject on which, however, the queen might question him; he would have been obliged to be silent or lie, because she was a woman and a cowan, and therefore not privileged to receive Masonic light.

2. The effect of her visit, vs. 4-9. He is the truest scientist, the wisest philosopher, the noblest thinker, the effect of whose learning is to lead men's thoughts in praise to the Source of all wisdom. It was not the mere material abundance of Solomon's court which so deeply impressed the Queen of Sheba; she did not call his servants happy because they were clothed in soft raiment and lived delicately, but because they stood where they could be in continual communication with such heaven-inspired wisdom. And in an infinitely deeper sense, happy are the servants of the Heavenly King; they who stand continually before him, and can have his counsel in every perplexity. So it is not material greatness which exalts a nation, and renders the subjects of its government worthy to be called happy. But those people may rightly be termed blessed whose laws and institutions show that their rulers are endowed, like Solomon, with divine wisdom. "A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth," neither does the true life of a nation. "Therefore made he thee king to do judgment and justice." This is the end of all real kingdom, and the fact is not altered, only emphasized, when the kingly power is vested in the people. It is not consistent with this high end to license the saloon to make widows and orphans, or to withhold from men of any race or color the protection of just and equal laws.

3. Their mutual gifts, vs. 10-13. Like the Queen of Sheba, we must seek the King with a gift, not of gold or spices, but of ourselves. And like her we may have all our desire, whatsoever we ask. The only limitation is our much or little faith. Let us come boldly unto the King's throne with our choicest offerings, and let us not ask for small blessings when we can just as well ask and receive the largest ones for body, mind and spirit.

HELPFUL THOUGHTS FROM PELOUBET'S QUARTERLY.

THE HALF HAS NEVER BEEN TOLD.—Every one who visits the kingdom of Religion joins with the Queen of Sheba in saying that they did not believe the half that was told them, but they now find that all that was told them was not half of the truth. Irreligious men do not and cannot conceive the full blessedness of the religion of Christ. They do not believe what Christians say of it. It seems to them the exaggerated utterance of excited feeling. And yet Christians cannot express to them one half the true glory, and peace, and heavenliness of Christ in the soul.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—The Philadelphia Ledger of Nov. 4 says: A union missionary meeting took place yesterday afternoon at the Chambers Presbyterian church, to bid farewell to Rev. Arthur T. Pierson, D. D., who is about to leave this country for Europe. Rev. Thomas A. Hoyt, D. D., pastor of the church, presided, and Rev. George D. Baker, D. D., pastor of the First church, read the Scriptures and led in prayer. Rev. Dr. Hoyt, in a few introductory remarks, said the occasion was no ordinary one; Rev. Dr. Pierson was going to Scotland to labor in the same way that Dr. Duff did here. He goes by their invitation and from their knowledge of his labors in the cause.

—The General Missionary committee of the Methodist church reports that the receipts for the year ending Oct. 31, 1889, were $1,130,137, or $129,556 more than the previous year. Appropriations have been made as follows: For home and foreign missions, $1,126,000, 45 per cent for the home and 55 per cent for the foreign missionary societies; for incidentals and annuities, $31,775; for the contingent fund, $25,000; for office expenses, $25,000; for publications, $10,000; for Dallas (Oregon) defective land claims, $8,000; for Upper Sandusky, $2,000. Total, $1,225,775.

—The New York Sun says: "General Wager Swayne, Jay Gould's lawyer, told an audience of men in Association Hall yesterday why he believed in the Gospel. He says that many years ago, while conducting a law case in the West, he met Bob Ingersoll, who was one of the counsel on the other side. Ingersoll sent him one of his infidel publications, which he acknowledged, but did not reply to, as he felt argument would be useless, there being no common ground on which they could combat. He had always been a believer, but had believed blindly, accepting the doctrines of Christianity because he was told they were true. Ingersoll's book set him to thinking, and he has since believed intelligently; he has learned from experience that a doer of Christ's will knows of the doctrine, and that the Saviour is manifested in him. General Swayne is a member of St. George's P. E. Church. He teaches a Bible class on Sunday afternoons in Temperance Annex Hall, in Fourth Avenue, opposite the Cooper Institute.

—An evangelistic movement of a very unusual character is attracting some attention in London just now. Efforts have repeatedly been made to increase Christian influence in the great East End, and innumerable societies have been formed with that object in view. The present movement, however, seeks to reach the West and fashionable end of London. In other words, a society of good people has been formed, the avowed purpose of which is to seek the conversion of the people of the West End. The plan adopted in the furtherance of this purpose by the members or agents of the society is to make personal visits upon people in the West End and seek by direct intercourse to interest them in religion. It is asserted that all the houses in fashionable London, not excluding Marlborough House, the residence of the Prince of Wales, will be visited in this way.

—A converted Chinaman on our Pacific coast sold himself as a coolie in New Guinea, for the sake of working among his own countrymen. Before he died, he was the means of the conversion of two hundred of his companions. The work in New Guinea has been wonderfully accelerated by such heroic lives.

—The Indian Witness says of the railway: "It is civilizing and commercializing, and even Christianizing, India in a way undreamed of, at least by the officials who promote it. Like public drinking-taps, it is a caste-breaker. Grumbling Brahmins, setting greater store by price than piety, ride third-class, cheek-by-jowl with despised Sudras, and seem surprised that they survive the shock. All castes crowd and jam the platforms and carriages, each rubbing shoulders with the other in a way genuinely democratic. The high and low meet together, and the process has an inevitable leveling tendency."

—Rev. J. E. Rankin, D. D., of Orange, N. J., who occupied the pulpit of New England Congregational Church in Chicago last Sunday, was Friday unanimously elected President of Howard University by the board of trustees to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Dr. W. W. Patton, for eleven years President of the institution.

—The Congregational Church is the first one to legislate on the subject of the World's Fair. A Maine man was thoughtful enough to suggest to the recent National Council that an exhibit of what Congregationalism had done for the world would be proper and politic, and the council so ordered.

all citizens of the United States, and says: "If China does not retaliate it will be because her officials are more independent of popular opinion than our political parties."

—Rev. Francis E. Clark, founder and president of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, disapproves the movement for paid State secretaries in Y. P. S. C. E. work. He pronounces the scheme contrary to the spirit and purpose of the society, needless and too expensive. Moreover, the platform of principles to which the society is pledged forbids it.

MORMON MASONRY.

THE DARK OATHS AND SECRETS OF THE ENDOWMENT HOUSE.

The following dispatches have been startling the whole country during the past week:

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, Nov. 14.—Many applications for naturalization have been made to the court here in anticipation of the municipal election, and, objection having been made to the naturalization of polygamists and other Mormons on the ground that no Mormon who has taken the oaths in the Endowment house can be a loyal citizen, the court heard testimony in regard to the charge.

John Bond swore that he had to go through the Endowment house in order to be married in 1868. He was required to take the obligations of the Aaronic priesthood, by which he covenanted to obey every doctrine of the church, especially those in opposition to the United States, under penalty of having his throat cut and his tongue torn out. Then he was required to take an oath to avenge the blood of Joseph Smith on this nation, and to teach this doctrine of revenge to his children and his children's children to the latest generation.

SAW THE DEATH PENALTY ENFORCED.

Martin B. Wardell swore that he went through the Endowment house in 1863 or 1864 and again a year later. He took an oath that he would avenge the death of Joseph Smith on this nation from the President down. If he revealed any of the secrets of the Endowment house he was told that his throat would be cut and his bowels torn out. Witness saw the death penalty enforced on a man named Green in 1862, twenty miles west of Green river. "W. H. Dame," he said, "the captain of the train, described the murder, and said that they got about $5,000 from Green. When some began to murmur John W. Young said if we did not shut up we would be served the same way. The next day Dame said Green had apostatized once and now he had apostatized and gone to hell."

Andrew Cahoon swore to the same obligations of avenging the blood of the prophets and to the penalty for divulging secrets. He said the highest allegiance of the Mormon was to the Mormon church or "kingdom of God." Nothing was said in the Endowment house of obedience to the laws of the United States. All were instructed that polygamy was the command of God, and all must indorse it or be damned. He considered that the general teaching of the church was in hostility to the laws of the land. The Mormons regard civil marriage as unauthorized. It is taught that the kingdom of God will be established and all other governments overthrown, and that the United States will be the first to go.

"It was understood," he said, "that we had to sustain the kingdom of God against all other powers—the kingdom of God on earth. The head of the church was its king. Brigham Young proclaimed himself king to the pioneers. I have heard leaders of the church pray for the overthrow of the United States government. It is so common that every child knows it. I have heard Wilford Woodruff, the present head of the church, do it. It is very common for him to do that."

James McGuffie swore to the same facts as to the Endowment oaths and hostility to this nation. All spoke of murders they had either seen or heard of from persons who knew of them, which were committed in consequence of these oaths.

James H. Moyle, the church attorney, swore that there were oaths in the Endowment-house ceremonies, but he refused to tell their nature.

Levi Axtell swore that the penalty for divulging secrets was death. He understood that the setting up of the kingdom of God on the ruins of the United States meant that a Mormon church was to rule.

Nov. 16.—In the Mormon oath cases to-day in court, Wilford Woodruff's prayer at the dedication of St. George's Temple, denouncing the United States government and prophesying its destruction, was introduced; also Orson Pratt's sermon declaring the kingdom of God to be the only legal government on earth and all others unauthorized, and the case rested. The defense introduced Apostle John Henry Smith, who swore that no disloyal oaths were administered. The injunction to avenge the blood of the prophets was general, and did not apply to Joseph and Hiram Smith more than to others. When pressed regarding the throat-cutting and disemboweling penalties, he refused to answer. When he professed obedience to the laws he was asked if he had obeyed the law against polygamy, and declined to answer.

Nov. 17.—John Seaver and Levi Axtell, two apostates, testified to the treasonable character of the Endowment-house oaths, and Seaver described the garments worn by all good Mormons. It consists of an undergarment, which is a tight fit, of white cotton cloth with strings attached where buttons would ordinarily be. There is a slit across the spot covering the heart, another slit across the abdomen, and one cut on each knee. The slit across the heart is to remind the wearer that if he divulges any of the oaths or secrets, or apostatizes, he is to have his heart cut out, and the gash across the abdomen is a reminder that disembowelment will follow a divulgence. The applicants for Endowment honors are also anointed with oil, and various parts of the body when so anointed were particularly prayed for. For instance, Levi Axtell and others swore that when the arm was so oiled a prayer was uttered to the effect that the arm should be made strong, so that it might strike down any one who was an enemy of the church.

Nov. 20.—The investigation as to the oaths taken by Mormons in the Endowment house and the general tendency of the teachings of the church regarding the government was resumed before Judge Anderson this morning. C. W. Penrose, editor of the News, and one of the Mormon leaders, who yesterday refused to answer a question as to how many wives he had, and was given until this morning to do so or go to prison, was the first witness called. The question was again put to him and he flatly declined to answer. The Court said the witness was squarely in contempt and would be committed to the penitentiary until he purged himself. He further stated that hereafter if in the investigation any witness declined to answer and did not put his declination on some legal ground he would be compelled to answer.

Henry W. Lawrence, president of the chamber of commerce, and one of the most prominent business men in the Territory, testified that he became a Mormon in childhood. He came to Utah thirty-nine years ago. He officiated in the Endowment house in this city several years. He was excommunicated in 1869 for having the spirit of apostasy, which was shown by the fact that he questioned the right of the priesthood to dictate in temporal affairs. The Endowment house ritual is not written, he says. In the ceremony neophytes always took the following oath:

"You, each and all of you, agree to avenge the blood of the prophets, Joseph and Hiram, who have sealed their testimony with their blood, and that you will teach this to your children and children's children to the third and fourth generation. This you do in the presence of God and his ministering angels."

Witness said there was another covenant to obey the priesthood in all things, and the penalty of death attached to the violation of these covenants and the revealing of the secrets of the house. In the time of Brigham Young the priesthood was supreme and he controlled the people in all things. The church was in opposition to the government and the feelings of the people are being alienated more and more. Witness and a few others started a magazine to disseminate more advanced ideas. They were tried before a council of priests, and George Q. Cannon acted as the prosecutor. They were excommunicated. Eli B. Kelsey voted against the proposition to excommunicate them, and for that he was himself at once excommunicated upon motion of Brigham Young. Witness said he had studied the character of the church. It was claimed to be a literal kingdom of God, and its jurisdiction extended to all things, and it was expected to control the whole earth in time. Then Christ was to come in person and take charge. Witness was a merchant doing a business of $15,000 to $20,000 a month when excommunicated, and as soon as it became known that he had been cut off his trade fell off a third, and he was socially ostracized by the men who had been intimate with him from childhood.

Mr. Lawrence was cross-examined by the church attorneys, but they failed to shake his testimony on any point. The testimony of such a man is entitled to and will have great weight.

BEWARE OF THE "STYLE."

Many are the social blunders made by those who are in some minute detail ignorant of "the style." It is difficult for the masculine mind to realize that it is really by intention that a lady's smaller belongings, her pencil, vinaigrette and watch, should swing from her belt; the element of recklessness in such a proceeding scarcely appeals to the prudent, who are likely innocently to remonstrate.

"Madam," said a gentleman, courteously; to a lady who was rapidly passing him, "your watch is swinging from your belt."

"Well, sir," rejoined she, with a smile which relieved the words of rudeness, "let it swing."

It is said that a lady prominent in Washington society made a call, with bonnet strings flying, on the wife of a Senator, who said to her as she left: "Excuse me, but your bonnet is untied."

"Oh, that's the style," said the caller, and the hostess blushed at her own ignorance.

Another lady, wearing a dress of camel's hair, was saluted by an acquaintance with the words: "My dear Mrs. Smith, you must have been playing with the cat. Please let me brush your dress."

"You might brush as long as Mrs. Partington need trundle her mop to sop up the Atlantic," said the other, merrily, "and it would do no good. These untidy hairs are woven in."

In the days when trains were worn even in inappropriate places, a little country girl, whose mother only believed in dressing conveniently for walking, visited a fashionable hotel.

"Oh, mamma," whispered she, as she saw a lady sweeping down a garden path trailing some superfluous feet of cloth behind her, "mayn't I go and tell that poor lady her petticoat's coming off?"—Youth's Companion.

THE CABBAGE WAS POISONOUS.

John Cassel and family and Mrs. Hoffman and children, of Indianapolis, guests of Mrs. Cassel, sat down to dinner yesterday and shortly after were attacked with spells of vomiting attended with severe pains in the stomach. Their condition grew so alarming that a physician was hastily summoned. Upon his arrival the doctor expressed the opinion that they had been poisoned, and set about to relieve their suffering as far as it was in his power. Purgatives and emetics were administered freely, and in due time the sick people were resting easily. After the danger point had been passed the doctor began a systematic investigation as to the origin of the trouble, and arrived at the conclusion that it was brought about by eating cabbage that had been sprinkled with Paris green, from the fact that cabbage had been served for dinner, and those that had eaten sparingly of it were but slightly affected, while Mrs. Cassel and the children, who had eaten a considerable quantity, suffered the worst.

HOW TO KEEP SQUASHES THROUGH THE WINTER.—Squashes should go into winter quarters free from all bruises, otherwise they will not keep. In the age of home-spun, squashes kept fairly in the old-style kitchen, where the big back-log and the large bed of coals prevented freezing at night. They were sometimes put upon a shelf, but were oftener suspended by a piece of listing from the ceiling or side of the room. The main thing is a dry temperature, from forty to sixty degrees, and the more even the temperature the better. We have succeeded in keeping squashes in the attic of a furnace-heated house until April. In the coldest days and nights they were covered with a quilt. The varieties were the old-fashioned Crook-neck, the Hubbard and the Marblehead. Squashes do not keep well in a cellar or in the basement rooms of a house. The squash, aside from the excellent pies made from it, is a toothsome vegetable, and ought to be in every home.—American Agriculturist for January.

—In case of sore throat, a gargle of hot water, as hot as the throat will tolerate, is an excellent remedy, especially when there is inflammation or irritation of the membrane at the back. In acute cases, this is said to sometimes give immediate relief. In chronic, long-standing throat troubles—catarrh of throat—it will benefit, if persevered in. One physician says as much as one-half pint should be used at a time; but my rule has been to use until the throat is tired. If the quantity is less, repeat oftener.

CATARRH.

Catarrhal Deafness—Hay Fever.

A NEW HOME TREATMENT.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness, and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N.B.—This treatment is not a snuff or an ointment; both have been discarded by reputable physicians as injurious. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent Free by A. H. DIXON & SON, 337 and 339 West King Street, Toronto, Canada.—Scientific American.

Sufferers from Catarrhal troubles should carefully read the above.

The use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla purifies the blood, stimulates the secretions, and imparts new life and vigor to every function of the body. For nearly half a century, it has remained unrivaled as the best blood medicine ever discovered. Be convinced by a trial.

SPECIFIC OXYGEN—WHAT IT IS

As the word specific means special, then "Specific Oxygen" means special Oxygen. But to be more explicit, "Specific Oxygen" is a portable inhaling treatment for chronic diseases of the Nose, Throat and Lungs. It is especially adapted to diseases of the air passages, and possesses many advantages over other Home Oxygen Treatments:

First—Because of its specific form—it being the only Medicated Oxygen Treatment in use.

Secondly—It affords not only a vital blood and nerve stimulant from the natural power of Oxygen, but the medicated inhalations carry with them an additional local antiseptic treatment, which is especially curative in a large class of chronic diseases of the lungs, stomach and bowels.

Thirdly—The medication being "part and parcel" of the Oxygen, is brought by it into direct contact with the diseased membranes, over and through which the Oxygen passes on its way to the blood.

Fourthly—The medication possesses the properties of a germicide—destroying the propagating germs in Diphtheria, Membranous Croup, Consumption, Bronchitis, Hay-Fever, Asthma, and many other wasting diseases of the Throat and Lungs. These same advantages recommend it over Oxygen Treatments for offensive Catarrhs in the head. The medication kills the Catarrh germs, cleanses and disinfects the membranes, thereby destroying the offensive odor and cutting short the disease. The same pertains to Hay-Fever. It is the only sure cure for these diseases. It is not a patent medicine. Write for Manual. SPECIFIC OXYGEN Co., Nashville, Tenn.

THE EFFECTS OF DIFFERENT WHEELS ON ROADS.

The character of the vehicles which are used upon a roadway has a great influence upon its endurance to the beat of the wheels. With the same burden a two-wheeled cart does far more damage to the road than one of four wheels, and this because of the suddenness in the motion of the wheels and their irregular, twisting movement in the trackway. Where the axles are short and the wheels close together the damage to all, save turnpike-ways, is greatly increased, for the reason that there is no chance for the growth of grass between the treadway of the wheels and the footway of the horses. This principle appears to have been recognized in some parts of the country. Thus in the neighborhood of Boston, where the ways are made solid by macadam or other rubble, the distance between the wheels is generally about five and one-half feet; while in the sandy-road district of Cape Cod the length of the axle is usually half a foot greater. The greatest defect of our American carriages is that for a given weight of carriage and burden the tires of the wheels are extremely narrow. It is true that on ill-conditioned and muddy roads a narrow wheel-tread is advantageous for the reason that the thick mud has a less extended hold when it wraps around the felloes and spokes; but with this arrangement the interests of the roadway are sacrificed to the convenience of the individual who drives upon it. These narrow wheels, with tires often not more than an inch in diameter, cut like knives into the road-bed and so deepen the ruts. If we could require that no vehicle should have a tire less than an inch and a half in diameter, and that all springless carriages should have tires at least two inches in diameter, increasing in width with the burden, we would secure our ways against a considerable part of the evils from which they suffer.—From "The Common Roads," by Prof. N. S. Shaler, in October Scribner.

WHAT BAD ROADS COST.—Good roads have a money value which Prof. J. W. Jenks makes clear in his "Road Legislation for the American States." Illinois has dirt roads, like Pennsylvania. They are a little more systematically drained than ours are, but there is the counterbalancing disadvantage that a prairie soil makes a worse foundation than our hilly and mountainous country. On Illinois roads a full load for a two-horse team can be carried for three months of the year, two-thirds of a load for three months, and half a load for six. Every man who reads this can stop and think how much of the year any country road with which he is familiar is hard enough to wheel over it the full load which two horses can pull over a smooth, hard roadway on which the wheels cut no ruts. If the average road is not as low as in Illinois, it will come near it. The Illinois roads cost $15,346,000 in extra hauling and reduce the value of farms at a distance from railroad depots by $160,000,000. If Illinois spent $250,000,000 on good roads the total interest on this sum would still leave enough of the sum now spent on hauling to build a new State capitol every year, to say nothing of the nervous wear and tear and the prismatic profanity induced by country roads when the frost is coming out. Good roads would save the State its State taxes every year, and the labor misdirected and wasted on roads now would go far towards making good highways.—Philadelphia Press.

—The first thing that strikes the American traveling through the country in Europe is the excellent roads. The next feature that impresses him, if his journey is in the summer, is the absence of weeds. You may travel from one end of Holland or Belgium, in particular, and scarcely see a weed. He is apt to come back disgusted with his own country in this respect. Our highways certainly are a disgrace to a great and rich nation like ours. The ruts, the mud puddles, with a huge stone at the bottom that breaks the axle of the wagon that goes wallowing through the mire to market or to meeting—behold, these are things too familiar. And our ancestors—heaven save their souls—if they needed a hill road, laid it out straight up the backbone of the elevation, without a thought of winding gently around the side of it. Generally the road remains to this day just as they left it. Our farmers are well-to-do and very intelligent. They ought now to take the improvement of American roads seriously in hand. There are books and road-makers that will show them how to compass the improvement. In localities where there are stone and gravel, what so good as the turnpike, with its ditch each side, its grass bordering on living green, from which the thrifty farmer keeps every weed cut? If he has an eye to the beautiful he also plants trees along the way to gladden the traveler. So it is done in Europe. In regions where there is no stone there are other well-known ways of making good roads.—Newark Item.

THAT LITTLE TICKLING.

You have been cautioned many times to do something to get rid of that little tickling in your throat, which makes you cough once in a while and keeps you constantly clearing your throat. Your reply, "Oh, that's nothing," "It will get well of itself," etc., will not cure it, nor will the disease stand still; it will grow worse or better. This trouble arises from catarrh, and, as catarrh is a constitutional disease, the ordinary cough medicines all fail to hit the spot. What you need is a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla. Many people who have taken this medicine for scrofula, dyspepsia, loss of appetite, and other troubles, have been surprised that it should cure this troublesome cough. But to know the actual cause of the cough is to solve the mystery.

Probably nearly all cases of consumption could be traced back to the neglect of some such slight affection as this. The best authority on consumption, says that this disease can be controlled in its early stages, and the effect of Hood's Sarsaparilla in purifying the blood, building up the general health, and expelling the scrofula taint which is the cause of catarrh and consumption, has restored to perfect health many persons on whom this dreadful disease seemed to have a firm hold.

LOOK HERE, FRIEND, ARE YOU SICK?

Do you suffer from Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Sour Stomach, Liver Complaint, Nervousness, Lost Appetite, Biliousness, Exhaustion or Tired Feeling, Pains in Chest or Lungs, Dry Cough, Night sweats or any form of Consumption? If so, send to Prof. Hart, 88 Warren Street, New York, who will send you free, by mail, a bottle of Floralplexion, which is a sure cure. Send to-day.

Dumplings with Royal Baking Powder

No dessert is more delicious, wholesome and appetizing than a well-made dumpling, filled with the fruit of the season. By the use of the Royal Baking Powder the crust is always rendered light, flaky, tender and digestible. Dumplings made with it, baked or boiled, will be dainty and wholesome, and may be eaten steaming hot with perfect impunity.

RECIPE.—One quart of flour; thoroughly mix with it three teaspoons of Royal Baking Powder and a small teaspoon of salt; rub in a piece of butter or lard the size of an egg, and then add one large potato, grated in the flour; after the butter is well mixed, stir in milk and knead to the consistency of soft biscuit dough; break off pieces of dough large enough to close over four quarters of an apple (or other fruit as desired) without rolling, and lay in an earthen dish (or steamer) and steam until the fruit is tender. Bake if preferred.

In all receipts calling for cream of tartar and soda, substitute Royal Baking Powder. Less trouble, never fails, makes more appetizing and wholesome food and is more economical. Royal Baking Powder is specially made for use in the preparation of the finest and most delicate cookery.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

Pension Commissioner Raum lately appointed his son, Green B. Raum, Jr., a chief of division in the pension office at a salary of $2,000 a year. Secretary Noble was much displeased, but allowed the appointment to stand.

Archbishop Ireland was at the White House last week to protest to the President against the course of Indian Commissioner Morgan in removing from office a large number of Catholic teachers in the Indian schools on reservations. The archbishop declared that Commissioner Morgan was unfair to the Catholics, and that all they desired was decent treatment and Catholic teachers for Catholic Indians. The President promised to look into the matter at once.

CHICAGO.

A multitude assembled at Battery D, Saturday evening, to commemorate the Irish patriots, and fervent orators narrated the fate of Allen, Larken, and O'Brien, the Fenian martyrs. An audience of about 2,000 Triangles assembled at Central Music Hall, at the same time, and pretended to celebrate the anniversary of the Manchester martyrs.

A new organization, representing an invested capital of over $25,000,000 and including all the prominent mineral-water spring-owners of the country, was effected at the Grand Pacific last week. The object of the organization is to secure protection by legislation from foreign manufactured mineral waters.

Twenty thousand dollars is what thirty-five persons will pay for the privilege of paying $18,000 for boxes at the Auditorium opera season. The boxes were auctioned off at Central Music hall last week. They were sold for the season of Italian opera beginning Dec. 9 and consisting of twenty-one performances—seventeen evening performances and four matinees. In addition to the premiums paid for the choice of boxes the purchasers will have to pay $500, the upset price of each box.

COUNTRY.

The total loss by fire this year in the United States, up to Oct. 31, was $93,846,000; average loss per day, $308,704; the estimated loss for the whole year is $112,672,760.

A special from Hiawatha, Kan., says that the farmers in that vicinity are burning corn for fuel, finding it cheaper than coal. Corn is sold on the farm at 20 cents a bushel, while the average price of coal delivered at the farm ranges from 21 to 23 cents a bushel.

The sermon of Archbishop Ryan, of Philadelphia, at Baltimore, has caused a great sensation in the City of Mexico, because of the archbishop's support of the rights of the Catholic writers to criticize the faults of priests. Archbishop Labastide has excommunicated a number of persons for such criticism, and charges have been brought against him in Rome for so doing.

A smoke stack just put up by the Fall River (Mass.) Iron Company is said to be the tallest in the world. It is 350 feet high.

According to a London dispatch, an English syndicate proposes to obtain control of the leading springs and health resorts of the United States. An agent of the syndicate, it is said, has already obtained options on many of the leading resorts, including those at Saratoga, N. Y.; Hot Springs, Ark.; Poland Springs, Me.; Togus Springs, Me.; Waukesha, Wis., and the Blue Lick springs of Kentucky. The syndicate has a capital of $25,000,000, and proposes to control the mineral-water trade of the United States.

At Louisville, Wednesday, Michael J. Tiernan, a railway brakeman, who was permanently crippled by a fire caused by a leaking oil barrel, obtained a verdict for $25,000 against the Standard Oil Company.

James Barker, of Chicago, who was imprisoned at Iron Mountain, Mich., for peddling without a license, was on Wednesday awarded $1,000 damages against that city.

A two-story brick dwelling on Robinson street, Braddock, Pa., was blown to pieces by an explosion of natural gas. Two persons were fatally burned and six others seriously injured. The accident was caused by a leak in the main.

The Kentucky Classical and Business College at North Middletown, Ky., was burned early Wednesday morning. The pupils barely escaped in their night clothes. The school had recently been reorganized and a fine building of fifty rooms erected. Loss $40,000; insurance $7,500.

Friday forenoon, in Fulton street, New York, Mrs. Hannah B. Southworth, a widow, shot and killed Stephen Pettus, a millionaire merchant, who was also Secretary and Treasurer of the Brooklyn Union Elevated Railroad. The woman alleges that four years ago her victim drugged and assaulted her; that later he aided in procuring malpractice to hide her shame, and after that failed to keep his promises in other respects. When arrested and examined the woman gave evidence of serious mental trouble.

The warships Chicago, Boston, Atlanta and Yorktown, in command of Admiral John G. Walker, left New York Monday, amid the booming of cannon, for a cruise in European waters.

In York county, Maine, large sales of so-called Jamaica ginger have aroused the suspicions of the prohibitionists, and the discovery has been made that the stuff contains a large amount of alcohol. Sellers of the compound will be prosecuted.

Secretary of State Blaine has authorized the French Cable Company to land cables at Charleston, S. C., which will place the United States in direct telegraph connection with Hayti, San Domingo, and Cuba, and also with the Republics of Central and South America.

A report from Pittsburg says that a syndicate has been formed to control the Monongahela Valley coal region, including the carrying trade. The district named employs 18,000 miners, and 4,300 vessels are used in transporting the coal, the yearly product of which is placed at $15,000,000.

The first Republican convention that ever assembled in Alaska met at Juneau on the 5th of November. Resolutions were passed that they be allowed a delegate to Congress, and for homestead, timber-cutting, and other Territorial laws.

Fifty-nine cotton dealers at New Orleans have estimated this year's crop with an average estimate of 7,500,000 bales. The lowest was 7,200,000, and the highest 7,800,000.

FOREIGN.

The British foreign office is in receipt of dispatches from Zanzibar, stating that Stanley arrived at Mpwapwa on the fifty-fifth day of his journey from the Victoria Nyanza, and the one hundred and eighty-eighth from Albert Nyanza. In addition to those whose names have already been reported, Stanley has with him Herr Hoffmann, Emin Bey's daughter, and Fathers Grault and Schinze of the Algerian mission. Stanley left Mpwapwa on Nov. 12, and will reach the coast by way of Vemba and Mwemi. He has made an unexpected discovery of immense value to Africa in finding an extension of the Victoria Nyanza to the south and west. The utmost southerly reach of this extension is south latitude 2 deg. 38 min., which brings the Victoria Nyanza to a point within 155 miles of Lake Tanganyika, and its area is about 26,900 square miles. Additional information has been received at the foreign office concerning Stanley to the effect that he has with him 750 people. Of these 290 belong to Emin's party, sixty being children. During his march from the Victoria Nyanza the combined party lost only eighteen of its members. Near Usukuma the party had four days' severe fighting with hostile natives, resulting in the rout of the enemy, with many killed.

Sir Henry James, in his address before the Parnell Commission at London, referred to the flight of Patrick Egan as proof of his having been guilty of criminal conduct. He also declared that other evidence of his criminality was the fact of his association with the Phoenix Park murders. Pat. Egan is Blaine's representative in Chili.

The Pope has received in solemn audience the Grand Duchess Catharine of Russia. She brought with her an autograph letter from the Czar. It referred to the appointment of the Russian bishops, whose names will soon be announced. The Czar also stated that it would give him great pleasure to see the red hat bestowed on the Archbishop of Warsaw.

An ovation was given at Rio Janeiro, Nov. 21, to the ministers of Uruguay and the Argentine Republic upon their recognition of the Brazilian Republic. All the pensions granted by the imperial government have been confirmed by the provisional government and an order has been issued that they be paid out of the revenues.

In reply to a suggestion that cable dispatches from Germany stated that there was danger of a division of Brazil into three parts, Minister Valente said that the telegram received to-day was a complete refutation of all such reports. It showed that Brazil was united and that the sentiment of every province was in favor of a republic. It was not pleasing news to most of the countries of Europe, the minister said, to hear that a monarchy had quietly and without bloodshed become a republic.

THE ATTENTION of all to whom this paper may come is called to the article on the BOSTON CONFERENCE, page 9; and also to the discussion of the secret power of Mormonism, which will be one topic presented by an eloquent Pittsburgh pastor at Boston. To a number of friends a few copies of the Cynosure have been lately sent. They are asked to kindly show their approval of the paper by subscribing.

The Fifty-first Congress opened at noon Monday amid the perfume of flowers which adorned the desks of many members. The Senate not receiving the President's message adjourned in half an hour. In the House there was a great rush of spectators to see the return of the Republicans to power in the popular branch of the national legislature. Mr. Reed, of Maine, was elected Speaker without delay, and again both the first and second places of greatest power in the Republic are in the hands of the Republican party. It is predicted of Mr. Reed that he will use his great opportunities in the House to prevent any considerable renewal of the tariff reduction. And except to so conduct affairs as to keep the party in power, it is not obvious what the leading policy of the Government will be. The opportunity has not been so great for years, since the Executive, Legislative and Judicial departments have not for years been wholly controlled by one party.

Last Friday the witnesses had all been examined in the Cronin trial and the pleading began. The last evidence had been discovered to the prosecuting attorney at 10 o'clock that morning. Two knives had been taken from the detective Coughlin by his Clan-na-Gael brother policeman who arrested him. They were locked up and very conveniently forgotten until fear discovered them. They were identified in court by Cronin's saloon-keeper friends as belonging to the murdered man amid great sensation. Coughlin's friends swore they had been in his possession long before the murder. Judge Longenecker, the State's attorney, reviewed the evidence in a logical and forcible manner in a five hours' speech and was followed by Judge Wing who did not conclude his very able plea for the defense till Tuesday. As there are yet three lawyers to speak on each side the jury may not have the case before the last of next week. It seems hardly possible to escape the evidence of guilt on the part of three of the indicted men. Almost every day there has been some reference to secret societies of one name or another, but they are handled as if they were thin-shelled eggs.

The late meeting of the Knights of Labor in Atlanta, Georgia, moved strongly for a union with the Farmer's Alliance. The latter has been represented as an open society in the Northern States, but as secret in the South. A union with an order which strenuously demands "secrecy" and "obedience" could hardly be brought about unless the Alliance is itself secret and accepts the methods of Powderly's order. The latter passed a strong resolution in favor of the Henry George land theories. The Alliance, however, has lately condemned the single tax system. So that they step over the threshold of union with a quarrel brewing. There is nothing in the secret and despotic methods of the Knights of Labor to attract an honest farmer, or to gain for him any substantial victory in the reforms that are of especial importance to American agriculture.

Our able Chicago contemporary, America, slips when in reviewing the Catholic convention at Baltimore: "The reason for the church's continued opposition to the Masonic order, while it squints at really infamous secret societies, is explained by the fact that at the very center of Masonry is to be found the Bible." On the contrary, if the opposition of Rome was because of the Bible, they could not do better than to encourage Freemasonry in degrading it on the one hand to a mere workman's tool, and on the other to the level of the Koran, the Vedas, or any other so-called sacred writing. The Word of God can in no way be more surely destroyed. But Rome has had a quarrel with Masonry from the first, because it has always been the agent of atheism in Romanist countries, and has in those countries been the convenient hiding place of every revolutionary movement against the power of priest and pope.

THE COLLEGES AND PROHIBITION.

BY PRES. C. A. BLANCHARD.

Some time since I addressed to the presidents of one hundred of our leading colleges, East, West, North and South, a circular letter containing the following inquiries:

First. Do you believe total abstinence to be the duty of Christians and patriots at this time and in this country?

Second. Do you believe in the prohibition by law of the manufacture, importation and sale for drinking purposes, of intoxicating liquors?

Third. If you favor the principle of prohibition, do you think that the end can be attained more easily by a separate political organization, or by influence exerted upon existing parties?

Fourth. Do you favor the instruction now called for by law in our common schools concerning the effects of alcoholic and narcotic poisons on the human system?

Fifth. Do you think that the colleges of our nation are doing their duty in regard to this matter? If not, what change can you suggest?

I have received replies from thirty-six presidents of colleges who are not found in any one part of the nation, but are very widely distributed. From Oregon, Mississippi, Ohio, Massachusetts and Maine, with many other intervening States, replies have come. It is encouraging to see that the gentlemen who have replied are almost without exception in favor of total abstinence and legal prohibition. Of all those who have replied only four think that total abstinence is not for them a duty. Of those who believe in total abstinence I think every one believes in legal prohibition. As was to have been expected, the third question divides them quite widely, twelve holding that a separate political organization is the better method of seeking to accomplish the desired result, fourteen holding that the present political organizations will secure it if we use the proper endeavors, and others expressing no opinion. Respecting the fourth question there is a general unanimity of opinion. A very few say that they disapprove the instruction called for by law in our common schools. On the fifth question there has evidently been little or no thought, most of those who have kindly replied to my communication expressing no opinion in regard to the question at all. A few think that our colleges are not doing what they might in regard to this subject. A few believe that they are doing all that they can do.

It will probably be interesting to know the answers of a few representative men in detail, and I submit herewith the replies from widely different points, and from those who differ somewhat in judgment, that the general tone may be understood.

Pres. Van Scoy, of Willamette University, Salem, Oregon, replies as follows: To the first question, "Yes." To the second, "Yes." To the third, "By a separate party." To the fourth, "Yes." To the fifth, "No. Organize and lecture."

Pres. Northrop, of the University of Minnesota, replies to the first question, "Yes." To the second, "Yes, where public sentiment will sustain and enforce the law. No, where legal prohibition means actual free rum." To the third, "Not by a separate political organization." To the fourth, "Yes." To the fifth, "I do not feel certain about this."

Pres. W. A. Candler, of Emory College, Oxford, Ga., answers as follows: First, "I do most emphatically." Second, "I do most steadfastly." Third, "At this stage in the progress of the temperance reform, I do not think a prohibitory party best for the cause of prohibition." Fourth, "Yes." Fifth, "As far as my knowledge extends, the church colleges are doing what they can for the cause of prohibition. In State and private schools there seems to be prevalent an affectation of liberality and breadth which looks upon prohibition as fanaticism. The remedy for this is a deeper culture and a better conscience. In colleges under political control, we cannot look for a united support of prohibition. The constitutions of such institutions will always prevent them taking a decided stand on political moral questions."

Chancellor Spence, of the U. S. Grant University, Athens and Chattanooga, Tenn., replies thus: First, "I certainly believe that total abstinence is the duty at this time and in this country." Second, "I believe in the prohibition of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors for drinking purposes." Third, "I doubt the wisdom of a separate political party at this time. We must win success through the schools, churches and influence upon one of the great existing parties. Prohibition, in my opinion, can only win by being made a special non-partisan contest; all good temperance parties against the opposition. I believe in education. We have a chair in our university, endowed, of Political Sciences and Temperance." It is having a great influence upon our students. I believe that in all our schools this subject should be taught persistently. I do not think our colleges are doing their duty. I think every high-grade school in the land should teach faithfully as they teach mathematics, the rules of Political Science and the Temperance cause. College students will control thought and men in the near future."

Pres. James H. Mason Knox, Lafayette College, Easton, Pa., replies as follows: First, "I do." Second, "I voted the Prohibition ticket, that is, in favor of prohibiting the sale, manufacture, etc., of intoxicants by constitutional enactment. It is right, however, to say that I did this because I would not and could not vote against such enactment, nor would I decline to vote. I was not satisfied that the time had come when the moral convictions of the people would sustain the enactment if it should be passed. And in our country, at all events, it is difficult, if not impossible, to legislate on moral subjects much in advance of the people's convictions." Third, "I am not in favor of a third party. It has not seemed to me to have affected anything but damage to the cause it has at heart. I differ here from many excellent persons for whose opinions I have respect, but I cannot see as they do. Educate the people. Get them to demand the doing away of the saloon, etc., and their voice will be heeded." Fifth, "Colleges as such can do little more than help on the education of the people. How much of this is done directly, I have no means of knowing. I do not choose to judge on any testimony that is before me."

Pres. Wm. DeWitt Hyde, of Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Maine, writes thus: First, "I practice and approve total abstinence." Second, "I believe in prohibition wherever it can be enforced." Third, "I think a regular party the best when one can be found willing to deal squarely with the question." Fourth, "I think temperance education is a good ideal very imperfectly realized by our present method." Fifth, "I think the colleges are far ahead of the average public sentiment in this matter of temperance."

Pres. Chas. W. Eliot, of Harvard University, replies as follows: First, "No." Second, "No." Third, "If I were in favor of the principle of prohibition, I should prefer a separate party organization." Fourth, "No, because much of it is not correct." Fifth, "I do not know what the colleges are doing. Harvard College leaves the subject to voluntary organizations of the students." In a note subjoined to the questions, Pres. Eliot writes thus: "My Dear Sir:—I answer your questions in briefest form, but with all frankness. My belief is that high license and local option are wiser than prohibition as means of promoting temperance."

From Trinity College, Hartford, Conn., I receive this word: In reply to the first question, "No." In reply to the second, "No." No reply to the third. In reply to the fourth, "Yes." To the fifth, "Don't know."

Pres. Warren, of Boston University, replies as follows: To the first question, "Certainly." To the second, "Certainly." To the third, "??." To the fourth, "Certainly." To the fifth, "In part. Nulla dies, etc."

Pres. W. C. Roberts, of Lake Forest University, writes: "I believe total abstinence to be a principle which should guide Christians and patriots. The Scripture ground for it is expedience, but experience has shown it to be the only safe principle. I believe that the state will be compelled to prohibit the sale of intoxicating drinks in self-defense and in justice to those who pay taxes to support families ruined by their use. I do not believe in a third party, but in working within the present party lines. I favor all instruction to the young on the evils of strong drinks. Colleges should do all in their power."

Pres. Joseph Cummings, of the Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill., says: "I believe total abstinence is the duty of Christians and patriots at this time and in this country, and at all times and in all countries. In answer to your second question, I believe in prohibition by law of the manufacture and sale, for drinking purposes, of intoxicating liquors. In answer to your third question, I believe the cause of prohibition can be best advanced, and the end sought more easily attained by a separate political party. Fourth, I favor the instruction now called for by law in our common schools, concerning the effect of alcohol and narcotic poisons. Fifth, I do not think that all colleges are doing their duty in regard to this cause of prohibition, and the great remedy will be to secure such a change of opinion by appropriate influences as will lead college officers to see their duty. I do not think any special legislation is called for, relative to colleges."

Chancellor Carpenter, of Drake University, Iowa, replies: "I do believe that it is the duty of every Christian and every patriot in this country to practice total abstinence. Conditions and tendencies in our time and in this country make this rule imperative." Second, "I do believe in the prohibition of the manufacture, importation and sale of intoxicating liquors for drinking purposes. The welfare of the home, the State and the church demands this." Third, "I believe legal prohibition by the several states and the general government can be soonest and best attained by throwing the temperance vote and influence to that existing party which offers the greatest assurance of giving the best temperance laws. Only in extreme cases, and for the purpose of showing the prohibition strength and determination, do I think it wise to attempt a third party movement. I am a prohibitionist through and through, but we must not attempt more than is practicable at the time. We may lead in the great moral, social and political reforms, but it is unwise for the leaders to go entirely out of sight of those who are expected to follow. Even God, through Moses, permitted certain things because of the hardness of the people's hearts, and we must treat the world as we find it, and make it better as fast as we can. Prohibition, national and world-wide prohibition, is the end toward which our efforts should be directed, but we should remember that great reforms are not wrought in a day." Fourth, "I favor thorough instruction in our schools regarding the effects of alcohol and narcotics on the human system." Fifth, "I do not believe that all of our colleges and other higher institutions of learning are doing their whole duty for the cause of temperance and prohibition, but it is simple justice to the greater number of these schools to say that they are among the foremost in this and all other great reformatory efforts."

Prof. W. M. Thornton, chairman of the faculty of the University of Virginia, replies as follows: "I feel some aversion to replying to the series of questions you propound with the brevity that is necessary, but I desire to indicate my respect for the questioner, and for this reason make the answers seriatim as below: First, Questions of duty must be decided by the individual enlightened conscience. I do not believe total abstinence from wine to be my duty. Second, I do not believe the enactment of general laws prohibiting the manufacture, importation or sale of intoxicating drinks, to be either right or wise. Third, no answer needed. Fourth, I am in favor of well organized instruction on the question indicated. Fifth, I am not intimately enough acquainted with the work of other colleges to be able either to approve or condemn their course in the matter considered. My own efforts have been directed to the attainment of the following regulative enactments: a. High license for towns and cities. b. Local option for country districts. c. Prohibition circles, two to four miles in diameter, about schools and colleges, wherever it is possible to draw them."

Prof. A. B. Hyde, vice-chancellor of the University of Denver, Colorado, writes: "In reply to your first and second, we say yes. To the third, we say that in our State we can now see no hope except in building up a third party, at least to try to make it such as one of the others will respect and adopt, i. e., take prohibition upon itself with such reinforcement as prohibition may bring. The fourth I meet with an emphatic affirmative. As for the fifth, I fear we are not over-zealous, but I think the cause progresses best when we let our students manage it. Their young and generous zeal needs little from us, save guidance and heartening. Let me add that it is cheering to see your interest in this matter, and I hope you may see results most gratifying."

Chas. A. Bessey, acting chancellor of the University of Nebraska, replies thus: "First, I can only say that I believe and make it [total abstinence] my own duty, but do not undertake to dictate to anyone else. Second, yes, where it can be enforced; otherwise, I believe in making use of such restrictive laws as will reduce the evil. Third, in reply to this question, I can only say that I do not know. Fourth, it has seemed to me to be an ill-advised attempt to do a good thing. To require teachers, who frequently are entirely incompetent to deal with the question, to give instruction in so difficult a subject is, to say the least, unwise. Fifth, I do not know."

Prof. F. H. Snow, chancellor of the University of Kansas, writes: "First, I do. Second, I do. Third, by the latter. Fourth, I do."

Pres. Bashford, of Ohio Wesleyan University, says: "In response to the first question, yes. To the second, yes. Third, I am personally in favor of a separate political organization. In response to your fourth question, I say yes. To the fifth, I have so recently come into college work, and know so little of what is being done in other universities, that I am not able to give a definite opinion as to whether the colleges of the land are doing all that could be reasonably expected of them in regard to the principle of prohibition. Certainly, the universities of the land should be leaders and molders of public opinion. I am inclined to think that a far larger proportion of college students believe in the principles of prohibition than an equal number of persons found outside of our universities."

Pres. Sherril, of Bethel College, McKenzie, Tenn., says: "In reply to the first question, I do. Second, yes, by all means. Third, I think that it can be attained only by separate political action. The two existing parties are controlled by the liquor interests, therefore a vote for either party is a vote for liquor. Fourth, yes, by all means. Fifth, some are, some are not. . . . Out of five men in our faculty, four are Prohibitionists from a party standpoint."

I am sure that it would be interesting to all those who are considering this important question, to have the replies of all other college presidents for reading, but the transcription of so many papers might render this article too long, and I think that the extracts already given fairly represent the whole number. It is very encouraging to find so great unanimity of opinion on this important question among the leading educators of our country. The difference in judgment as to the best method of securing this desired end, will no doubt pass away as the discussion continues and the lines are drawn. So far as I am informed, there is but one college or university in the United States which at the present time makes temperance a special department of instruction. Perhaps this will be less to be regretted when the instruction in the common schools, which is now required by law in over thirty-four States and in all the Territories and national schools of the United States, shall have had an opportunity to produce its natural effect upon our educated minds. Certainly, there is in this exhibit of educational opinion occasion for thanksgiving and encouragement to renewed effort.

Wheaton College.

A QUAKER INVESTIGATION.

BY REV. J. D. GEHRING.

As the traveler comes into Lawrence, Kansas, by the A. T. and S. F. R. from Kansas City, he usually asks the question, "What large stone building is that up on the hill?" Some one may answer, "That is the Friends' Yearly Meeting House." It is a beautiful, substantial, and, for their purposes, convenient structure, standing in the midst of an extensive park, beautiful for situation. Here the Friends of Kansas—and, I believe, of adjoining States—meet once a year to transact their ecclesiastical business.

One of these meetings has lately adjourned. It was in every feature a grand meeting. Judging by what I heard in two of their devotional meetings which I attended, it was also a revival meeting in the best sense of the term.

Amanda M. Way of Pleasanton, Kan., led the temperance meeting. What struck me as unique in the report submitted was a tabulated statement of the number of persons belonging to the different Quarterly meetings, who use or sell alcohol in any form, and of those who use tobacco in any form. The money thus wasted by the Friends who compose the Kansas Yearly Meeting was estimated at $5,420. A brother, however, who claimed to know something about the tobacco trade, said that the estimate was too low by about $780. We see here that, as Christians who strive after purity and holiness, the Friends are probably no better, but certainly no worse, than men and women of other church divisions.

The report mentioned several Friends as selling intoxicants "carefully." This word brought out the question from one of the members whether those using tobacco used that also "carefully." Another wanted to know what the word meant anyway. I did not hear the reply; but, it seems to me, it is easily understood here in Kansas. There are only two ways to sell whisky "carefully" in Kansas:

1. To sell it contrary to law. Those who sell it that way are known to be so extremely careful that they are hard to detect in the act; and it is still harder to bring them to conviction and punishment. I would not like to know that any of the Friends belong to this class.

2. To sell according to law. Those who sell under the Pharmacy Act are, and must be, very careful how they sell, and to whom. The buyer must deposit a sworn affidavit with the druggist that the liquor wanted is for no unlawful purpose. Violations are severely punished where detected. I believe the Friends avoid, generally, even this way of selling.

Tobacco and the tobacco-habit were earnestly discussed and emphatically denounced along with the drink habit and traffic. One brother related how he and his brother were one day attacked in the hay field by a huge rattlesnake 18 years old, and how, after he had secured it with his hay fork, his brother put a quid of tobacco with a mouthful of juice into its mouth, and that in two minutes that snake was dead from the effects of the poison.

A lady speaker said she believed the tobacco habit to be hereditary, the same as the drink habit; that a child could not inhale the fumes of tobacco from the breath of its parent, beginning with its earliest infancy, without developing an already existing appetite for the poison.

"Prohibition does not prohibit!" was also discussed. The Hon. John D. Miles of Kingfisher, Oklahoma Territory, told him some of the whisky tribe tried to start the traffic in his town, even before any sort of government had been established; and how he, in his official capacity, put a prompt check upon it. A huge barrel, he said, marked around with large letters, reading: "Sugar drips syrup," was set up in the midst of a great throng of people, and the sale was about to begin, when he was called upon to examine the thing. The judgment he pronounced was: "This big barrel is a big liar—kill him!" The liquor it contained was spilled upon the ground, and prohibition triumphed in Oklahoma.

Henry Stanley Newman of London, England, was also present and spoke in favor of the resolutions. He is a very earnest and eloquent speaker, and one to whom the people seemed to look for good things whenever he rose to speak. Speaking of prohibition in Kansas, he said, in substance: "I rejoice in the outlook in Kansas. Our children will rise up and call us blessed. Let us remember that we are fighting this great battle for our sons and daughters more than for ourselves. The great strength of the liquor traffic is in its money power. The business is immensely profitable. The same is true, to some extent, of the tobacco business." He was in business with his father when a young man, and they sold 15,000 pounds of tobacco per annum at the beginning of their trade. This tobacco went mostly to young people. He went to his father and told him that he could not conscientiously continue selling the stuff. His father said it was the most profitable branch of their business, and it would almost ruin them to quit selling tobacco. But, finally, the father retired and gave him control, and after that he sold not a pound of tobacco. Notwithstanding this "cut-off," they took in more money the first year than any year before. It pays to do right.

William James of Sunderland, England, was another of the eloquent champions who gave us some intensely interesting items and experiences. He was in this country a few years ago as one of a deputation to President Cleveland from the British Parliament in the interest of the "Peace Mission." He and his wife are now in this country on a tour around the world in behalf of this same mission. If space permitted, I would like to give a synopsis of his eloquent address, in which he told us of the African slave trade in connection with the liquor traffic; of the physical degeneracy of some of the native tribes on account of intemperance introduced and propagated by European money sharks; of Japan and its noble people, who also are in danger of destruction from the opium habit and from the pernicious effects of poisonous liquors forced upon them by the people of Europe and the United States. The "free lunch" counter, he said, is perhaps the most dangerous and delusive system of the European and American saloon.

THE ILLINOIS COLLEGE CONTEST.

ADDRESS BY L. M. HIATT, WHEATON COLLEGE.

The history of reform is a story of the world's vacillation. It is a series of cruel inconsistencies. From the time when insulted Innocence was nailed to a wooden cross, and Barrabas the robber was unfettered, till the time when educated Boston incarcerates a preacher of peace, and presents a token of esteem to a brutal prize-fighter, humanity has played the part of Delilah and given its lover over into the hands of the Philistines.

The reformer finds himself in a circle of truths. He is at the center. He must push out on the radii till he touches the circumference of the world's need. Enslaved by its own ignorance or blinded by its own prejudices, humanity stands in its Macedonia of helplessness and stretching forth its hands, cries out for aid. Are there no Pauls to respond?

This convention has no apology to offer for its topic. When any institution threatens the privileges of citizenship; when it tampers with the courts of justice; when, in its secret camp, the cruel death of an honest American is planned, the apology for any Christian convention to offer is, rather, for passing the subject by.

Secret societies differ mainly in name. The same supreme selfishness is the foundation of all. They make the same pretences, appeal to our sympathies in the same way, and are alike in their dangerous tendencies. They are untrue to their claims. Take as an instance of this, the Masonic order. First, it claims to be a handmaid to religion. Well, we must admit that it is hand-made, for its workings prove beyond all doubt that there could be nothing divine about its origin. If it is a handmaid to religion, it must, in order to keep its title, assist religion. True, it does hold its meetings on the same night as church prayer meetings, but in a different place; and, it seems, under different auspices. Once in a while this organization files into church, but it comes not to worship. Oh, no! but merely to stand by the corpse of a brother, and there, in the face of death, flaunt its cabalistic rags and strive to cover itself with glory. Its religious influence is such that after one has undergone it for three or four hours he can't tell the difference between his front gate and the keyhole of his house door.

Its second claim is, that it is a benefit to widows and orphans. If a widow's tear can be dried, or an orphan's back be clothed by a parade of brass bands and a column of white-aproned Hiram Abiffs at a Masonic funeral, then certainly Masonry has found a new method of comforting the bereaved and fatherless, and Christian churches should copy.

Its third plea for recognition is that it is benevolent; and itself acknowledges that it is benevolent only to its own poor. True benevolence draws no such lines of distinction. In its vocabulary the word poor means all of the needy. Masonry's shadowy claim to benevolence means a poor pretence of paying back to the suffering family a part of the money extorted from the head of the family by its system of "dues." But supposing Masonry to be just in its claims of benevolence; the problem remains yet unsolved, why any one, in order to be benevolent, should, for the privilege, pay into the treasury of an institution which is ashamed to open its doors for public inspection.

It claims purity, and permits within its walls language of which a saloon should be ashamed. It claims decency, and leads around a crowded room some unfortunate being, blindfolded and dressed in a half-suit of underclothing. It claims truth, and exhorts the brethren to lie whenever the fortunes or lives of brethren are at stake.

Let any man go down yonder street with a mask on his face, and he would be liable to arrest. The mask is a suspicious circumstance. The mask of secrecy places any of these orders on suspicious grounds, and the investigating police force of public opinion has a right to arrest and to know what is behind that mask. We find behind that mask an enemy to justice.

The judge on the bench not uncommonly recognizes in the prisoner at the bar a member of his own fraternity. The jury, as far as possible, are picked from the ranks of the same secret order, and the results are that the witness perjures himself; the judge gives unwarranted decisions; the jury acquits; and the prisoner goes free. Why? Because they have all sworn under a penalty to protect their brother even though his crime be murder! Not only is this so in legal affairs but in the common exchange of every-day life. Brotherhoods create in society a peculiar kind of selfishness. It is that kind which can hold two men up to the light and award the honor to the one who wears the most symbols, be he dissolute, unprincipled or lacking in the first attributes of manhood. Merit does not enter into the question. It matters not if a man is king in virtue, unless his platform is built on the pillars of some secret order he finds that less worthy men mount higher. He finds that a fraternal grip is a recommendation to greatness, while humble honesty has not even the premium of a recognition. This is not the sentiment of fanaticism, but it is the history of society. How long, O searcher after civil liberty; how long, O student of political economy; how long, O man of justice, can this condition of affairs exist and our judicial system be characterized as any other than a burlesque on justice, or our social union as any other than a communion of slaves serving a greedy despotism?

These social parasites are robbers of the home. Some of the money which should go for the support of the family finds its way into the treasury of a secret society. By contact with the peculiar, elevated morality of secret societies, a man's conscience may become so distorted that his fraternal "dues" appear to him of more importance than his grocer's "duns." Every secret society urges its members to seek promotion, to rise a degree higher. Their plan of promotion does not depend upon merit, but upon money. Men, naturally, are fond of promotion. With some it is a mania and has such a hold on them that they will pawn their overcoats with the temperature thirty-two degrees below zero, if thereby they can obtain money enough to be raised the same number of degrees above "Entered Apprentice." A secret society will excuse itself for using this method of raising money by saying that it is an "insurance company." Yes! But an insurance company without a policy; and their conduct after the man is dead proves not even an impartial policy.

But the most serious objection the home presents to this enemy is the fact that while a man is a member of a secret society, he is deliberately taking into his possession secrets which he dare not tell to his wife. Hence the confidential relations held between his wife and himself are destroyed. Thus conditioned, how long does domestic felicity exist? How long is it, after he begins to keep his secrets from her, before he is forced into a position of systematic deception.

Secret societies are at war with our religion. We claim that no one can be saved except through Christ. They promise to save one by a system of morality which bristles with squares, compass points, triangles and trowels. They pretend to cut a gate in the walls of Paradise, through which unrepentant Jew, Mohammedan and infidel may enter without the recognition of a Christ. We thank God for the Bible. We are amazed at the wonderful history of its preservation. Buried in the debris of the old Jewish temple; hidden in the huts of early Christians; chained to a stone in a monastic cell; yet to-day, the text-book of peace, the balm for the wounded, the joy of the simple, the teacher of the wisest. And this book of books is used as a mere piece of furniture in the Masonic lodge, and even in that capacity it must give way to the hieroglyphics of heathenism whenever the locality of the lodge necessitates it.

Secrecy, lolling back in its chair of security, says to us, "What are you going to do about it?" Well, one thing is certain, we will not keep silence. Some good people say, "Oh, let secrecy alone; it will work its own destruction." What proof of that is there? Trying to cure secrecy with silence is about as dangerous to society as the Irishman's remedy was to himself. When he had accidentally swallowed a potato bug he immediately swallowed some "Paris green" to "influence the bug." No. To destroy this blasphemer of the sacred name; to drive out this robber of the home; to crush this enemy of justice, we must show forth its workings wherever intelligence dwells. We may be sneered at as fanatics and cranks, but let us remember that it is greater to be a fanatic, inspired by the enthusiasm of common sense; a crank, starting the fanning mill of public opinion and true to our manhood, than, hugging our chains, call it peace; or call it rest to have our heads in the dust with the foot of a secret order on our necks.

We are but a little handful, but united we can be Gideon's three hundred around the confused camp of our modern Media. We are not to be intimidated by the story of William Morgan in New York, by the howls of a brutal mob in Boston, or the tragedy of a Carlson cottage in Chicago!

If there be any man who cares not, or dares not take hold of this reform, let him stand out of the way: for this is a question of right, hewn out of the forest of the Bible, and stamped on its front is the seal of divine approval. Let us remember that we have with us a power which is invincible, that power which seals the caskets of mystery; that power which stood at the mouth of a tomb and called back the breath of life to an inanimate Lazarus; that power which, for its chosen people, could pile the waters of the Jordan into mountains on the one side and permit them to trickle away in little rills on the other; which has frustrated the designs of ambitious conquerors and dealt mercy to the oppressed; which broke the scepter of England and peopled a republic in America; which has moulded into shape the clay of history; that power which we call—God.

THE MORMON RITUAL.

Wilford Woodruff, president of the Mormon church, has furnished the Associated Press with a long dispatch in which he says: "In regard to the claim that the priesthood or chief authorities of the church assert or usurp the right to control the Mormon people in all their temporal, including their political, affairs, I would say that I am the present head of the church, and I do not make any such claim. It would be impossible to exercise it if I did." This is avoidance of the main question, which is this, "Does the Endowment house ritual enjoin upon the Mormon laity absolute submission to the church in all matters, spiritual and temporal, including political?" Several witnesses in the case now pending before Judge Anderson swore that it did; many more said, "I decline to answer;" very few said that it did not. President Woodruff may not desire to exercise his claim to such power as the ritual confers; the next president may exercise it. It may now "be impossible to exercise such a claim;" in time of war or of domestic excitement a bold Mormon president might deem it possible to exercise it. The question is not, "Are the unconstitutional obligations to the church as the supreme judge of the validity of law dormant?" It is, "Do they exist?" Many Mormons swear that they do. Many decline to swear at all in answer to such a question. Few swear in denial.

Further, President Woodruff has it that the Endowment house obligation "to avenge the blood of the prophets" is a mere generalization, a historic reference to "the blood of the saints" spilt by Roman emperors. It may be. But if so why is it to be taught to your children and your children's children, even to the fourth generation?" It may be. But if so simple an explanation can be made, why should astute Mormons, such as the editor of the Deseret News, go to jail with "I decline to answer" upon their lips rather than make a statement and undergo cross-examination upon it?

Further, President Woodruff says, "The investigation shows that no such penalty—that of death by disembowelment—has ever been inflicted." This also is evasion of the main question, which is not, "has prudence or fear or kindness of spirit prevented the rules of the church from exercising the barbaric power?" but, "Do the ignorant laity believe that such barbaric power rests in the church?" Besides which, it is directly in testimony that persons have been slain, though not by disembowelment, for disobedience of church orders. And slain under most revolting circumstances.

Further, President Woodruff says:

"Mormons, when on the stand, decline to disclose the formula of the endowments because secret religious rites and ceremonies are the property of the individual citizen, and do not belong to the state. You might as well ask why a Mason, if he were placed on the witness-stand, should refuse to reveal the rites and signs of that order. I myself am a Master Mason, and have been informed that many Masons, as well as people not connected with that fraternity, have been indignant at the attempt that has been made during the last few days to extort personal information from Mormons. Members of other benevolent societies can see that their rights and organizations would be endangered should such proceedings carry."

This is very untenable special pleading. No one has asked any Mormon to reveal the "rites and signs" of any secret religious order. No one ever will ask them. It is asked whether the ritual imposes any oaths or obligations hostile to the laws and Constitution of the nation; oaths and obligations to commit murder at the behest of the head of the order; oaths and obligations to hold the law of the land second to the law of the head of the order? These are the questions asked of Mormons during the present investigation, and answered in the affirmative by some, and by "I decline to answer" by others. It is merely absurd to say that a Master Mason would plead "I decline to answer" in reply to a legal interrogatory as to whether murder or treason were taught in his lodge. He would make indignant denial. If the question were carried into stricter detail and made to incorporate a form of words implying treason or murder it is to be expected that his answer would be quite as indignant and more circumstantial than to the first and general principle. But the editor of the Deseret News goes to jail with "I decline to answer" upon his lips. The questions declined being, in substance, does the Mormon ritual enjoin murder; does it establish a priestly despotism? These are the facts brought out by the investigation.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

"The lost city of New England"—Romanism in the town of Jonathan Edwards—The new war ships—The fires in Boston and Lynn—A memorable Thanksgiving—An appeal to the Christian people of New England.

A glamour of romance has ever enveloped the traditions of lost cities; and this is only deepened, not destroyed, when the archaeologist's labors lift into the prosaic light of common day the proofs that such cities once really existed,—that their streets were trod by busy throngs, each with his individual pursuits and cares, joys and sorrows. Especially is it so when these buried races, over whom we tread with thoughtless feet, were to their age what the keen, adventurous Anglo-Saxon American is to this.

It was partly to find the lost city of Norumbega, which, with the province of the same name, is laid down on many ancient maps even less than two centuries ago, that Sir Humphrey Gilbert undertook that expedition which cost him his life. That there was such a country, that it extended from Rhode Island to the St. Lawrence, and was discovered and settled before the battle of Hastings placed William the Conqueror on the English throne, seems now demonstrated without a doubt by Prof. Horsford, who has found the remains of canals, fish traps, forts, dwellings, walls, and the terraces of amphitheaters, and other monuments of the early presence of the Northmen scattered throughout the basin of the Charles. The tower which he has just erected on the site of the old fort, called by the French Norombegne, in Waltham, at the junction of Charles river with one of its tributaries, was recently dedicated with very interesting exercises. Thus, New England can boast at least a very respectable bit of antiquity. But compare for a moment the 350 years of Norse occupancy with the little over 250 years since the Pilgrims landed!

Bold and daring, and not without their virtues,—not even wanting in religious ideas, for their first bishop, Erik Gunpson, took possession of his diocese 1121, A. D., their names and exploits have been traced in water. There is a doctrine of election that holds with races as with individuals. In no way were these fierce old sea kings fitted to mold the destinies of a new world. The lot fell on a little band of come-outers, plain, pious, middle-class Englishmen; and now the question is, "Will the institutions they reared bear the storm and stress of the perilous times which are approaching? America has not yet passed through the crucible which is to finally test her. When Northampton's Board of Aldermen refuse Mrs. Shephard, 'the Converted Nun,' the use of the City Hall for a lecture, in deference to Roman Catholic voters, it looks as if that power had made long strides, indeed, in the old historic town where Edwards preached and wrote and prayed.

There is room for more than one opinion whether the new war vessels, which have recently taken so much of Boston's attention, are necessary to the honor and well-being of the United States Government. They will certainly make an imposing appearance in the foreign ports to which they are soon to sail, but as 'a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth,' so a nation's honor does not consist in but righteous laws administered with even-handed justice to all within her borders, black, white, red or yellow; and Christian dealing with other and weaker nations. Henry George, who lectured to a large audience in Tremont Temple last Wednesday, on "Tariff and Wages," was right in alluding to it as an extravagance, and rather calculated to be a menace to peace than to avert war. Our worst foes, rum, Romanism, and the lodge, are probably well content to see the country amuse itself with such costly playthings while they are preparing in secret for a struggle in which all the naval fleets in the world will count for nothing.

—"Far-flashing lances,
Trumpets courageous of sound,
Galloping squadrons or rocking armadas,"

Thanksgiving Day threatened to witness a repetition of the great Boston fire of several years ago; and the very disastrous conflagration in Lynn two days before, which threw multitudes out of work and made thousands homeless, must have rendered it a sad Thanksgiving Day to many among the sufferers. The fire in Boston, with its destruction of over ten millions of property, certainly emphasizes the dangers which confront us from the general use of electric wires. The only remedy is, of course, more care in properly insulating them, and more definite knowledge regarding this agent which is at once the most powerful, the most deadly and the most beneficent of all natural forces.

But our social and political life is beset with similar conditions of danger. We never know when a spark, generated by some of these great questions which are pressing upon us, will set fire to the passions of the mob and cause our streets to grow red with blood, because we have not understood, or cared to understand, the power working in secret under the Jesuit's cloak, behind saloon screens, or the tyled doors of lodge-rooms. However, an opportunity is now given to the Christian people of New England, pastors and laymen, to gain this knowledge, and thus avert the terrible consequences of well-meant ignorance. We stand at the meeting of the ways. Rome is putting forth every effort to make America the real home of the Holy See, and she is seeking the help of the lodge power, which protects rum and Romanism and every other evil under its shadow. And yet how many intelligent Christian men and women, even though the Clan-na-Gael developments have sent a thrill of horror and fear through the entire nation, innocently think that there can be no union between the two, and are even disposed to look favorably upon Masonry as a possible ally against the encroachments of Rome!

A newly organized fraternal and insurance society in Lynn has been named, "The Order of the World." It seems to be founded on the same general principles as the Iron Hall. Its Supreme President is Arthur W. Pope, a well-known business man of Boston, who, it is said, carries endowment policies in this and other societies to the amount of $117,000. It might be supposed that more rivalry would exist between these various organizations, but being all branches of one great system, they are so bound together that they must, in the nature of the case, help rather than hinder one another. To illustrate: in a given community there will be so much call for the services of a wheelwright or a blacksmith, and only through additions to the community will that call be so materially increased that two wheelwrights or two blacksmiths can "set up shop" without mutual injury. But a saloon or any place of questionable resort creates a demand by debauching the public morals, and thus it happens that half a dozen saloons can flourish in a place where so many grocers would starve. The same principle runs through the secret society system. If one is started in a community it will be sure to bring in others; for the evil does not stop with the joining of a single order. It induces a kind of craze, and in the mania to add to his endowment policies a man will join first one, and then another and another; the later and newer the better. The saloon and the lodge will bear crowding like Canada thistles.

The opportunity to hear what such men as Dr. David McAllister, Rev. I. P. Lansing, Pres. C. A. Blanchard, Rev. O. P. Gifford and H. L. Hastings know in regard to this impending danger and the methods to avert it, cannot safely be neglected by any Christian patriot.

"Like a lion growing low,—
Like a night storm rising slow,—
Like the tread of unseen foe,"—

so with stealthy but ominous footfalls is approaching the most perilous crisis our land has yet been called upon to confront. This issue will reach many beside the regular readers of the paper, and it is to the thousands of faithful New England pastors, into whose hands this may fall, that the writer would make especial appeal to attend the coming Congress to be held in Tremont Temple, Dec. 11 and 12, and get as large a delegation as possible from their several churches. But by all means let every such New England minister be himself there, and learn what this dark secret power really is, what it is doing, what it seeks to do. Now is the time to dare and to act if we would save intact our Christian liberties.

ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

—Rev. W. R. Roach, of Elmvale, Ontario province, will be remembered as a staunch and tried soldier in our anti-lodge war. He has prepared some fourteen lectures on popular biographical, moral and domestic topics which he is prepared to deliver on short notice.

—The Salt Lake Tribune says the Scandinavians are rapidly leaving the Mormon church. The Scandinavian Methodists and Lutherans are the cause of it. For two years they have worked quietly, but most effectually, among the Scandinavian Saints, and have cut swath after swath in the ranks of the church. They are being converted faster than the elders can send over fresh supplies, and when once converted from Mormonism make excellent citizens.

REFORM NEWS.

THE NEW HAMPSHIRE STATE CONVENTION.

We find the report of this convention by the secretary, Elder S. C. Kimball, in the Independent Christian of Littleton, N. H. The convention was held in the church at South Barnstead, Oct. 8th to 10th. Rev. J. G. Smith, of Lynn, Mass., preached the opening sermon. Revs. S. C. Kimball, A. A. Hoyt and Isaac Hyatt also preached. A. A. Hoyt, editor of the Independent Christian, was elected president; S. C. Kimball, secretary; and Isaac Hyatt, treasurer. Brethren Hoyt, Hyatt and Edward Robie were chosen delegates to the Boston Congress of Christians. Rev. S. C. Kimball and Joseph H. Brown were appointed evangelists. On the last evening Mrs. M. E. R. Gleason, of Massachusetts, lectured on Narcotics.

The report closes with a cheering account of the blessing of God upon the meeting, thus: "The power of the Lord was remarkably manifested during the meetings, Christians were gloriously helped to a higher plane, two Christian men sought deliverance from the tobacco habit, and several sinners were saved. Sister I. D. Haines, of Dexter, Me., tarried to continue the meetings. A most blessed spirit of Christian oneness prevailed and the power of the Lord was present to bless, heal and save. 'Glory to God in the highest,' was the spontaneous expression of rejoicing hearts."

BLIND LEADERS IN SOME TENNESSEE COLLEGES.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Nov. 29, 1889.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Leaving Jackson, Tenn., on the 22d, I visited Bethel and McTyre colleges at McKinzie, Carroll Co. The first is an institution sustained by the Cumberland Presbyterians. I saw Pres. Sherrill, who consulted the trustees, and in the morning told me that they did not wish to receive our books. Temperance, however, was a very good thing. So also, Pres. Harrison, of the McTyre M. E. college, seemed to think. But he said it was not right to give away the forms and secrets, which were the property of the Masonic fraternity.

In the morning I started for Memphis where I arrived soon after 3 p. m. There I found Prof. A. J. Steele, of the Le Moyne Normal Institute. In the morning (24th) I preached for Rev. R. N. Countee, at 11 A. M. We had a large audience which manifested a good deal of interest in the work of the N. C. A. In the evening I spoke to the Second Congregational church, Rev. B. A. Imes, pastor, where most of the Le Moyne workers attend. This school is full, and has an overflow department in the church under the care of Bro. Imes. I also visited the Baptist Industrial, Normal and Bible Institute under the charge of Rev. H. R. Traver. They would like to receive our anti-secrecy books and old copies of the Cynosure for distribution.

On Wednesday I took the train for Holly Springs, Mississippi, where I dined with Rev. C. E. Libby, D.D., president of Rust University. This institution is sustained by the Freedmen's Aid and Southern Education Society of the M. E. Church North. The university building was burned awhile ago; but they are still doing a noble missionary work. The president told me they would give our books a place in their new library which they are endeavoring to fill up, as the other was burned in the fire. They would also like to have the Cynosure in the reading-room; which I promised to send them for a time.

In the afternoon I went on to Oxford, Lafayette Co., to visit the State University under the care of Pres. E. Mayes, LL. D. This is a very large and popular institution, with an extensive law department, and instruction in ancient and modern languages, and in the sciences. They have a large library with an extensive line of law books and legal reports. Dr. Mayes said they would give our books a fair standing in their ranks, if we chose to send them; which I arranged to do. In the morning I returned to Memphis, where I am making arrangements to visit Arkansas.

The weather is unusually cold for Tennessee. The long rain and clouds are past; but a chilly northwest wind blew yesterday, and this morning there was a decided freeze, with frozen ground and ice in the shade all day. The cotton crop here suffered from early frost, and I notice many fields of it not yet harvested. I remain as ever yours in the truth,

SAMUEL F. PORTER.

IN AND ABOUT THE NATIONAL CAPITAL.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 28, 1889.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Among many things for which I am thankful to-day is the spirit of investigation being aroused throughout our country. People are learning that their preachers and many good men may, and do, make mistakes, and hence are seeking to find out for themselves. Never were there greater opportunities to get the truth before the people than to-day. The Richfield Mercury, of Otsego county, New York, has published several reports in regard to my lectures in that county, differing in their statements as the reporters differed in judgment. The first report sent in by my Masonic friend, Dr. Fitch, of Schuylers Lake, if true, was exceedingly unfortunate for me. Another report from the West Exeter correspondent gives a very different view, and favorable to the truth presented. The insertion of this report, together with the publication of a brief article sent by myself as a correction, shows the editor to be a fair-minded man, willing to publish both sides. I have just mailed another article, which I trust will receive the same courtesy. As I am informed readers of the Mercury are anxious to hear "the conclusion of the whole matter," I offer in my article just sent to give the Mercury readers my reasons for believing secret combinations to be an incubus to the church, family and state.

I found on my return many things incident to the interests of our work here needing attention. Mr. Caywood, the gentleman having charge of the N. C. A. building, is at present very sick. Prayers are offered for his speedy recovery. Calling on some Lutheran and other pastors here, I find their interest in our work growing. They see the evil effects of the lodge on every hand. One who had not previously done so, gave his subscription to the Cynosure.

I was happy to receive a call this week from a staunch advocate of our reform, John F. Hanson, of Mt. Vernon, South Dakota. Bro. Hanson is accompanied to this city by Samuel Mills, of Illinois, B. C. Hobbs, of Indiana, Samuel Purdy, of Mexico, and others representing yearly meetings of the Friends, to present a memorial on Peace and Arbitration to the Pan-American Congress in session here, hoping to get them to take steps in the formation of a system of international arbitration, and thus hasten that glad day when "the sword shall be beaten into the plow-share, and the spear into the pruning hook." They have met with much encouragement, and have great reason to expect an enactment by this body to this devoutly desired end.

I shall, D. V., start East in the morning, working as the Lord shall open the way in Philadelphia and other points.

W. B. STODDARD.

SNOW-BOUND IN MICHIGAN.

HOLLAND, Mich., Nov. 28, 1889.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—In Michigan "Typhon" is victorious. "Isis weeps at the death of Osiris," her tears falling, and having fallen for two nights and a day, in the form of snow.

My work in the vicinity of Holland has been unusually satisfactory. I have met with a cordial welcome. The Wesleyan Methodists here are awake to the dangers of secretism. They are not afraid of the power of the lodge. They denounce the heathenism of Masonry, and expose the dangers of the "minor societies."

I lectured four times on the charge of Rev. Binns. The nights were not all pleasant, and, under the circumstances, the meetings were well attended. The lectures were given in four different places, and in each there were many friendly to our work. The contributions were not so large as they would have been, had the fruit crop not been a failure here this season. Still out of their penury they cast into the treasury of the Lord.

I went from Holland to Saugatuck, where Rev. Fero preaches to the Wesleyan Methodists. I spoke twice on the Sabbath, and lectured Monday night to a large congregation. Bro. Fero spoke powerfully after I had concluded, and the people were much moved. A storm, which still continues, prevented the second lecture.

At Saugatuck I visited the Congregational minister, but found him bound by lodge power, though not a member of any secret order. It does not seem to me that the Congregational churches in Michigan are on as high ground spiritually as they are in Illinois. I judge that this church in Saugatuck is organized to death nearly. They have a Financial Society, and a society of Christian Endeavor, each of which, the pastor said, had a work distinct from the work of the church. Such a multiplication of societies inside a church I look upon as a snare.

From Saugatuck I returned to Holland to attend Thanksgiving service at West Olive, where I was invited to speak. But I am snow-bound ten miles from West Olive at the home of Mr. Avery. It is a cause of gratitude to me that I am privileged to spend Thanksgiving with him. He and his family are in complete sympathy with our work, and I can enjoy the day with them. They make good use of the Cynosure.

E. W. SHAW.

CORRESPONDENCE.

STILL SOUNDING THE ALARM.

YORK, Pa., Nov. 18, 1889.

EDITORS CYNOSURE:—Believing it to be my duty, as a loyal American citizen, and also as Corresponding Secretary of the Pennsylvania Christian Anti-Secret Association, to warn all true Protestants and all loyal citizens of the Republic, in regard to the secret arming and drilling of the secret Roman Catholic military organizations, I have drawn up a short letter and a brief tract, which I am now mailing to prominent persons throughout the Republic. I enclose five anti-secret and anti-Catholic tracts in each letter. I have sent these documents to President Benjamin Harrison, Governor James A. Beaver, and to many other public men, including many editors. I herewith send a copy of the aforesaid tract and letter. Yours, etc., EDWARD J. CHALFANT.

PROTESTANTS AND AMERICANS, BEWARE!

Intelligent observers believe that there are three hundred thousand Jesuits in the United States. The Jesuitic Secret Empire of the United States is based upon two hundred and fifty secret orders and one million secret army bayonets. The various secret organizations are controlled by the Jesuits, who slyly and cunningly control all the Grand Lodges or other grand bodies. The military secret organizations are composed of Roman Catholics, hoodwinked Protestants, outwitted deists, deceived infidels, and unprincipled atheists. These troops are armed; and are now drilling secretly all over the United States, frequently parading our streets with arms, disregarding a late decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, and plainly defying the authorities of all the States and of the United States.

The Pennsylvania Christian Anti-Secret Association is opposing the Jesuitic Secret Empire in Pennsylvania. The Corresponding Secretary will give "more light" to all who send their name, address and stamp to Edward J. Chalfant, York, Pa.

PRESIDENT HARRISON CANNOT LEAD A REFORM.

GREENSBURG, Ind., Nov. 19, 1889.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Last Saturday I reached Greensburg. This is a city of 6,000, and a wealthy place. Retired farmers and merchants live here. The home of ex-Governor Cumback is here. He aspires to be sent to some foreign court. The lightning from the White House has not struck him yet. They have eighteen saloons. Sabbath morning I preached in the Presbyterian church, Rev. Wm. Torrence, D. D., pastor. This congregation has 450 members. Dr. Monfort, the editor of the Herald and Presbyterian, was for many years pastor here. Judge Bonner, who occupied the bench here for twelve years, was one of my hearers. He is a strong Republican. His pastor is a Republican prohibitionist. He belongs to the most sensitive class of people in the world. The fact is they are, as my friend Dr. Parkhurst says, like the men of Gadara, afraid of losing their political pigs. In the afternoon I lectured on Sabbath Reform in the Christian church. The young pastor, Rev. Mr. Paine, conducted the devotional exercises. Revs. Torrence and Renalds assisted. They have a mail delivery here on Sabbath. The letter carrier is employed by the citizens and is on duty seven days in the week. Those Prohibitionists who voted for President Harrison, in the hope that he would do something for Sabbath and Temperance reform, are sadly disappointed. But what can a President, whose hands are held by the Republican party, do? Besides, it is known that President Harrison is not a total abstainer. He has been accustomed to keep wines in his house and use them, "exercising his self-control, self-government and self-denial." It is said that the leading business men of this place, who stand high in the church, keep their keg of beer in the back room, and they gather around it and drink at pleasure. No wonder they are sensitive as to temperance.

On Sabbath evening I preached in the Centenary M. E. church, Rev. W. W. Renalds, pastor. The house was filled. We have been told of a church building the back wall of which is cracked from top to bottom. The reason assigned is, many barrels of whisky were used in its erection. "Woe to him that buildeth his house by unrighteousness and his chambers by wrong."

On Monday evening I lectured before the W. C. T. U. on Gospel Temperance. Mrs. Thompson is president. She is the widow of Rev. Thompson, late of Harrison, O., a nephew of Dr. Thompson, the missionary who wrote "The Land and the Book," spent forty years in the field, and now lives in retirement in Denver, Col. It was a successful meeting. J. M. FOSTER.

A WILLING WORKER IN AFRICA.

MUHLBERG MISSION, MONROVIA, }
LIBERIA, Africa, Oct. 14, 1889. }

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—The rainy season is about over, and I hope there will be opportunities to use the literature you kindly sent to me some time since.

I am teaching on the St. Paul river, twenty-five or thirty miles from Monrovia, the capital of Liberia. There are Freemasons in Monrovia. I hope to go there before long, and scatter some of the "National Christian Association" literature among them. I am interested in your work among the colored people at the South, and pray that God's blessing may rest upon it. I long for the time to arrive when the colored people shall be free from the slavery of secret societies.

Should I gather anything of interest for the Cynosure, will (D.V.) write it up. This mission is in the country, and the people are scattered, and it is with difficulty that they can be reached, so the work of distributing literature progresses more slowly than it would in a city.

I will do all I can for your Association here if you will let me have the Cynosure, for the next six months, in return for what I can do for you. My own salary is small, or I should prefer to subscribe for the paper, and so aid you a little in your good work for the Lord. Very sincerely yours, E. BEEKEN.

THE BALTIMORE CHALLENGE.

CHICAGO, Nov. 29, 1889.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The Pope "a subject cannot be" of these United States. So says Charles J. Bonaparte in his speech at the Lay-Congress of Catholics, met in Baltimore. The scarlet woman has bedecked herself, and has announced in unmistakable language that she is "ready for the fray."

If ever the American people received a warning it is now. When will they awaken to a sense of their duty as American citizens? Hear what Charles J. Bonaparte says on behalf of the Pope in that congress! He has sounded the tocsin, and thrown down the gauntlet for the government of these United States to pick it up if it dare. Listen to the challenge again: "Whether the Pope be an exile or a captive, a subject he cannot be." This bids defiance to every principle embodied in and guaranteed by our Constitution to this people. If "a subject he cannot be," he ignores the right of this government to protect its people in their enjoyment of civil and religious liberty. Can it be possible that our constitutional rights and liberties are so near being damned, obliterated and trodden under foot by a foreigner—a papist! Americans, will you not awake from your lethargy and rise in your might and protect yourselves in the enjoyment of your constitutional rights against this threatened destruction of them by the autocrat of Rome and his minions? Your rights and liberties are being bartered away for dirty, gaudy doublets of the scarlet woman of the church of Rome.

Listen once more to Mr. Bonaparte as he descants on "The Independence of the Holy See:" "Catholics do less than their duty if they fail to say, and say so loudly and plainly, that no one can even pretend to mistake their meaning, that the Holy See has been and is gravely wronged; that against this wrong they temporarily, but firmly protest, and will protest so long as it remains unrighted; that while the freedom of the Holy See is in jeopardy the church is not at peace, and that the sovereign pontiff in vindicated this freedom, NOT AS A PRIVILEGE, to be given or wiped out by any earthly power, but as an inalienable right embraced in his divine commission, has, and will have, an unwavering support of all his spiritual children. And for the Catholics of America I say this now and here."

Protestants of America, what is your answer to that challenge? These Romanists are, indeed, earnest, and you ought to answer them quickly, and in unmistakable language, before your Stars and Stripes in their glorious galaxy are torn into shreds and trodden down by unholy feet into the mire and dirt of our streets. Don't you see the hands of these ungodly men are joined together to lay hold on and throttle and choke to death the noblest and grandest charter on God's green earth, that declares "that all men are born equally free and independent." Benjamin Harrison, whom you honored with your votes and sent to the "White House," and made him chief magistrate of these United States, sits with these men who have just declared that Pope Leo must regain his temporal power, claiming it as one "not to be given or wiped out by any earthly power." Citizens of America, see to it that your confidence is not misplaced, and your trust betrayed by your Chief Magistrate. D. COWAN.

PITH AND POINT.

LANE INSTITUTE, JACKSON, TENN.

I take great pleasure in writing you. We have just been favored with a visit from Mr. Porter, who is now working faithfully in the interest of the Association and who has also promised a donation to our library and reading-room. We bid him a hearty welcome to our institution. We are trying to prepare young men and women for the many duties of life which await them in the future. We very urgently request that you give us a contribution of some weekly journal to our library or anything in the way of good educational reading matter. We request that you send to us the Christian Cynosure. Finding that you can render us some assistance, please do so and we shall be very grateful.

Very truly yours,

E. W. BAILEY.

MAN OVERBOARD!

Early this morning (Nov. 22) we were wakened by a tumultuous noise at the steamer Bellaire, which lay twenty rods above us. A man had in the partial darkness missed his footing and gone overboard. Soon we heard his terrified moans, and Mr. Arnold with oars in hand was just ready to untie his skiff when a part of their own crew passed us, and the poor candidate for eternity was rescued. How appropriate that people follow on the shore to show their concern for the drowning man! But how different the scene on Niagara river one night when three men, by the order of the Masonic lodge, took a good man, bound his hands, tied a rope around his waist, then ordered him to stand up. This he did, and while he could not say a word because of the gag that stopped his mouth, he was pushed into the waters beneath, where he sank by the weights attached to the cord about his waist. O, reader, are you scattering the light upon this hideous monster lodger?—MRS. I. R. B. ARNOLD, Wheeling, W. Va.

A GOOD TEXT WELL DEVELOPED.

I preached yesterday in a Southern M. E. church my third sermon on the text, "For this purpose the Son of God was manifested that he might destroy the works of the devil" (1 John 3: 8), dwelling on the question, Is the secret empire a work of the devil, and as such to be destroyed? I enjoyed the close attention of an intelligent audience, and was endorsed by two ministers' wives: one of them an educated, talented wife of a U. P. minister. I expect soon to preach a fourth discourse on the same exciting theme, and hope, with good results. I hope to secure a few subscribers for the Cynosure.—A. C. HAND, Dalton, Ga.

FROM BRO. DAVIDSON.

Since my becoming pastor of St. Matthew Baptist church my trials have been many, but, thank God, I have not ceased to declare the whole counsel of God according to my limited knowledge. My church has been ostracised, and everything done that could be done to prevent people from attending it; but, thank God, my congregation is gradually increasing. Some that professed to be Christians have used every means to stain my character, but God has graciously fought the battle. If I could get the church property paid for, and the building comfortably enlarged, that would encourage my people. I want to raise $948.15 to pay for the property and do the needed repairs. May God bless you and the dear friends in your noble work is the prayer of your brother in Christ.—J. F. DAVIDSON, New Orleans, La.

CHURCH AND STATE.

Copy of an anti-Church and State resolution passed in England in 1849. How is it in the United States in 1889? Let our Boston public schools and "Indian Contract Schools" reply! "That in the opinion of this meeting, the union of the church with the state is a violation of individual conscience—tends to secularize the ministers of religion and to abridge their freedom—impedes the progress of Scriptural truth, and prejudices Christianity in the estimation of the people at large. That this union, moreover, aggravates the bitterness of party strife, arrests the progress of needful reform, imposes an oppressive burden upon our financial resources, and presents an insuperable obstacle to the adoption by our legislators of just and healthful principles of general policy."—H.

JOHN THOMPSON died at his home near Sabetha, Kansas, June 14, 1889, aged sixty-eight years.

He was born February 21, 1821, in Noble county, Ohio. He was converted at the early age of thirteen, and always lived a consistent Christian life. April 1, 1851, he married Hannah Thompson, who survives him. In 1854 they moved to Indiana, and from there in 1872 to Kansas, where he spent the remainder of his life near Sabetha.

This is the brief account of an unusually eventful and conscientiously earnest life. "Uncle Johnny," as he was familiarly known, always tried to make the world better, and he had the respect of those who opposed him. He was, to a casual acquaintance, a stern man. But little children loved him, and no one need ask a better epitaph above his grave than that. He was severe toward what seemed to him wrong, but had a gentle heart under the unrelenting exterior. The world needs more just such men ready to espouse a cause with regard only to its merits, willing to stand alone, if need be, and not flinch. The following from the Western Christian Advocate, of a few years ago, gives one of the many incidents in the course of a life-long advocacy of principles:

"A short time before the war, John Thompson, an Abolitionist, went some miles to a town in Indiana to do some trading. While in the store the subject of politics came up, in which Mr. Thompson took a part, and gave his views on the sin of slavery. This so excited some that they could not answer his arguments, that they began to offer insults, and the merchant ended the matter by telling him he ought to be hanged, and drove him out of the store. Mr. Thompson went out, for he was accustomed to harsh treatment, such as good men had often had to bear, who have had the courage to stand up for a principle.

"Years rolled on, the irrepressible conflict had passed, and human slavery was no more. This merchant, a banker now, and his wife, were returning from a summer trip to an adjoining county, and a dreadful storm came suddenly upon them. He saw a farm house ahead, and drove with all possible speed. The farmer saw them coming, ran out, and helping them quickly from the carriage, sent them into the house, while he unhitched the horses and put them away. Upon going into the house the banker said, 'It seems to me I have seen you somewhere before.' 'Yes,' said Mr. Thompson, you have. We met once before, and you drove me out of your house.' You may imagine the rest of the scene. The merchant is a prominent Christian and an Abolitionist now."

Mr. Thompson was confined to his bed but a short time before his death, although he had been feeble for more than a year. He left a wife, three sons, all well known in the community where he lived, and a daughter living in Corning, Kansas. The funeral services were held in the Congregational church, Rev. A. C. Hogbin conducting them. A very large concourse of neighbors, friends and acquaintances attended the remains to their last resting place in the Sabetha cemetery.

A friend and neighbor adds this tribute to the memory of a faithful man:

"Truly a good man has fallen. He was a constant reader of the Cynosure, and was strongly opposed to secret societies. I have often seen him in Sabetha with a group of men around him, telling them the evils of Masonry. He was called a 'crank' and an 'old fogey' by many, but he did not care. He trusted in God; if the whole world opposed him he would have stood for the truth and for the cause that he knew to be right. A short time before he died, he was asked how the future looked to him. He said it was all bright, and he had gained a complete victory over every doubt and fear, and could see his way clear through to his home in glory. A heavenly influence seemed to fill the room. No man could be missed in this community as much as Uncle John, and even some of those that opposed him now say he was right."

MRS. S. G. REED for many years has been a subscriber to the Cynosure, which was highly esteemed by her. She was eighty-five years of age the 9th of last August, and was able to do her own work until then. About that time she commenced to fail rapidly, and then gradually grew worse. She had a cancer in the stomach and suffered greatly, but never a murmur escaped her lips. She took no opiate: she said she did not wish to be stupefied, but she was cheerful and resigned, and seemed very anxious to suffer all her Heavenly Father's will. It was a pleasure to be with her. How many times she said, "The Lord makes all my bed." She passed to her heavenly home on Sabbath, October 27th, in the triumphs of the Christian faith, and was buried the 29th. The text chosen at her funeral were those inspiring words by Paul, 2 Tim. 4: 6-8: "For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand," etc.—a fitting tribute to the aged saint. MRS. MARY A. DENISON.

JAMES HUBBS, an old and respected citizen of Silver City, Idaho Territory, died suddenly in that city a few weeks since at the age of 71. Complaining of slight illness during the day, which was not sufficient to confine him to his home, yet at eight o'clock he was dead. He came to Silver City in 1865, and ever since resided there respected as a good citizen, a man of integrity, temperate in all things. He read the Cynosure prayerfully and with delight. Bishop Talbot preached the funeral sermon in the courthouse at Silver City.

The fountain of perpetual youth was one of the dreams of antiquity. It has been well nigh realized in Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which purifies the blood, gives vitality to all the bodily functions, and thus restores to age much of the vigor and freshness of youth.

CATARRH CURED.

A clergyman, after years of suffering from that loathsome disease, Catarrh, and vainly trying every known remedy, at last found a prescription which completely cured and saved him from death. Any sufferer from this dreadful disease sending a self-addressed stamped envelope to Prof. J. A. Lawrence, 88 Warren St., New York, will receive the recipe free of charge.

THE N. C. A. FUNDS.

The General Fund is that from which the running expenses of the Association are paid. From it the agents on the field are supported.

The Foreign Fund is that from which the foreign demand for literature against the lodge is supplied to missionaries.

The Free Tract Fund clearly states by its name the object for which contributions are solicited. Millions of pages have been distributed by means of this fund.

The Cynosure Ministers' Fund. The donations to this fund have enabled the Association to send many copies of the Cynosure to the ministers of the South, especially to pastors of colored churches. The result has been a blessing to them and their churches.

Contributions to any or all these funds are urgently solicited.

FORM OF BEQUEST.—I give and bequeath to the National Christian Association, incorporated and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, the sum of — dollars for the purposes of said Association, and for which the receipt of its Treasurer for the time being shall be sufficient discharge.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 5, 1889.

THE BOSTON CONFERENCE.

TREMONT TEMPLE, DEC. 11TH AND 12TH.

As the time for this gathering is now at hand, we desire to say a few words concerning it to all lovers of the cause of Christ to whom these lines shall come.

SECRET SOCIETIES

are at this time numerous and powerful. They control to a greater or less extent the time, thought and money of hundreds of thousands of our able-bodied men. Whether the two facts are connected or not, all men know that the classes of men who are most numerous in secret lodges are least frequently represented in the Christian churches. The Masons, Odd-fellows, Knights of Pythias, the members of assessment and other lodges, are not usually members of Christian churches.

IF CHURCHES ARE FRAUDS

and ministers are lazy and cowardly hypocrites, living on the labors of industrious men and retailing falsehoods in order to keep a superstitious populace quietly contributing to their support, it is, perhaps, not to be regretted that this is true; but if the Bible is the Word of God, if the church is the Bride of Christ, if Jesus is the only Saviour of men, if heaven is a blessed and hell a terrible reality, then men who care for their fellows ought to be sad to see so large a proportion of our young and middle-aged men alienated from the church, and should see if there is not some way to win them back.

We believe: 1. "That secrecy is not necessary to any good cause and may be used for any bad one."

2. That men who trust for salvation to any one person or thing save Jesus Christ must suffer eternal punishment.

3. That secret lodges, with their prayers from which the name of Jesus is excluded, their mutilated extracts from the Scriptures, their solemn hymns, their chaplains, priests, prelates, altars, baptisms, burial services and consecrations are directly leading men to hope for salvation without Jesus.

4. That the influence of these orders on the family is like their influence upon the church.

5. That husbands and fathers have no right to obligate themselves to conceal the proceedings of weekly or monthly meetings from wives and children.

6. That where worthy men take and keep such oaths or promises the tendency is to destroy the unity which should exist in Christian homes.

7. That as secret societies tend to disrupt families and destroy churches, so also they tend to unsettle the foundations of civil government.

8. That the same interference with the administration of law, which became a matter of public notoriety in the trial of the abductors of Wm. Morgan, and which has been clearly seen throughout the trial of persons supposed to have murdered Dr. P. H. Cronin, has been of continual occurrence; and that there is no way of securing an honest administration of law while judges, jurors, sheriffs, witnesses and bailiffs are under secret oaths to persons charged with crime.

9. That Christians, patriots and humanitarians should abandon secret organizations if they have entered them, and should warn the young men of our generation to beware of putting life, reputation, property, and the eternal interests of the soul into the keeping of a secret lodge.

10. That it is the duty of all well-disposed persons who are not members of such orders to create such a public sentiment as shall render it easy for those good men who have been led into these lodges by pretences of charity, temperance, patriotism, etc., and who have been undeceived, to come out.

11. Especially do we believe it to be the duty of watchmen on the walls of Zion to warn the people of approaching danger, especially such a danger as this. Now as never before the pulpits should magnify Jesus Christ as the only Saviour of men, and should withstand with all their power all societies which propose to furnish a part of the human race with entrance to the "Grand Lodge above" without confession of sin or faith in our Lord.

12. And we believe that if the ministers are silent, if these secret lodges with their dances, their carloads of wine, their Sabbath-breaking trains, their mock murders, their death penalties, their Christless prayers and their yoking of good and evil men in unequal fellowship continues unreprieved by those who profess to represent God's mind to man, that deliverance will arise from some other quarter, but the faithless watchmen will be condemned.

TESTIMONY OF WITNESSES.

Pres. Charles G. Finney says:

"God demands and the world has a right to expect, that the church will take due action and bear a truthful testimony in respect to this institution. She cannot now innocently hold her peace. The light has come. Fidelity to God and to the souls of men require that the church, which is the light of the world, should speak out, and should take such action as will plainly reveal her views of the compatibility or incompatibility of Freemasonry with the Christian religion."

Bishop Hamline says:

"North Ohio Conference has progressed very rapidly till this time, but Masonry and Odd-fellowship have arrested us." At another time: "I have enjoyed and suffered much during its session. Masonry and Odd-fellowship, a bane in the midst of us, have done us much evil."

Albert Barnes says:

"Any good cause, I think, can be promoted openly; any secret association is liable, at least, to abuse and danger."

Dr. Richard S. Storrs says:

"My judgment and feeling are both strongly opposed to the secret lodge system. I heartily agree with what Dr. Howard Crosby has so forcibly said about it."

Dr. George F. Pentecost says:

"I would do almost anything in my power to help on the work of rescuing all Christian men from the 'grip' of Masonry and all other secret and unchristian societies. I believe that Masonry is an incalculable evil and essentially anti-Christ in its principles and influence."

D. L. Moody says:

"Give them the truth anyway, and if they would rather leave their churches than their lodges the sooner they get out of the churches the better. I would rather have ten members who were separated from the world than a thousand such members. Come out from the lodge. Better one with God than a thousand without him. We must walk with God, and if only one or two go with us it is all right. Do not let down the standard to suit men who love their secret lodges or have some darling sin they will not give up."

Rev. John Marsh of the National Temperance Society says:

"Secret temperance organizations are but stepping stones. Young men here learn the language, forms and degrees of a temperance Masonry; and while they gather weekly in a secret lodge for, as they say, business, improvement and enjoyment, they easily slide into the more artful, deistical and dangerous Masonry, which has once, and may again, fill us with terror and give us blood to drink. From such a connection we say, the Lord deliver us. We plead with our temperance brethren to look at their responsibility, and at once cut loose from all connection by abandoning everything pertaining to secrecy."

Wendell Phillips says:

"History shows them perverting justice, stopping at no crime to protect and conceal their mummeries; controlling politics for selfish and personal ends, and interfering with great danger in national emergencies. Every good citizen should make war on all secret societies, and give himself no rest until they are forbidden by law and rooted out of existence."

Charles Sumner says:

"I find two powers here in Washington in harmony, and both are antagonistic to our free institutions, and tend to centralization and anarchy—Freemasonry and Slavery; and they must both be destroyed if our country is to be the home of the free, as our ancestors designed it."

Joseph Cook says:

"I do abhor the selfish, clannish spirit of secret societies."

These are only some of the witnesses who have borne their testimony against secret societies. Are they not sufficient at least to make it the duty of all thoughtful Christian men to examine with care the vast network of lodges which already confront us on every hand, and to learn whether these distinguished Christian brethren were right or wrong in the judgments which they express?

PROGRAM OF CONFERENCE.

The program will be as follows:

WEDNESDAY EVENING.—Rev. A. J. Gordon, D.D., Boston, presiding. Prayer by Rev. James M. Gray, D.D., Roston. Address, Rev. David McAllister, D.D., of Pittsburgh, "Danger from Mormonism as a Secret Oath-bound Order." Address, Pres. Charles A. Blanchard, "The Clan-na-Gael, or Irish Brotherhood."

THURSDAY.—John A. Conant, Esq., Willimantic, Conn., presiding. Annual meeting of the N. E. Christian Association. Addresses by Rev. J. H. Brown, of New Hampshire, Eld. Isaac Hyatt, and others.

12 M.—Rev. J. C. K. Milligan, D.D., New York, presiding. Address, Rev. I. J. Lansing, Worcester, Mass., "Jesuit Policy."

3 P. M.—Discussion of the Clan-na-Gael and other secret orders resumed: George Morse, Esq., Putnam, Conn.; Eld. S. C. Kimball, New Market, N. H.; H. L. Kellogg, editor Christian Cynosure, Chicago, and others.

EVENING.—Addresses, Rev. O. P. Gifford, Boston, "Secrecy as a Basis of Organization." H. L. Hastings, editor The Christian, Boston, "The Remedy."

The attempt is to exalt our Lord Jesus and to save our brother men. Will not every Christian who receives and reads these words at once make arrangements to attend the Boston Conference, praying that God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Spirit may be present and be greatly exalted in the hearts of all the people?

F. W. CAPWELL.

When a leader like Franklin W. Capwell falls, the lamentation of David over Saul and Jonathan has a peculiar interest:

"The beauty of Israel is slain upon thy high places:

How are the mighty fallen!"

"How are the mighty fallen in the midst of the battle!

O Jonathan thou wast slain in thy high places."

"How are the mighty fallen,

And the weapons of war perished!"

So could we say when the genial face of Mr. Capwell faded from our sight, and his cheering tones no longer encouraged the ear. He was born to be a leader. His independence of thought; his enthusiasm in action; his fidelity to conviction; his zeal for the truth; his cordial and sympathetic nature and magnanimity of spirit, were qualities at once recognized. All men esteem the man who is endowed with them; and, when consecrated to the service of God and directed by his love, such men will be cheerfully placed at the front.

Mr. Capwell was born in 1823 in the same county of Wyoming, New York, and in the same town in which he died on the 9th of October last. His whole life was spent in the vicinity. There he married in 1850; there his eight children were born; there at the early age of thirteen he united with the people of God in church covenant. For sixteen years he was justice of the peace; for as many he was a Sabbath-school superintendent; for twenty-one years he was secretary of the Wyoming Sabbath-school Teacher's Association, and for ten years president of the Genesee Baptist Sunday-school Association. The labors devolving upon him in these relations sufficiently indicate his Christian activity.

He was not less faithful to his fellow man than to his God; and he did not fail to see his Lord in the person of the despised fugitive slave. His house was an "Under-ground railway" station where the flying Negro always found shelter and care. Among his effects was found a letter directing about the care of a fugitive whose case is well remembered by Mrs. Capwell, who says that this slave was a colored man of unusually fine physical appearance, whose face was distorted by terror and suffering. His feet were worn through and tracked his way with blood. Mr. Capwell received him as a brother, bathing, oiling and bandaging with his own hands the slave's feet, and assured him of safety for the night. His tears of gratitude as he left in the morning amply repaid for the trouble of caring for him. This is only one of many like instances. The knowledge that he was doing right was sufficient for Mr. Capwell and he believed himself justified before God in evading a wicked human law.

Mr. Capwell, reared but a few miles south of Batavia, where William Morgan wrote his revelation; where Morgan and Miller were abducted; and where Samuel D. Greene, the brave inn-keeper, withstood the lodge savages at the risk of his life—brought up so near to the center of the early Anti-masonic movement, he imbibed its fearless and patriotic spirit, and was always opposed to the secret orders. He was not prominent in the present movement, however, until the winter of 1881, when Mr. Metcalf (now of the Forum), then managing editor of the North American Review, under Allen Thorndike Rice, requested of him the name of some writer who could capably discuss the lodge question from an opposer's standpoint. He suggested the editor of the Cynosure. A paper was written for the Review, paid for, but never printed. The reason given was that no responsible friend of the lodge could be found who would reply!

Mr. Capwell was next one of the local committee in 1882 which superintended the erection of the Morgan monument. He took an enthusiastic personal interest in the enterprise; and in the presence of the great Batavia convention he drew the cord that unveiled the splendid shaft and its crowning pride, the statue of William Morgan, the Masonic martyr. Since then he was till his death uninterruptedly president of the New York State Association. He was also elected president of the National Christian Association in June, 1883, and was continued in the office in 1884 and 5. He was also at the head of the executive committee of the American party until his death.

His love and labor for the prohibition cause was no less fervent and unselfish. He co-operated with the Prohibition party, until the base subserviency to the lodge by the leaders in New York in the State nominations in 1888 forced him to honor his convictions, protest against the open nomination of lodge men, and refuse to be a party to such corruption.

Death came unexpectedly in October after a brief illness. He was to the last urging on the work against secretism in the State and designed soon to attend the State convention. In him God seemed to take away the head of our movement in New York; but the same Providence can provide a successor. May it be mightily manifested in that great State that his mantle has fallen upon worthy shoulders.

MORMONS SHUT OUT.

Saturday morning Judge Anderson gave his decision in the U. S. court at Salt Lake City on the question whether men who have come to this country from abroad and have taken the oaths of the Mormon church are not yet aliens and ineligible to citizenship. Several days were consumed in taking evidence, of which we gave portions last week. The city was under great excitement, and when the Judge pronounced against the Mormons the crowd in the court broke out in cheers, and the streets were full of rejoicing loyal men congratulating each other that after years of dodging and evasion the Mormon system has been taken in its secret Endowment oath, the center of its power, and overborne at last.

This is a decision the Cynosure has all along called for; and we doubly rejoice, for some day the lodge oaths in Washington and Chicago will be taken up and receive a just condemnation also. We will lay up this decision, and that of Judge Zane forbidding men sworn by Mormon oaths from American juries, as precedents to be used in time against the lodge.

The profound importance of this question is our apology for giving large space to the Mormon oaths to show their alien nature and likeness to Masonry. We publish also an editorial from the Inter Ocean which we ask our readers to carefully examine, and mark the argument. The editor well says the question is, Are there such oaths? If so, the matter of their enforcement does not figure. They may be enforced; and since they are secret oaths they are likely to be enforced to the public injury, and without the knowledge of the public. They are dangerous, un-American and must be suppressed. But the learned editor turns to the Masonic oath with its "murder and treason not excepted" in the Royal Arch degree, and says the Freemason would indignantly deny its existence. Of course he would, for so he has sworn that he would do. But such is the oath, nevertheless, more horrid and blasphemous if possible than the Mormon. If one provides for murders and massacres, and shuts men from citizenship, it will some day be confessed that the other does also.

WICKEDNESS IN KANSAS.—The Kansas legislature voted (in 1889) in favor of a Constitutional Convention to give the State seven instead of three Supreme Judges, and to act on pay of legislators. Silent during its setting, the liquor advocates in the State, after its adjournment, raise a howl for a called session of the legislature to re-submit prohibition. Judge Joel Holt sends us a Topeka Capital, which contains the signally eloquent and able opinions of all the Supreme Judges (his own included), showing that the clamor for re-submission comes, not from the people, but from political bummers, to open the State again to the bribery of the liquor interests in the whole United States. They all declare prohibition in Kansas "a settled fact."

THE U. B. LAW CASE.—Judge Slough, in the Perry county court, Ohio, makes a learned decision giving the church property to the Shuey party, against equally learned decisions of other judges in other courts. Judge Slough says: "That the constitution was lawfully amended is quite beyond controversy;" and, "The revision makes no changes of essentials in the old confession of faith." The explanation of this collision of courts is doubtless this: Judge Slough sees no material change when this church, which has excluded "secret combinations," and Freemasons by name, steadily, one hundred years from its origin, by an equivocal and dishonest article is thrown open to the whole family of sworn secretists! But if the plain, obvious, practical intent of an action is unlawful, the law holds the act unlawful, no matter how ingenious the evasion.

—Rev. A. W. Parry, of Evansville, Wis., who has for years been more or less closely associated with our work, has accepted a call to the Congregational church at Annawan, Ill. He enters on his work there this week. His next neighbor on the west, at Atkinson, is Rev. Wm. H. Chandler, former president of our Illinois State Association.

—The program of the Evangelical Alliance meeting in Tremont Temple, Boston, Dec. 4th to 6th, includes the discussion of Christian co-operation in evangelical work in its various phases; the peculiarities of city and country work, the Mountain Whites of the South, the arousing of public moral sentiment, moral legislation, immigrant population, Christianity and the state, personal work for Christ, etc. Reduced fare is given to this meeting by all railroads.

—A. T. C. Pierson, of St. Paul, author of "Traditions of Freemasonry and its Coincidence with the Ancient Mysteries," died early in the morning of last Tuesday. He helped organize the first Masonic lodge in St. Paul in 1852, and at the late Knight Templar conclave in Washington he was said to be the oldest "Past Grand Master" present. His "Traditions" is a valuable help in proving Freemasonry a heathen system linked indissolubly with the devil-worship of all ages.

—An apology is due Bro. C. F. Hawley for neglecting to notice his acceptance of the Illinois lecture work. At a meeting of the Executive Committee soon after the State Convention the arrangement was completed, and the campaign is already begun, and we shall hear from it very soon. With a man of much experience, known ability and earnest piety, as their agent, the Illinois brethren should make a splendid record this year. Let the same earnest conviction prevail generally as at Elgin, and the same generous support be manifested and there will be nothing to hinder the work of God against the lodge.

—The Mercury of Richfield Springs, New York, has been bountifully supplied with news respecting our Washington agent. During his visit to Schuyler's Lake and vicinity, a Masonic correspondent of the paper at the latter place took advantage of his privilege to abuse Bro. Stoddard in good lodge fashion. At West Exeter the news passed through different hands. This letter says that the news from Schuyler's Lake had prepared the people to meet a scandalous and fanatical bigot and hypocrite, and says: "We confess that in all these we were disappointed. Mr. Stoddard seems a Christian gentleman, whose aim is not to slander established institutions, but by an exposure of their foolishness, to influence men to use their time, talents and means for the promotion of Christ's kingdom on earth. Certainly there was nothing in the lecture delivered here, but what appealed to the reason and common sense of all unprejudiced persons." This was too much for the irate Schuyler's Lake man, who has evidently so long mouthed over the horrid imprecations of the lodge, that their spirit has altogether taken possession of him. He rails again like a veritable son of Shimei, but his rage is as vain as that of the two old giants in Bunyan, who could only curse and bite their nails.

MORMONISM AND MASONRY.

A SCORE OF WITNESSES

UPON THEIR CLOSE RELATION.

While the officers of the United States Government are settling the fundamental question of the alien character of Mormon oaths, let us see what these oaths are according to the testimony of witnesses who cannot well be discredited.

General John C. Bennett, a physician well known and highly endorsed in Illinois and Ohio, was elected to the First Presidency of the Mormon church. He had already, during the three years he had been in the State, been made a general of militia, Quartermaster General, and Mayor of Nauvoo. He left the Mormons in 1842, two years before Joe Smith was shot. In his book, "History of the Saints," published in Boston, 1842, he describes on page 272 one of the secret orders of Mormonism, as follows:

ORDER LODGE.

This is a secret lodge or society, established by Joe Smith, in consequence of a special revelation from heaven, which he pretended to have received respecting it. It was intended to enable him more effectually to execute his clandestine purposes. None but the very elite of the Mormons are admitted into this lodge, as the mysteries of the Holy Priesthood are there, more fully than elsewhere, explained to the members, who are initiated only after they have bound themselves, by a most solemn oath, to profound and inviolate secrecy.

"Order is Heaven's first law; and, that confessed, Some are, and must be, greater than the rest."

The ceremonies of initiation are in perfect keeping with the general absurdity of the new dispensation, and with the Holy Joe's mission for the "restoration of the ancient order of things."

The lodge-room is carefully prepared and consecrated; and from twelve to twenty-four sprigs of cassia, olive branches, cedar boughs, or other evergreens, are tastefully arranged about it. These are intended to represent the eternal life and unmingled bliss, which, in the celestial kingdom, will be enjoyed by all who continue in full fellowship with "Order Lodge."

The aspiring candidate for "Holy Orders" obtains admission into this sanctified body in the following manner: He is stripped naked, and blindfolded; he is then brought into the lodge-room, and in that state is conducted round, so that all the members of the lodge may be satisfied, by personal inspection, that he is a fit subject for their august association, and that he possesses the qualifications required in Deuteronomy, twenty-third chapter and first verse. While the candidate is passing round the room, in this ridiculous and degrading condition, the most excellent Grand Master is repeating, "I will bring the blind by a way that they knew not; I will lead them in paths that they have not known; I will make darkness light before them, and crooked things straight. These things will I do unto them, and not forsake them."

When the candidate has passed satisfactorily this queer examination, he is brought to the altar, before which he is made to kneel. While in this posture, the following oath or obligation is solemnly administered to him, by the Grand Master or his representative:—

"In the name of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, I now promise and swear, truly, faithfully, and without reserve, that I will serve the Lord with a perfect heart and a willing mind, dedicating myself, wholly and unreservedly, in my person and effects, to the upbuilding of his kingdom on earth, according to his revealed will. I furthermore promise and swear that I will regard the First President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints as the supreme head of the church on earth, and obey him the same as the Supreme God, in all written revelations, given under the solemnities of a 'Thus saith the Lord,' and that I will always uphold the Presidency, right or wrong. I furthermore promise and swear that I will never touch a daughter of Adam, UNLESS SHE IS GIVEN ME OF THE LORD. I furthermore promise and swear that no Gentile shall ever be admitted to the secrets of this holy institution, or participate in its blessings. I furthermore promise and swear that I will assist the Daughters of Zion in the utter destruction of apostates, and that I will assist in setting up the Kingdom of Daniel in these last days, by the power of the Highest and the sword of his might. I furthermore promise and swear that I will never communicate the secrets of this degree to any person in the known world, except it be to a true and lawful brother, binding myself under no less a penalty than that of having melted lead poured into my ear. So help me God, and keep me faithful."

Joe pretends that God has revealed to him the real Master's word, which is here given to the candidate.

This obligation is varied in some cases, to suit the convenience or caprice of the Prophet; but the foregoing is the standard and usual form. It will be seen that it is both blasphemous and treasonable, in the highest degree.

In 1860 Lippincott, of Philadelphia, published "The Mormons, or Latter-day Saints," by Lieut. J. W. Gunnison. Before the book was published Lieut. Gunnison, at the time Captain, was murdered, with a party of his men, by the Mormons. On page 59 he says:

THE HOME.

THE UNFAILING ONE.

He who hath led, will lead
 All through the wilderness;
 He who hath fed will feed;
 He who hath blessed will bless;
 He who hath heard the cry
 Will never close His ear;
 He who hath marked thy faintest sigh
 Will not forget thy tear.
 He loveth always, faileth never;
 So rest on Him, to-day, forever!

He who hath made thee whole
 Will heal thee day by day;
 He who hath spoken to thy soul
 Hath many things to say;
 He who hath gently taught
 Yet more will let thee know;
 He who so wondrously wrought,
 Yet greater things will show.
 He loveth always, faileth never;
 So rest on Him, to-day, forever!

SLAVERY IN AFRICA.

Over fifty years ago Great Britain took a great step in advance, by abolishing slavery throughout her dominions. A little over half that number of years ago the United States, under very different circumstances, it is true, followed in her wake. The closing years of the century witness a call upon these two nations, as well as others which are actuated by philanthropic motives, to exert their influence, and, if need be, their physical strength, to put an end to the traffic in human flesh still carried on in Africa—a traffic far more inhuman, far more degrading, than it ever was as practiced in England or America. Will they rise to the occasion?

That such a horrible traffic can exist at the present day appears almost incredible, and we might well question its reality, were it not that we have the testimony of reliable witnesses. Professor Henry Drummond, who recently visited the Dark Continent, has given us some account of the terrible character of the slave trade, and has quoted a number of other well-known travelers, including Stanley, in support of his statements. From these we learn that the mortality, during the slave march from the interior to the coast, amounts to fully fifty per cent, and the stories told of the horrible cruelties inflicted upon the poor creatures almost exceed belief. So terrible is the destruction of life, caused by the atrocities of the slave-drivers, that it is said truly that if a traveler lost the way from equatorial Africa to any of the towns on the coast, where slaves are sold, he could easily find it by the skeletons of the Negroes with which the roads are strewn. Settlements have been completely depopulated, children torn from their parents, or parents taken from their children, the latter being knocked in the head or left to die, and deeds of cruelty perpetrated of so revolting a character as to call loudly for effective remedy. The number carried off or butchered on the way, during the past quarter century, reaches into the millions, and in a single month not long ago, according to Cardinal Lavigerie, no less than 45,000 were added to the number of those who appeal to us to deliver them from a condition worse than death itself. Stanley tells of five expeditions to one district, in which only 5,000 slaves were obtained at the expense of 33,000 lives! Including the value of the ivory secured, he places the net profit at from one to two per cent, a miserable return, indeed, for an investment involving such waste.

One of the worst features of this nefarious traffic is that it is on the increase. The English consul at Zanzibar writes to the Marquis of Salisbury that it is growing under the protection of the French flag. The Germans, who are rapidly obtaining the supremacy on the east coast of Africa, if they do not actually encourage it, certainly connive at it. The Archdeacon of Magila, in a recent article, based on his own personal observations resulting from a prolonged residence in the country, tells us how, up to five years ago, East Africa was gradually becoming civilized and Christianized under the administration of the Sultan of Zanzibar, directed and influenced by the English authorities. But evil times have come. Germany, which up to five years ago did not possess a single interest in East Africa, has, by a system of arrogant assumption on the part of her representatives there, obtained control of a large part of the coast, as well as of the interior. The British missions are being broken up, the industrious and peaceful occupations of the people interrupted, property destroyed, and a general feeling of disturbance and unrest engendered. All this is encouraging to the slave trade, which thrives on anarchy and confusion. The lethargy shown by England in the matter is unaccountable. Why she should stand listlessly by and see herself crowded out is remarkable in the light of her traditions, for she has always been ready to defend her rights as well as to show herself the friend of the oppressed.

What remedy, then, is to be applied to the horrible slave traffic carried on by the Arabs? Drummond advocates police, rather than military administration. The Archdeacon of Magila tells us it will be necessary to teach the natives a higher morality by Christian education, for the system of slavery is part of their very nature, and while they suffer such atrocities at the hands of the Arabs, they in turn are slave-holders, in will if not in deed. He sees a further remedy in introducing the appliances of civilization to such an extent as to make men too valuable to sell. Of course, to make any remedy effective, an end must be put legally to the status of slavery.

Philanthropists in England are moving in the matter. Meetings are being held and the question discussed. The church, the noble men and women of the country, are interested. The cause of humanity, the cause of Christianity, demands that the traffic must and shall be put down.—J. J. Bell, in Interior.

THAT DIGGER INDIAN SKULL.

That ghastly skull turns its eyeless sockets toward the sun once more. Why not let it rest? The silly hoax has been again and again exposed. The facts, as I recall them after so many years, are substantially these: "As early as 1852 or 1855, a theory obtained that Table Mountain covered the bed of an ancient river, which bed, if it could be reached, would be rich in gold. Attempts were made at various points along that extended and often divided formation—attempts to tunnel under and to sink shafts through the hard rock. Near what was then called Jintown, a few miles from Columbia, some miners sank a shaft, with great labor and expense, to a depth of seventy or eighty feet, when resources and courage failed, and they abandoned the work. It was a custom of the Digger Indians in that region to deposit their dead on scaffolds set up ten or twelve feet from the ground, where the flesh fell away, and the bones not infrequently became scattered. I used often to see those scaffolds in that early time. It so happened that one of the skulls fell or was thrown into the abandoned shaft.

After some time a new set of prospectors, finding so much work done to their hand, entered the shaft to sink it deeper, in the hope of finding the hypothetical river. In clearing out the accumulated rubbish they brought to the surface this same skull. Two young fellows, one a doctor and one a brother of Revs. James and W. W. Brier, seized the opportunity to test the gullibility of so-called scientists, and published the startling fact that a human skull had been found seventy odd feet beneath the trap rock of Table Mountain. The effect was magical. Some scientific men hastened to get possession of the bone. They at once detected such craniological peculiarities as proved that it must have belonged to a pre-historic, and probably a pre-Adamic, man. It was clearly the skull of a human being who (or which?) existed hundreds of thousands of years ago, when the race had advanced a comparatively short way toward the prevalent type of our favored day.

The cheat was heartily laughed at in Jintown and vicinity, and the rogues who perpetrated the imposition published the facts; but the skull had set off on its travels. In company with the Neanderthal skull (I write the name from memory) it has made the rounds of Europe, and demonstrated the immeasurable length of the human period. It is unhappily true that the poor skull has left a few unsettled differences in the field of scientific speculation, such, for instance, as the trifling disagreement between Chevalier Bunsen and Mr. Geikie as to the past existence of the human race. But as the difference is unimportant, being only a billion, and two or three hundred million years, it ought not to stagger our credulity. It is enough that the Digger's skull has proved the Scriptural record a weak fable, and has exalted the certainly of science.—California Christian Advocate.

GIRL LIFE IN INDIA.

The following document has been translated into English from the vernacular language in which it was written by a young lady of about sixteen. At the examination of a girl's school by the local committee of managers, the pupils were requested to write the story of their daily life and avocations. The exercises which they produced were very similar in many points, but this was one of the best:

"After getting leave from school on Saturday, I went home and put away my slate and books. I next took off my school-dress, and having put on other clothes, I attended to household work. When evening came I lit the light in the house, and taking my beads I went to worship our god Jugonath. Having prostrated myself before the great lord, Jugonath, I went into the house, and, taking my book, sat down to read. When the night was somewhat advanced, I put away my book. Then having taken my food and washed my face and hands, I spread my bed on the ground and sat down. Then I gave praise to the great Father and supreme Lord, and I went to sleep. In the early morning I got up, and having performed my household duties, I took my book and sat down to read. When the sun was well up I anointed myself with oil, and went out to bathe. Then I came home and changed my wet clothes and put them in the sun to dry. Then having made my reverence to our spiritual teacher, I made my prostrations to the sun, and having received spiritual comfort, returned to the house. I then took food, and having washed my face and hands, ate some betel nut, and sat down to write. When the day was spent I returned to my household work, and again worshiped the god Jugonath. Now I have come again to school, and if there are any faults or mistakes in this exercise, I hope that they will be forgiven."

THE WORK OF A SNOWBALL.

In a winter district school, nearly three-quarters of a century ago, the scholars had carried the sport of snowballing to such an excess that several among them had been seriously injured, and the master had forbidden any more snowballs being thrown. One day, as the master called in the boys from recess, some one in the rear threw a hard snowball past John Severance and hit Willie Newton on the side of his head. He instantly set up an outcry, and, turning angrily about, accused John of throwing the ball.

"I did not throw it," said John. "I saw it whiz past me, but I do not know who threw it."

All the same, as it came from John's direction, Willie knew no one to accuse, so went in and entered complaint against John.

"John Severance," said the master, "come out into the floor."

"I did not throw the snowball," said John, as he came out.

"You need not deny it," said the master, sternly. "Take your choice between making a confession before the school, and sitting down on the floor until I give you leave to get up."

Poor John! It was a humiliating thing to do; but he had nothing to confess, so there was no alternative, and he sat humbly down on the floor covering his face with his hands that no one might see the tears that would come at the injustice of the punishment.

But one did see, and one more powerful than all human beings spoke peace to that troubled young soul. Sitting on that worn and dusty floor, there came such a flood of light into the heart of John Severance, such a vision of God's mercy and justice in vivid contrast to the ignorance and injustice of man, that a prayer of glad hope came to his lips. "Father, accept me!" was the silent, but earnest petition; and somehow, in a moment, he felt all the burden of sin rolled away from his heart, and knew he was God's own child. After that the shame and weariness were nothing to him; the humiliating place seemed a kingly throne.

"You may take your seat now, John," said the master at length.

John arose, and a feeling came over him that he wanted to tell of his new-found joy.

"I would like to say a few words to the school," he said.

"Certainly," said the master, thinking that John was now prepared to make confession.

But to the surprise of both master and pupils, John, with no allusion to the matter of the snowball, went on in a few eloquent words, eloquent because sincere, to tell them of all he had thought and felt and experienced while sitting there in disgrace. It wrought upon the school powerfully, and when he had finished many young eyes were misty with tears.

That was the beginning of a powerful work of grace in the school. Before the winter was over more than fifty, including the master, were hopefully converted. John Severance, through all the years since, has well adorned the Christian profession, and still lives at a good old age to tell this story. That lawless snowball set in motion a chain of events whose ever widening influence only eternity can tell. Truly has it been said, "How poor an instrument may do a noble deed."—Congregationalist.

WHAT CAN WE DO?

Oh, what can little children do to make the great world glad?

For pain and sin are everywhere, and many a life is sad.
Our hearts must bloom with charity wherever sorrow lowers;

For how could summer days be sweet without the little flowers?

Oh, what can little children do to make the dark world bright?

For many a soul in shadow sits, and longs to see the light.
Oh, we must lift our lamps of love, and let them gleam afar,
For how should night be beautiful without each little star?

Oh, what can little children do to bring some comfort sweet,

For weary roads where men must climb with toiling, way-worn feet.

Our lives must ripple clear and fresh, that thirsty souls may sing;

Could robin pipe so merrily without the little spring?

All this may little children do, the saddened world to bless;
For God sends forth all loving souls to deeds of tenderness,
That this poor earth may bloom and sing like His dear home above;

But all the work would fail and cease without the children's love.

FAITHFUL.

For many past years, says the New York Witness, a familiar sight on crowded Fourteenth street has been an aged man playing a violin. Around his neck was a sign proclaiming him to be blind; at his feet sat a spitz dog who led him from place to place. A few days ago his dog saw another dog and gave chase, and it was then discovered that his owner was not blind, for he started in pursuit. From that time he gave up soliciting alms and played a flute while the dog danced. Last Saturday the spitz became weary and hungry and refused to work, which so exasperated the master that he made a kick at the dog, which the latter dodged, and the man fell to the pavement and broke his arm. He then chased the animal and broke his flute over its back. He was arrested, and in the crowd the dog followed to the station, and when an ambulance arrived to take the old man to the hospital the dog jumped in after him, but was thrown out by its owner. With one bound the animal was back again, looking mutely into his master's face, as if it seemed to regret its share of what had happened. But the old man didn't care to make friends, and out went the dog six times in succession. It then trotted beside the ambulance to the Gouverneur Slip Hospital. The dog gained admission to the hospital and found its way to its master's room, where the two created such a disturbance that, after the man's arm was attended to, he was taken back to the station-house and locked up. The dog followed him to the cell-door, and with the grating between them they made friends during the night. They were the most loving companions at Essex Market yesterday. The man was nevertheless sentenced to the work-house for two months, and the dog went with him to prison. Which is the nobler animal?

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Solomon's apostasy, vs. 4-8. We have here an illustration: First, of the danger of trying to copy the world in its fashions and customs. Solomon, in multiplying wives, only followed the example of other heathen kings around him, but this was exactly what God had forbidden. One of the most important commands for the Christian to obey, and the one most frequently broken is this: "Be ye not conformed unto the world." (2) We see the danger of entangling worldly alliances, and also Solomon's disobedience to another direct command, not to form any such alliances. (3) We are shown in his apostasy the miserable consequences his sin entailed. So the Christian is forbidden to be "unequally yoked with unbelievers," whether by ties of marriage, or in business and social relations. The result of disobedience is always, as in the case of Solomon, to lead the heart away from God. Dr. Pentecost, in his Bible studies, makes the following comment on this particular point in our lesson: "This is especially true of thousands of Christian men who have deliberately yoked themselves up with unbelievers in all manner of secret societies. This latter course of false alliance is doing more mischief to individual Christian men by turning their hearts away from God and his service, and to the church by depleting and robbing her of her male membership, than any other one modern enemy of Christ. There never was a time when the cry, 'Come out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord,' was more needed than now." It might at first view seem a politic measure to marry Pharaoh's daughter, and thus strengthen his kingdom, but it is never politic to do wrong. No defeat at the hands of their enemies could have inflicted so deadly a blow on the national power and glory as these corrupting alliances. Judah was said (Mal. 2: 11) to be "married to the daughter of a strange god." This may be said of our own nation, which, for the sake of revenue, has allied itself with the rum traffic. To debauch the morals of its people for gain is what no government that wishes to retain its power and stability can afford to do. It is hardly to be supposed that Solomon worshiped personally at these idol shrines, but he licensed them; and probably could have advanced reasons for doing so equally as sound as politicians advance to-day for licensing the saloon, or any other evil business.

2. The punishment of Solomon's sin, vs. 9-13. Solomon owed his throne to God, who had chosen him from all David's sons, in spite of the criminal intrigue that overshadowed his parentage; and endowed him with such wisdom that he became, though a mere youth, one of the greatest, as well as most popular, monarchs of his time. Yet all God's purpose of love in thus elevating him he had frustrated by his sinful ambition, his lust of power, and more than all, by his complaisant licensing of false worship to please his strange wives. The permanence of his kingdom had only been assured to him on condition that his heart should be perfect as the heart of David, his father. This meant that he should always have a loyal heart "hating every false way." We see by Solomon's punishment (1) that he forgot when copying the example of heathen kings the great difference between them. He was a child of God, they were not; and it is a parent's duty to punish, not other people's disobedient children, but his own. (2) It was for David's sake that one tribe was still left to Solomon. It may be for the sake of our pious forefathers that the kingdom is not rent from us as a nation,—that opportunity is still given us to fulfill His purpose, and become "a people whose God is the Lord."

I. Solomon had a great missionary opportunity, and he would have been safe if he had given himself up to it. Our country is in danger from the vast inroads of people whose principles and practice are subversive of our freedom, our morals, of temperance, the Sabbath and religion. Our only safety is in being missionaries to them, in converting them to better things. The whole church should look upon this immigration as a God-given opportunity to reach the multitudes whom we could never reach in their native land. The alternative is to Christianize them or be ruined.

II. Note Solomon's temptations, his safeguards, and his fall into sin; hence learn what to avoid, and how to be safe.

LITERATURE.

A KNIGHT OF FAITH. By Lydia Hoyt Farmer. Pp. 288. Price, $1.00. J. S. Ogilvie, New York.

This neat volume, by an author of some experience and celebrity, is an answer to the much-vaunted "Robert Elsmere" novel. The opening pages give the reader the impression that the Elsmere story is not difficult of annihilation. When, too, the author makes a preacher here address heaven in these words: "Almighty God! great Hierarch of heaven! Thou who inhabitest eternity, permit poor human creatures of the dust, created by thy will beneficent, to gaze unblinded by thy brightness dread, upon thy plan omniscient, by which thou dost ordain the rise and fall of nations,"—to read a long prayer modeled after this opening makes us certain the author is little accustomed to that important part of a Christian life. We do not wish to misjudge, but such praying makes more infidels than it saves. But other parts of the book are better. The Christian character is well maintained in the person of an old pastor's daughter who is thrown into fashionable society. The quotations from Napoleon and others on the character of Jesus Christ are excellent.

ALDEN'S MANIFOLD CYCLOPEDIA of Knowledge and Language. Vols. 18 and 19. Half morocco, 75 cents per volume.

These two volumes continue this handy cyclopedia from the title "Haliotis" to "Infancy." Each succeeding volume of this work emphasizes its superiority for popular use over its far more costly competitors. It is remarkably comprehensive. The fields of literature, science, art, and of all knowledge are widely gleaned. The topics are ably treated, many illustrations are given, and a vast amount of information is condensed into small space. The articles are written by experts in their various lines and are carefully and skillfully edited. The results of the latest discoveries and inventions appear, many of the subjects being brought down to June, 1889, and some even later, but we notice the latest grand addition to Chicago is not chronicled in the history of the late village of Hyde Park, Ill., which contained about 60,000 inhabitants, and was the largest in the United States.

A beautiful and attractive number for the holidays is Scribner's Magazine for December, though the text of the articles will appeal to the fancy and sympathy of readers rather than to their desire for instruction in practical affairs. "How the other Half Lives," by Jacob A. Riis, for many years police reporter of the Associated Press, should appeal strongly to every one interested in practical charity. The author's long familiarity with the many phases of New York tenement life prevents his coloring the article with any of the false sentiment which so often disfigures work in this field. He sees the slums as they are, accurately and clearly, and at the same time preserves the ready sympathy of one intensely interested in his fellow-man. The many illustrations in this article are not fancy sketches, but are made from instantaneous photographs taken by Mr. Riis in his strange adventures, often at considerable peril. "Contemporary American Caricature" engages the pen of Mr. J. A. Mitchell, of Life, under whose guidance many of the best humorous artists have been developed. Under the title, "The Age of Words," Hon. E. J. Phelps, late U. S. minister to England, presents, emphatically and with the ardor of one who has felt, the evils of an age in which the opportunities to speak in public and to print are practically unlimited and unrestricted. Dr. William Perry Northrup has given his impressions of a summer trip in Brittany, describing the religious festival known as "The Pardon of St. Anne d'Auray." This is the most richly illustrated paper in the number, containing pictures by six of the most skillful American artists, and fine engravings from paintings by Jules Breton and Dagnan-Bouveret.

The November African News has a frontispiece which will be studied with great interest. It is a copy of a photograph of Bishop Taylor and his African Conference meeting in Monrovia, Liberia, last year. In these intelligent colored faces we see the hope of that great continent. The Bishop's department is full of inspiration for the salvation of Africa. The turning of every eye to Africa, now that Stanley is bringing Emin Pasha out from its wild and savage interior makes every page of this magazine teem with interest.

A new magazine, the Arena, intended in some degree to contest the field with the North American Review and the Forum, has issued its first number. If we have blamed the Review in years past for its undisguised favoritism toward infidelity, this new magazine must be utterly condemned, for it is ab initio an organ of liberalism and infidelity. We hope it will find an open grave and get into it quick—and forever.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Mr. W. G. Carr, of Albany, N. Y., is at present instructing the workers at Mr. Moody's Bible Institute. In the mornings he expounds the Epistle to the Romans, and in the evenings Genesis. The students are greatly delighted and pleased with these expositions. Mr. Carr has a remarkable faculty of putting the truth in a terse and striking manner. These classes are open to all. The students are doing excellent work in visiting the poor, holding cottage and mission meetings, and assisting in regular church work. Four or five hundred calls are made weekly, twenty-five or thirty mission meetings conducted, and about the same number of cottage meetings.

—The Daily News thus speaks of a popular way to fill a church: "The First Presbyterian church was so crowded last night that it was almost impossible to find standing room after 7:30 o'clock. Rev. John H. Barrows, pastor of the church, had selected as the subject of his sermon, the beginning of a series, 'Four Centuries of American History.'"

—Rev. Dr. W. M. Lawrence, of the Second Baptist church of this city, lately reviewing its past history, reported the total number in its communion since the organization in 1864 with 236 members. The whole number was 4,156. The present membership is 1,401. The total contributions of all kinds during the same time were $704,330.66. Dr. Lawrence is a faithful pastor. He has been nine years with of the church, and has publicly warned his members against the secret orders.

—Dispatches from Minneapolis, Minn., to the daily press, are the authority that Ivan Panin, the Russian author, was baptized into the Central church, a week ago Sabbath evening, Rev. H. C. Mabie, D.D., pastor. All his life, up to the time of his graduation from Harvard, in 1884, Panin was an infidel. He went to Minneapolis a year ago to deliver a few lectures. Since becoming a Christian he has renounced lecturing on worldly topics, and will henceforth devote himself to preaching. The Tribune gave nearly a column to a review of his book, "Lectures on Russian Literature," recently published by G. P. Putnam's Sons.

—A chair, called the Woolsey Professorship of Biblical Literature, has been founded at Yale University to promote the study of the English Bible among the students. The corporation has elected Prof. W. R. Harper, Ph.D., to the chair, thus giving a permanent basis and sanction to much work that he has heretofore done voluntarily.

—The theological department of Talladega College has had twenty-eight graduates. All but four of the Congregational churches in Alabama are ministered to by Talladega men. Many have had training in the theological department who have not graduated, and are now engaged in work in various fields in the South.

—A remarkable revival has begun in the penitentiary at Kingston, Canada. Between eighty and 100 of the leading burglars, forgers, counterfeiters, pickpockets, etc., have been converted. Hunter and Crossley, the Canadian evangelists, are conducting the meetings.

—The Freewill Baptists, in their late General Conference at Harper's Ferry, Va., changed their denominational name to Free Baptist. By this newly-adopted name the Eastern churches have been known for several years. The feeling against the change was very earnest, but commanded only some eighteen of eighty-one voices on the final vote.

—The American Sabbath Union will hold its First Anniversary in New York City, on Tuesday and Wednesday, December 10th and 11th, inclusive. The meetings will be held in the Broadway Tabernacle, corner of Sixth avenue and West Thirty-fourth street, commencing Tuesday, 9:30 A.M. Among those who have consented to present papers or deliver addresses are: Rev. Arthur Little, D.D., Boston, Mass.; Rev. E. K. Bell, Cincinnati, Ohio; Rev. W. W. Atterbury, D.D., New York City; Rev. Charles E. Knox, D.D., Bloomfield, N. J.; Hon. E. L. Fancher, LL.D., New York City, President of the American Bible Society; L. Edwin Dudley, Esq., Secretary of "The Citizens' Law and Order League of Massachusetts;" Rev. H. C. Riggs, D.D., Binghamton, N. Y.; and Rev. T. A. Fernley, D.D., Philadelphia; Rev. R. S. MacArthur, D.D., New York City. Special railway rates have been secured on several of the principal lines.

"We are informed they have working signs and that Masonry was originally of the church, and one of its favored institutions to advance the members in their spiritual function. It had become perverted from its designs, and was restored to its true work by Joseph, who gave again, by angelic assistance, the key-words of the several degrees that had been lost; and when he entered the lodges of Illinois he could work right ahead of the most promoted; for which, through envy the Nauvoo lodge was excommunicated, or cut off by the Grand Lodge, on account of its own ignorance of the greatest truths and benefits of Masonry."

John Hyde, Jr., a Mormon elder, seceded in 1856 and published a revelation, "Mormonism, its Leaders and Designs," in 1857. On page 21 he says:

"On Friday, February 10, 1854, I was initiated into the mysteries of the 'Mormon endowment.' What was the nature of those mysteries, none before initiation could have an idea. To understand, it was necessary to receive them. His is a strong mind over whom a mass of ceremonies could have no influence, in which representations of the most august beings are made to move and talk, and which included the most solemn oaths, accompanied by frightful penalties. The obligations of Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship exercise no small influence over the initiated; nor am I surprised that a superstitious terror, in many instances, enchains these endowed Mormons at Salt Lake, in complete subjection to their prophet Brigham and his coadjutors.

P. 96.—"An oath with the penalty of throat-cutting was the condition of the first; heart being plucked out, etc., dragged into agonizing details, is the penalty of the second oath. New secrecy is impressed, and the second degree of Aaronic priesthood, with signs, grip, and key-word, is bestowed."

"Rocky Mountain Saints," by T. B. H. Stenhouse, for twenty-five years Mormon elder and missionary, and editor of the Salt Lake Daily Telegraph, says, page 698:

"The Mormon leaders have always asserted that Freemasonry was a bastard and degenerate representation of the order of the true priesthood. The reader needs, therefore, no other statement than that of the leaders to form an estimate of the signs, grips, passwords, rites and ceremonies of the Endowment house."

Mrs. Stenhouse, wife of the former, in "Story of a Life's Experience in Mormonism," page 365:

"We all kneeled down, and with our right hands up-lifted to heaven we took the solemn oath of obedience and secrecy. We swore that by every means in our power we would seek to avenge the death of Joseph Smith, the Prophet, upon the Gentiles who had caused his murder, and that we would teach our children to do so; we swore that, without murmur or questioning, we would implicitly obey the commands of the priesthood in everything; we swore that we would not commit adultery,—which was explained to mean the taking of wives without the permission of the holy priesthood; and we swore that we would never under any circumstances reveal that which transpired in the Endowment house. The penalty for breaking this oath... was then explained to us,—the throat of the traitor was to be cut from ear to ear, his heart and tongue were to be cut out; and his bowels were—while he was yet living—to be torn from him. In the world to come, everlasting damnation would be his portion."

"Mormonism, its Rise, Progress and Present Condition," by H. W. Green, 1870, page 48, says:

"A man behind the veil examined us... and cut with a small pair of scissors certain marks, beside others, the Masonic square and compass, upon the right and left breast of our garments." P. 49.—"It was a noticeable feature that the outside show of some of the regalia and furniture connected with these 'Endowments' were made to conform to those of Masonry."

Charles B. Waite, Associate U. S. Judge for Utah Territory, resided with his family for several years in Salt Lake City. Mrs. Waite has written two thrilling volumes on Mormonism. In "The Mormon Prophet and his Harem," she gives the following account of the oaths taken in the different degrees on page 253, and following:

Here oaths of inviolable secrecy, with the penalty of throat-cutting, are administered to the awe-stricken and intimidated neophytes. They are sworn to render implicit obedience to the priesthood, and to depend upon them for everything; especially not to touch any woman unless given through the priesthood. A sign, a grip, and a key-word are given to the endowees, and the First Degree of the Aaronic Priesthood is conferred.

An oath, penalty, the heart to be plucked out, with agonizing details, is administered. The utmost secrecy is impressed, and the Second Degree of the Aaronic Priesthood is conferred, with signs, grips, etc.

An oath is now administered, with particulars the most disgusting and revolting. Another sign, key-word, and grip, are communicated, and the First Degree of the Melchisedec Priesthood is conferred.

Here another oath is administered, binding the endowee to revenge the death of Joseph Smith on this generation; to cherish constant enmity toward the United States Government, doing all in his power for its overthrow; to baffle its designs, to refuse submission and renounce all allegiance, and to obey the church authorities, and no other.

Curses the most frightful, penalties the most barbarous, accompany the obligation, to add to its binding efficacy, and to insure secrecy. A new sign, grip, etc., complete the Second Degree of the Melchisedec Priesthood.

The endowees, fitted for heaven and celestial glory, pass "behind the veil," a new name is whispered very softly and quickly to each; certain marks, resembling the Masonic square and compass, are cut in the under garment, on the left breast; also a similar one on the knee. The candidates are then ushered into the full light and glory of the celestial kingdom. The brethren turn back to the veil, and admit their wives, whose garments are marked in a similar manner.

The candidates dress, get a lunch, and return to the "celestial kingdom" to hear a lecture by Kimball, explanatory of the whole scheme. The signs, tokens, marks, and ideas are many of them taken from the Masonic Order. "The intention of the mystery is to teach unlimited obedience to Brigham, and treason against the country."

J. H. Beadle, editor of the Salt Lake Reporter, wrote "Life in Utah" in 1870. He confirms on pp. 495-8 the fact that "the penalty of the first oath is to have the throat cut from ear to ear, with many agonizing details;" of the second oath "to have the bowels slit across and the entrails fed to swine—with many disgusting and horrifying details." The initiates also take a solemn oath to avenge the death of Joe Smith:

"that they will bear eternal hostility to the government of the United States for the murder of the prophet, and hold themselves absolved from all fealty, past or future; that they will do all in their power towards the overthrow of that government, and in event of failure, teach their children to pursue that purpose after them. Another oath of fidelity and secrecy is administered, of which the penalty is to have the heart torn out and fed to the fowls of the air."

"Much of it will be recognized as extracted from 'Morgan's Freemasonry Expose,' by those familiar with that work; and the origin of this is quite curious. When Smith and Rigdon first began their work they were in great doubt what to preach; a furious religious excitement was prevalent in the West, and portions of argument in regard to all the isms of the day may be found in the 'Book of Mormon.' But Anti-masonry was just then the great political excitement of New York, and the infant church was easily drawn into that furious and baseless crusade, which already ranks in history as one of those unaccountable popular frenzies which occasionally disturb our politics, rising from no one knows where, and subsiding as apparently without cause. Smith's 'New Translation' of the Old Testament is full of Anti-masonry: the fifth chapter of Genesis as he has it, which is added entire to our version, is devoted entirely to the condemnation of secret societies, and sets forth particularly how they were the invention of Cain after he 'fled from the presence of the Lord.' But the Brighamites declare the time has not yet come to publish or circulate this Bible, and it is only quoted by the Josephites, who use this chapter to condemn the Endowment. Some years after, however, the Mormons all became Masons, and so continued till they reached Nauvoo; there Joseph Smith out-Masoned Solomon himself, and declared that God had revealed to him a great key-word, which had been lost, and that he would lead Masonry to far higher degrees, and not long after their charter was revoked by the Grand Lodge. How much of Masonry proper has survived in the Endowment, the writer will not pretend to say; but the Mormons are pleased to have the outside world connect the two, and convey the impression that this is 'Celestial Masonry.'"

In "The Mormon's Own Book," by T. W. P. Taylder, pp. 139-147, a singular resemblance is pointed out between the ceremonies in the Eleusinia and the mysteries of the Mormon Endowment.

Mrs. A. G. Paddock, in "The Fate of Madame La Tour," pp. 334 and 5, confirms the above testimonies respecting the Mormon oaths. As also additional testimony might be given from the testimony of William Jarman, an ex-elder of the Mormon church, published in the Boston Herald, in 1882; and of David A. Burr, former clerk of the Supreme Court of Utah, in a lecture in New York in 1860-61. But the most emphatic testimony concerning the unity of the two systems of Masonry and Mormonism is given

BY MASONS THEMSELVES.

this city, who wrote asking if any record existed showing that Mormons were Masons, as follows:

"I find that Nauvoo Lodge was granted a dispensation Oct. 15, 1841. That it was suspended Aug. 11, 1842, and again authorized to work on the 2nd of Nov., 1842; and that the dispensation was revoked and a charter refused Oct. 3, 1843. The reason for this action is reported to be on account of irregularity and a disposition to accumulate and gather members without regard to character, etc., etc., etc."

Nauvoo was all Mormon at this time. Stephen A. Douglas, who was made a Mason in 1840, secured for them a charter for their city soon after.

MORMONISM IN CANADA.

It looks as if there is going to be a large Mormon immigration into the Canadian northwest unless it is checked by hostile legislation. The subject of Mormon immigration is arousing serious apprehensions in various parts of the country. If the Mormons could be relied on not to practice on British soil the peculiar customs that have caused them to find the United States too hot to hold them they would be welcome settlers. If Maitland Stenhouse correctly represents them, however, nothing is further from the thoughts of the Mormons than to abandon polygamy. They may be obliged to fly from Utah, and from one State to another, but they propose to retain polygamy. Mr. Stenhouse was a short time ago a member of the British Columbia legislature, but gave up his position to join the Mormons east of the Rockies. He announces his intention to test the Canadian law of marriage by uniting himself in wedlock after the Mormon fashion with more than one wife as soon as he can find two women willing to marry him. He asserts that nothing in the laws of Canada prohibits polygamy. From this and other indications it seems likely that unless the mischief is nipped in the bud Canada is destined to witness a repetition within her borders of the horrors the United States has had to contend with in Utah.

SUBSCRIPTION LETTERS.

The following have made remittances of money to the Cynosure from Nov. 25 to 30 inclusive:

S L Fay, M C Gerrard, J Mintier, A R McGregor, B Perrine, G J Graham, E Jacobs, J S Trask, A C Pratt, P Hamel, Rev G Allen, Rev L H Norem, C C Canfield, A W Millard, Mrs M Connet, S E Miller, J W Thompson, W Milligan, E J Hayes, Mrs M P Morris, B Fuller, J Rolston, O C Bedford.

THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE.

Every effort possible should be put forth by the friends of the cause for subscribers during this month. It is the harvest month for newspapers. Will you not make an extra effort to introduce your Cynosure into some new home? Who will see to it that all the old subscribers are visited in your place and their names retained? Show the Cynosure Premium List to your neighbors! Take the Clan-na-Gael and Mormon disclosures as they have appeared in the Cynosure, as an evident argument of the importance of this cause to every patriot and Christian, and secure subscribers for the Cynosure. It gives emphasis to a letter just received from Hon. S. C. Pomeroy, who writes:

"This is a season for thankfulness. Among the best of our items is the Cynosure. Thanks for it, and for all who love it, and thereby the cause." Presi-

Take Hood's Sarsaparilla 100 Doses One Dollar

The Chief Reason for the marvellous success of Hood's Sarsaparilla is found in the fact that this medicine actually accomplishes all that is claimed for it. Its real merit has won for Hood's Sarsaparilla a popularity and sale greater than that of any other blood purifier. It cures Scrofula, all Humors, Dyspepsia, etc. Prepared only by O. L. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

dent C. A. Blanchard writes: "I am loaded to the guards, but I will promise to try to get ten subscribers." Can any of us promise less? Let me hear from all who will try to get subscribers. The trying will do good. And subscribers can be obtained.

About 20,000 marked copies of the Cynosure were sent to the ministers of the Eastern States during November last, and our General Agent writes that in some instances at least great good has been done. Send for sample copies, and let each make himself equal to a thousand laboring in a more popular cause, and God will give victories.

HOLIDAY GIFTS

Do not forget the Cynosure of Nov. 21st and 28th, containing eight columns of choice presents. Preserve the papers, but do not forget that Dec. 15th will soon be here. Some have already sent in their orders, and are sure to get what they want.

Master's Carpet

BY

Past Master of Keystone Lodge No. 639, Chicago.

Explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the Lodge, thus showing the principles on which the order is founded. By a careful perusal of this work, a more thorough knowledge of the principles of the order can be obtained than by attending the Lodge for years. Every Mason, every person contemplating becoming a member, and even those who are indifferent on the subject, should procure and carefully read this work. An appendix is added of 32 pages, embodying which gives every sign, grip and ceremony of the Lodge together with a brief explanation of each. The work contains 425 pages and is substantial and elegantly bound in cloth. Price, 75 cents.

HOME AND HEALTH.

THE USE AND ABUSE OF THE BRAIN.

In a lecture delivered before the Industrial Educational Association, which met in New York, the eminent Dr. Wm. A. Hammond said:

"It is well for us to know that the emotions cause more unhappiness and crime than any other function of the brain. Human beings are governed by their emotions, and it is well that they should be, though it is emotions that wear away the brain. It is the emotions, such as anxiety, fear, sorrow and love. I consider that eight hours are sufficient for a man to use his brain, because if he exceed that time he becomes nervous and fretful, and an exhausted brain is an irritable brain. You may not feel the evil effects of the stress of brain work at the time, but you will sooner or later, when it will be too late. The men that work at night with their brains are the ones that expose themselves to danger and death, which will surely come unless the great strain on the mind is lightened.

"Any man that neglects the first warning of a brain or nervous system that is becoming exhausted, overtaxed, or about to break down, is not only a fool but a criminal. These signs are not many, but they tell the story of coming dangers only too plainly. Headache, sleeplessness, irritability of temper, neuralgic pains about the head and heart, unrestful sleep, nervous dyspepsia, dull eyes, heaviness of the head and stupid feeling after meals, worry about trifles, unreasonable anger, tingling and numbness in the limbs, cold feet and hands, flushed face and burning ears, palpitation of the heart, and irregular, weak and unsteady pulse. When you note these symptoms, beware; the brain and nerves are about to break down, and it may mean insanity, perhaps death."—The Home Guardian.

TAKE CARE OF THE SKIN.

We should remember that the skin is not only the covering for the body, but a most important depurating surface, as well; that is, it serves a very important part in the work of carrying out of the body certain impurities of a very poisonous character. When the skin ceases to act, serious symptoms soon make their appearance. Experiments have been made with animals, in which the varnishing of the skin resulted in producing death in a few hours. If frequent bathing is neglected, especially in summer time, when a large amount of poisonous matter is eliminated through the skin, this very important eliminative organ becomes clogged, or rather, so covered over with impurities that its work is necessarily interfered with. The skin also breathes. A dirty skin necessarily breathes bad air, and unquestionably absorbs back into the system impurities which are allowed to accumulate upon it.

CHEERFULNESS AN AID TO CURE.—There is a faith cure not often considered, but which is in constant operation and quite as effective in its work as that practiced by professional "healers" or "metaphysicians." It is the cure brought or assisted by the patient's faith in his doctor. Every physician knows the desirability of inspiring this feeling, and the best methods of establishing this confidence in persons under his treatment are made matters of professional study. It is only in part a question of medical skill. He may be recognized as a man of great knowledge and ability, and may lack that one essential characteristic that makes him welcome in every household. The possession of this quality is largely a matter of temperament, and its usefulness is hardly recognized by the fortunate practitioner, though he may conscientiously cultivate it through knowledge of the fact that cheerfulness is better than gloom in all the relations of life. It is the gospel of cheerfulness that this man unconsciously teaches, not the aggressive gaiety and unsympathetic jocularity that is an offence to an invalid and his friends, but a brightness of spirit that makes glad all who meet him.—Indianapolis Journal.

"Like Magic,"

THE effect produced by Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Colds, Coughs, Croup, and Sore Throat are, in most cases, immediately relieved by the use of this wonderful remedy. It strengthens the vocal organs, allays irritation, and prevents the inroads of Consumption; in every stage of that dread disease, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral relieves coughing and induces refreshing rest.

"I have used Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in my family for thirty years and have always found it the best remedy for croup, to which complaint my children have been subject."—Capt. U. Carley, Brooklyn, N. Y.

"From an experience of over thirty years in the sale of proprietary medicines, I feel justified in recommending Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. One of the best recommendations of the Pectoral is the enduring quality of its popularity, it being more salable now than it was twenty-five years ago, when its great success was considered marvelous."—R. S. Drake, M. D., Beloit, Kans.

"My little sister, four years of age, was so ill from bronchitis that we had almost given up hope of her recovery. Our family physician, a skillful man and of large experience, pronounced it useless to give her any more medicine; saying that he had done all it was possible to do, and we must prepare for the worst. As a last resort, we determined to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and I can truly say, with the most happy results. After taking a few doses she seemed to breathe easier, and, within a week, was out of danger. We continued giving the Pectoral until satisfied she was entirely well. This has given me unbounded faith in the preparation, and I recommend it confidently to my customers."—C. O. Lepper, Druggist, Fort Wayne, Ind.

A NEW TREATMENT.
Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is that a simple remedy has been discovered which permanently cures the most aggravated cases of these distressing diseases by a few simple applications made (two weeks apart) by the patient at home. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent free by A. H. Dixon & Son, 337 and 339 West King Street, Toronto, Canada.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canada Jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemason to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his name to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT TO IT.

In closing his letter he writes: "I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the 'Anti-Masonic excitement' by a sincere desire first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of 'secret societies.'"

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the latest historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, Nations Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

FARM NOTES.

CHEAP SUGAR COMING.—While the "Sugar Trust" is being fought and squelched in the courts, there is good news for the people anent sorghum saccharine production. For example, it is chronicled that Dr. Peter Collier, Director of the New York Experimental Station, who is one of the pioneers in the sorghum-producing industry, reiterates his belief that in the near future sugar from sorghum will be produced, on a large scale, at a cost not exceeding one cent per pound. In an experimental trial on 133 tons of cane, he obtained 130½ pounds of sugar per ton, and more than sixteen gallons of molasses. Dr. Collier says that the final triumph of sugar production from sorghum is better shown by individual successes than its failure is by individual failures. If it is successful anywhere, it may be made so in other places where like conditions can be secured. There have been many marked successes in sorghum growing for producing syrups, and with the proper appliances for making sugar on a large scale, there is no reason to doubt that its product will be equally successful. So let us sing of the "Sweet by and by" hopefully, so far as sorghum products are concerned. —N. Y. Witness.

THE DRESSED BEEF COMBINE.—Here is what a Western contemporary declares to be a fair statement in regard to this monopoly, put in the briefest space. A steer weighing 1,200 pounds is worth $18 to $20 in Chicago before he is killed. After he is killed, his killer sells him—beef, hide, hoofs, tallow, etc.—for $82. The farmer gets half as much for his steer as he did eight or ten years ago. The butcher charges to the consumers as much now as he did eight or ten years ago, and claims that he makes no more money. There is somebody standing between the man who raises beef to sell, and the man who buys beef to eat, that is making an inordinate profit. It has been pretty well ascertained that there is a small and select organization in the West—a beef ring—that is skinning the beef raisers and beef eaters of the whole country. The man or the body of men who shall effectually check this grasping combine will greatly benefit honest producers as well as the public generally.

WHY THE COLTS LICKED THE CALF.—A farmer named Hilton hired a very inexperienced boy to help about the place. One morning he told the lad to go and salt the calf over in the pasture. The boy took about a quart of salt, rubbed it all over the calf, working it into the hair. A gang of colts in the pasture scented the salt and got after the calf. They licked the hair all off the calf's back and tried to lick the hide off too. The farmer tried to catch the calf to wash it, but the creature, thinking he wanted to lick to, kept out of his way. The boy, calf and farmer are all unhappy. The colts are the only ones that got any fun out of it.

THE LOCATION OF BARNS.—It is not well to build barns too near the road, observes a recent writer, and we endorse his further criticism on the subject. It looks bad to see the road used for the barn-yard, with a lot of old drays, wagons and ploughs standing by the fence, and hay and straw scattered in front. This is not the worst objection, for when threshing barns are near the road it is often the case that horse power or engine is placed in the road and travel obstructed for two or three days. Barns should be from six to a dozen rods from the highway.

POP-CORN FOR HENS.—Let the boys and girls read this and then divide their pop-corn with the biddies, or at least give them the poorest or unpopable kernels. It is said that the grains of pop-corn that slightly char instead of popping are excellent feed for hens. Charred corn is at times beneficial to all kinds of stock, and pop-corn, even of the best, will not show every grain expanded into the light white ball of starch that has such a charm for the winter fireside. The dryness and hardness of these unpopped grains especially adapt them as food for fowls during the coldest weather.

THE VICTORY IS OURS

Bad Policy to Crow

Yet there are many conservative women who never try new ideas; they wait until an article has become the standard in its line—"until it can crow." To these women we want to say that PEARLINE has reached that point; it is now a necessity in millions of homes throughout the land.

INTELLIGENT WOMEN recognize its wonderful cleansing properties—admit that it is the modern soap—that it has no equal for ALL washing and cleaning purposes—that it effects a saving of time and labor—that by doing away with the worst of the rubbing it does away with the worst of the wear, and besides is absolutely harmless to fabric or hands.

Beware Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers are offering imitations which they claim to be Pearlina, or "the same as Pearlina." IT'S FALSE—they are not, and besides are dangerous. PEARLINE is never peddled, but sold by all good grocers. Manufactured only by JAMES PYLE, New York.

when soft and wet food is sometimes injurious.

PREPARING FOR WINTER.—As a "late autumn hint," the Country Gentleman suggests that farm and garden tools should be put in thorough order before they are stowed away for the winter. The iron and steel portions should be cleaned and rubbed bright, and then receive a thin coat of grafting wax, tallow, or any substance that will prevent rusting. The parts made of wood will be rendered more durable by a copious application of petroleum if unpainted, or if the paint has worn off; and afterwards one or two coats of paint will complete the work of protection.

If you have catarrh, you are in danger, as the disease is liable to become chronic and affect your general health, or develop into consumption. Hood's Sarsaparilla cures catarrh by purifying and enriching the blood, and building up the system. Give it a trial.

Irene E. Jerome's New Volume, IN A FAIR COUNTRY.

With 55 full-page original illustrations engraved on wood, and printed under the direction of George T. Andrews, with nearly one hundred pages of text, by Thomas Wentworth Higginson. Elegantly bound in gold cloth, full gilt, gilt edges, $5.00; Turkey morocco, $15.00; tree calf, $15.00; English seal style, $10.00.

A PERFECT UNION OF ART AND LITERATURE.

Over the clear-cut thoughts of a modern master of classic essay, one of the foremost of American artists draws the magic pencil which has achieved so many triumphs, and "in verdure clad," starts into life the rural beauties of "April Days," "My Outdoor Studies," "Water Lilies," "The Life of Birds," "The Procession of the Flowers," and "Snow." It was a happy thought that selected these models of literary genius for illustration, a loving homage to nature which guided the artist in her wanderings "In a Fair Country." The 55 illustrations which ornament this volume are not surpassed even by the former triumphs of "One Year's Sketch Book," "Nature's Hallelujah," "A Bunch of Violets," and "The Message of the Bluebird," household treasures throughout the land. Whether floating in her boat on Concord River, with its wealth of floral adornments, its scenic surprises in the windings of the stream in and about places made famous by Thoreau and Emerson, or in her loftier flights amid the hills of "beautiful Camden" down by the sea, where the grandeur of mountain views possesses charms to wake enthusiasm, she has exhibited the same fidelity to nature in her beautiful pictures, the same exquisite taste in the selection of her subjects, which have characterized her previous achievements. Without the illustrations the essays would be admirable; without the essays the illustrations would be charming, but the union of pen and pencil has produced a book in every way superb.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

Gen. Raum, Commissioner of Pensions, has forbidden members of the Catholic order known as Little Sisters of the Poor, taking positions on pay days at the office where pension clerks are paid, for the purpose of begging alms. The Sisters have been allowed to do this for some time.

CHICAGO.

The big lake barge David Dows, a five-masted vessel laden with 2,000 tons of coal, foundered and sunk about sixteen miles southeast of the city Friday afternoon. The crew all escaped.

George Brougham, one of Chicago's prominent meat packers, has disposed of his works on West Jackson street, sold out all his pecuniary interest in Chicago, and will sail from New York some day next week for Buenos Ayres for the purpose of establishing a monster meat-packing and beef-extract plant to compete with Herr Liebig's enormous works in the Argentine Republic. Mr. Brougham will act as manager of the business for an English syndicate of capitalists, who have subscribed a cool £1,000,000 sterling for the purpose of purchasing grounds, erecting the works, and starting the machinery.

FIRES.

Lynn, Mass., the city of shoes, was visited Tuesday afternoon by the greatest fire in its history, and, with two exceptions, the conflagration is the most disastrous that has ever visited New England. The exceptions are the great Boston fire of 1872, which destroyed $100,000,000 worth of property, and the Portland fire of 1866, which caused a loss of between $10,000,000 and $12,000,000. The fire started at 11:55 A.M., raged over eight hours, devastated a square mile of the business section of the city, and caused a loss estimated at about $10,000,000. The fire started in Mower's wooden building on Almont street, over the boiler, and spread with such rapidity that the fire department of the city was powerless to cope with it. This large wooden building was soon doomed, and the flames leaped across a narrow passage-way and communicated with the six-story brick block known as Mower's block. When the fire in these two buildings got well under way it was evident a terrible conflagration would result. Almost simultaneously the four-story wooden shoe factory of Bennett and Barnard, on Central avenue, and the four-story wooden building on Almont street caught fire, and after a time a hurricane of flame was in progress which blanched the cheeks of all the spectators. For eight hours the flames had full sway, the efforts of firemen and citizens seemingly being of no avail.

The most disastrous fire from which Boston has suffered since 1872, and one which in property loss more than rivals the great conflagration at Lynn on Tuesday, broke out at about 8:20 Thursday morning in the six-story granite building owned by Jordan, Marsh and Co. and occupied by Brown, Durrell and Co., dealers in dry goods, on Bedford street, corner of Kingston. The great fire of 1872 broke out at the corner of Kingston and Summer streets, and the alarm of the last fire was rung in from the same box that did similar duty at that time, when nearly $100,000,000 worth of property was consumed. The first alarm rung in was immediately followed by the first general alarm in Boston since 1872. The conflagration raged for six hours, burned over two acres of territory, covered by magnificent structures, and entailed a loss, according to the latest conservative estimates, of nearly $10,000,000. It is feared also that several lives were lost.

Saturday night at Minneapolis, Minn., eleven human lives and $500,000 worth of property was sacrificed by a fire that originated in the rooms of the Union League, on the third floor of the Minneapolis Tribune building. The fire was discovered shortly after 10 o'clock by a district messenger, and almost before an alarm could be turned in every door and window of the immense seven-story building was belching fire and smoke. There were upward of eighty men, including the editorial staff and a force of compositors, at work on the seventh floor, and these were penned in like sheep by the sheets of flame that separated them from the elevator and stairway. The fire department got a ladder up to the sixth floor, and from there thirty or forty men were taken out of the building. Those who were on the roof dared not descend, and several jumped to the roofs of adjoining buildings and escaped with a few bruises. Among the lost was Dr. Olson, President of the University of Dakota. The Tribune building was five years old, a seven-story brick structure, and valued at $300,000; it contained the Tribune newspaper, the Tribune-Star and the Journal, the Tribune job printing establishment, the editorial rooms of the Minneapolis department of the St. Paul Pioneer Press, the Svenska Folkets Tidning, a Swedish newspaper, and numerous law and real estate offices.

Dr. George F. Pentecost, in his notes on the Sabbath-school Lesson for December 15th, urges Christians against forming alliances with the ungodly, in marriage or in business. His words should be pondered by all, but especially the following, which form one of the noblest testimonies against secretism:

"God's Word prohibits the believer from forming alliances with the ungodly in society. Whenever the Christian surrenders himself to the society of the unbelieving world, his heart will be led away from God. This is especially true of thousands of Christian men who have deliberately yoked themselves up with unbelievers in all manner of secret societies. This course of false alliance is doing more mischief to individual Christian men by turning their hearts away from God and his service, and to the church by depleting and robbing her of her male membership, THAN ANY OTHER ONE ENEMY OF CHRIST. There never was a time when the cry, 'Come out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord,' was more needed than now."—Bible Studies, 1889, p. 389.

"Jefferson Davis out of danger," was the press announcement a few days since. That can never be, we thought, while God and justice live. Thursday the old man died. Aside from the immediate relatives, who should lament him? Even in the South, where he was once the idol of the people, his death should be regretted only for his own sake. He lived the exponent of the slave system, and that is confessed an evil. Let him be "unwept, unhonored, and unsung" by every American who rejoices that he did not succeed in the fearful crime of severing the Union and perpetuating the curse of slavery.

Last Wednesday President Harrison nominated Judge David J. Brewer, of the U. S. Court in Kansas, to be Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. The appointment seems to be received favorably and the Senate will probably ratify immediately. It will at least be a great relief to President Harrison's friends, who looked with much apprehension upon the probability not long since that Attorney General Miller would receive another proof of a law partner's affection and be given the place. Judge Brewer cannot be President, as he was born in Smyrna, Asia. His father was Josiah Brewer, a missionary. He is also nephew of Judge Stephen J. Field, who was assailed by Terry and his wife at Lathrop, California, two or three months ago. He has served two terms of six years each in the Supreme Court of Kansas, and is regarded as a man of great ability.

Dr. David McAllister, who addresses the Boston Conference this week, had an unpleasant encounter with a mob at his home lately. We hope Boston, out of respect for the memory of 1880, will not repeat the experience. Miss Cusack, the "Nun of Kenmare," was lecturing in Lafayette Hall, Pittsburgh, and Dr. McAllister was in the chair. One or two Romanists in the crowd were irrepresible, even with a policeman at their side. The audience was a very large one, and finally the turbulence seemed to break over all bounds, so exasperated were followers of the priests at the lashing given them by the eloquent speaker. When the disturbance seemed at its worst, a Spanish nobleman, Count de Ovies, who was visiting Pittsburgh, got a hearing, and ably corroborated Miss Cusack's statements. Why do Rum, Romanism, Mormonism and the lodge so rely on mobs and assassins to reply to those who object to their control?

The opening of the great three-million-dollar Auditorium in this city Monday night, with President Harrison and Adelina Patti as rival suitors for public admiration, came none too soon. Even the intense excitement over the Cronin trial as it draws to a close, can only modify the public agitation over the election of trustees who, under law, will superintend the construction of an immense drainage system from Lake Michigan to the Illinois river. This will involve the expenditure of $15,000,000 or more, and the office is a plum for boodlers. Both Democrats and Republicans have nominated trustees, and both tickets have been captured by the "boodle" element. An uprising of the better class of citizens put up another ticket, and the fight opened last week in earnest. Chicago has immense interests at stake in the matter; the law was secured by great effort, and the city cannot afford to bungle the job.

The Toronto Sentinel says it costs exactly five hundred dollars to call a man an Orangeman, in the Province of Quebec, unless it can be proved that he is a member of the order. The newspaper La Monde has just enjoyed that experience. It called a prospective candidate for office a Freemason and an Orangeman. The stigma was resented, a serious injury was alleged, and suit for damages brought for $10,000. It was proved that the plaintiff was a Freemason, but not an Orangeman, and the paper must pay $500 and costs for the libel. Had it appeared that he was not a Mason also, the damages would probably have been doubled. Quebec is Romanist, and this unusual decision will be attributed to the bigotry of the people of that province; but we look for the day when to be charged with such lodge membership will be considered a reproach and an insult among the most enlightened.

The New York Chamber of Commerce has received a report from its committee on foreign commerce, recommending that the President be requested to open negotiations with China, for a peaceful and friendly adjustment of all questions between the two governments, and for a restoration of the cordial good feelings which formerly marked their intercourse. The time has possibly come when the business interests of Eastern merchants may fairly offset those of the Irish on the San Francisco "Sand lots." Dennis Kearney several years ago subsided into a very ordinary employment agent, and "Dr." O'Donnell long since ceased his vile howling at the Chinese. The latter cannot vote in this country alongside the Irish to be sure, but they can manage business in their own to hurt somebody here. The absurdity of the outcry against "Mongolian Invasion" is seen in the fact that in thirty-seven counties of California, not including San Francisco, there were by the last census 350,000 people, of whom less than 8 per cent were Chinese, while thirty-three per cent were foreigners.

CHURCH AND STATE.

BY REV. R. C. WYLIE.

Having read with interest the articles in the Cynosure on the relation of the church to the state, I feel constrained to say a few words on the subject in general, and to define in particular the attitude of the National Reform Association on this matter as I understand it.

First of all, it is necessary to have a clear understanding of the meaning of the phrase, "Union of church and state." As single words have a meaning, so also such phrases as this have a meaning. As words often have different shades of meaning, so also may phrases have different shades of meaning. As a writer may use a word with one shade of meaning in his mind, and his readers or hearers may attach to it another shade of meaning, so also may the same thing be done with a phrase such as this. As a great deal of the difference in controversy may be traced to this confusion in the meaning of words, so also may much of the difference in the discussion of this vexed question be traced to the confusion in the meaning of this phrase.

The expression "Union of church and state," is not found in the Bible; neither is the thing which it expresses found there. Both the expression and the idea are newer than the Bible as far as the true religion is concerned. Union of church and state is just as old as the time of Constantine. When that Emperor became Christian, the empire became Christian also. The relation it now assumed towards Christianity was the same as that formerly occupied toward heathenism. That relation was of heathen and not Biblical origin. The state had control of the church. The Emperor called councils and presided at them. "Constantine the Great changed his religion, but not his views of absolute power. The head of the empire was also the Pontifex Maximus of the religion of the empire. He called the first œcumenical council which decided the fundamental dogmatic question of the eternal divinity of Christ, and he considered himself a bishop of bishops in the external affairs of the church." The czars of Russia consider themselves the successors of the Byzantine emperors, and we find this same form of union of church and state prevailing in the Russian empire.

In the Reformation period the Protestant princes asserted the same principle. "They acted on the maxim that the owner of the region is the owner of its religion." The reformers, it must be conceded, made some concessions on this point to the princes, especially where the bishops opposed the Reformation. This same form of union exists in the British empire. The Queen is the head of the Episcopal church in England, of the Presbyterian in Scotland, and as Empress of India is the protector of the Hindoo faith as well as of the various Christian missions.

With the fall of the Western Empire and the rise of the Roman hierarchy, a new form of union of church and state was developed. The Pope wears a triple crown, which means authority over the church, authority as a civil ruler, and supreme authority over all other civil rulers. This form of union prevailed in Spain, Portugal, France and Austria, and some other countries.

From this historical view of the question we are prepared now to tell more definitely what we mean by the expression union of church and state. By the term state we do not mean a constitution of government and a code of laws. Much less do we mean a system of political science. We mean the body of people permanently residing in a country under an independent government. By the term church we do not mean a system of theology, nor a creed; but we mean a body of professed Christians with a creed and rules of discipline.

A union of church and state could not be formed merely by the incorporation into the frame of government of certain politico-moral principles. It is just at this point where confusion in the use of the term begins to arise. Many appear to use the term as expressive of the presence of any moral principle in the constitution, laws, or customs of a state. Against this usage of the term there should be raised a most emphatic protest. So far as I know, no one has ever maintained that a union of church and state is brought about by a church incorporating into its creed certain principles relating to civil government—principles that are both political and moral. Every church, so far as I know, does this. And in the act of doing it they acknowledge the existence of principles that concern both church and state. It would be as reasonable to say that the embodying of such principles in a church creed forms a union of church and state, as to say that such a union is accomplished by the incorporation of similar principles into the constitution and laws of a nation.

Union of church and state, as history defines the phrase, is the union in one or the other of the forms defined above, of the organic body formed of human beings professing a creed which constitutes the church, with the organic body of human beings occupying a region of country with an independent form of government, called the state. This is a union of church and state, and nothing else is; and persons who use the expression in any other sense either do it ignorantly or maliciously.

The next question that arises is, "What was the relation of church and state in the Hebrew theocracy?" I agree with Bro. Foster. They were as completely divorced as it was possible for them to be. I am aware that many, perhaps the majority, think otherwise. But the more I read what they have to say, the more convinced I am that they have not studied their Bibles wisely in respect to this matter.

Israel presents the first case in history of a separation of church and state. In all other nations the kingly and the priestly offices were united in the same person. This was true in Egypt, in Assyria, in Babylon and everywhere else. It was true in Israel until the giving of the law at Sinai. But that law severed them, and they were never again united in all the history of Israel except in the times of great crises, and in an extra-constitutional manner.

There was no financial support of the church by the state in Israel. No appropriation of funds was made by the state to support religion. The law of the tithe was not a civil law as it afterwards was in the nations of Europe. There were no civil penalties for neglecting its payment. Contributions for the support of religion were purely voluntary. Witness the gifts for building the Tabernacle and the Temple. Witness also the offering of sacrifices.

It is true that David erected a Tabernacle for the Ark, and gathered material for the Temple. It is also true that Solomon built the Temple, as Josiah afterwards repaired it. But there was no more union of church and state in this than there would be if the President of the United States should take the lead in erecting or repairing a church building. The gifts in every case, whether from king or people, were purely voluntary. The promises in the Bible to the effect that kings are to become nursing fathers and their queens nursing mothers to the church, and that the kings of Tarshish and the isles shall bring presents, and the kings of Sheba and Seba offer gifts, and many others to the same effect, are to be understood, not of any legal enactment for the financial support of religion, not of the payment of pastors' salaries out of the national treasury, but of voluntary support given religion by kings and peoples. Giving for religious purposes is a grace. To provide for it by legal enactment would destroy this feature of giving.

A Roman centurion in Galilee built the Jews a synagogue. But this did not unite the Roman state with the Hebrew church. Herod the Great rebuilt the Temple. But I have never known of any one to maintain that there was any sort of union between the Roman state and the Hebrew church in the days of Herod. Neither was there a single act from the days of Moses down to the fall of Jerusalem that can be construed to teach a union of church and state in the Hebrew theocracy.

I will not attempt now a discussion of the views of the Scotch Reformers on this question. It must be borne in mind that there were two prominent sources of revenue to the church, first the tithes, and second the vast estates that came into the hands of the church before the Reformation by private or regal gift. It was a vexed question what should be done with these estates. In considering the views of the Reformers on the question of public support for religion, it is necessary to be informed on this whole question as to the sources of revenue. Neither is it to be supposed that the Reformers had arrived at ultimate truth on this question, and it would be very unfair to take their utterances with reference to the local question, as intended to be the utterance of ultimate truth.

What is the position of the National Reform Association on this subject? It has repeatedly declared its opposition to union of church and state. Opponents persist in charging us with favoring such a union. One of four things follows: (1) The National Reform Association does not know what union of church and state is, and is advocating such a union ignorantly. Or (2) the National Reform Association does know what union of church and state is, and is knowingly advocating it and trying to deceive the people. Or (3) the opponents of National Reform do not know what union of church and state is, and are ignorantly opposing us. Or (4) these opponents do know what such a union is, and purposely misrepresent us, and are trying to deceive the people.

From what I know of the National Reform movement and the men who advocate it, I believe that neither the first nor the second of the above suppositions either is or can be true. From what I know of the opponents of the movement, I am convinced that either the third or fourth of the above suppositions may be true. And in some cases the one is true, in some the other. One thing is certain; these opponents attach a new meaning to the expression for which there is no warrant in all history. The National Reform Association is in favor of incorporation, not a church creed, but certain politico-moral truths into the Constitution and laws of our country. These are principles which are both political and moral. It is dangerous for a nation to ignore them at the bidding of infidels.

This Association is not in favor of the financial support of the church by the state. Whatever individuals may hold on this subject, it is no part of the constitution or teaching of the Association.

THE HARLOT AND THE BEAST.

BY REV. E. R. WORRELL.

The admonition of the Cynosure, editorially given, to "study the Apocalypse" should certainly receive attention from the readers who are not already pursuing some line of inquiry concerning the "things which must shortly come to pass." Every reader of this most excellent Christian-reform newspaper is interested in its teachings if he does not always endorse them. What follows here is a departure in some degree from the teachings of the Cynosure (editorial in Nov. 21st issue) concerning "last things." It is a carefully considered opinion, not offered in a spirit of captiousness nor with dogmatism.

"The Cynosure has constantly taught that all secret societies will fuse together in the agitations of the last days which precede the coming of Christ." This as a general proposition is perhaps correct. But as to "the proofs that popery and lodgery are one and the same thing," they do not seem to be conclusive. The similarity of the doctrine (i. e., salvation by ceremonies) found in each is more apparent than real. Popery really teaches this doctrine, and does so with effect. The end aimed at by it, namely, the subjugation of the human conscience, is reached in millions of cases. Many human beings to-day sincerely hope for the salvation of their souls through literal obedience to the ceremonial law of popery. Lodgery, on the other hand, does not really teach this doctrine. The vaporings of Masonic writers of high authority, the secret rites of the lodge, the public ceremony, all fail to lead the initiated into the faith that the safety of their souls depends upon lodge ceremony. The claim of the individual Mason sometimes made, viz., "Freemasonry is a good enough religion for me," is bravado. The act of the lodge in burying a member is a piece of mean but bold policy, at par with the mention of the names of good and great men as Freemasons who were never inside a lodge, by which it seeks to get glory to itself. A man may be buried "with Masonic honors" (?) who has ignored all Masonic ceremonies for many years, if his burial subserves the interests of the lodge. To bury, or not to bury, is not a question to which the lodge gives answer according to the effect it will have on the doctrine of "salvation by ceremonies" or any other doctrine. The lodge is never found earnestly contending for any faith. Its creed consists of negations; its god is no god (atheism). The Catholic priest denies burial in a consecrated cemetery to him who has neglected some ceremony of the church, thus making faith produce works. Catholics both believe and act on the doctrine in question. Freemasons do neither.

In whatever manner these two institutions, popery and lodgery, may have touched one another in the course of their historic development, their organic ideas were very different. At one time the church at Rome was a constituent part of the true Bride of Christ. She bore her part in the commission to evangelize the world. She made the mistake of seizing the temporal sword as an instrument of spiritual warfare. Once possessed of temporal power, it ceased to be a means to an end and became the end itself, for the attainment of which the church suffered her glad message to the world to be distorted and corrupted beyond recognition. She is represented by the woman who took leaven and hid it in three measures of meal until the whole was leavened. The woman of this parable is the church, no longer a true bride, a bad woman, but still a woman. The leaven is corruption, the meal is food needful to the souls of men. Papists are being fed on corrupted doctrines. On the other hand the principle upon which the lodge organized was pure selfishness. It was a secret combination on the part of a few to secure for themselves the good things of earth, which in justice should be distributed to the many. The root idea was the attainment of power to serve the animal man. Man is naturally religious, and religion was adopted by the lodge so far as it could be, without conflicting with its organic principle, selfishness. A religion "having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof," is exactly suited to a fleshly life, and that is the kind of religion the lodge has. It is truly the devil's religion, though not yet manifestly so to men. The church seized temporal power in order that she might better do her spiritual work. There never was true religion in a lodge as such. There has been in the Romish church. The lodge has a false religion for the same reason that the church corrupted the true. And now popery and lodgery appear in the arena to fight out the duel for supreme temporal power. Against each other they are using whatever weapons come to hand—secretism, ritualism, ecclesiasticism.

In Rev. 17 we have the record of what John saw in "the wilderness," to which place an angel carried him to show him "the judgment of the great whore," and he "saw a woman sit upon a scarlet-colored beast." This woman, it is conceded generally by Protestants, is a symbol of the Romish church. The "scarlet-colored beast" is the same as that described in Rev. 13: 2, identified by Biblical scholars with the "fourth beast" of Dan. 7, out of which arises a king (Dan. 7: 25) identified again with the "lawless one" of Paul (2 Thess. 2), believed to be the personal anti-Christ which is to come. Anti-Christ was already at work in Paul's time, but not able to reveal himself until a certain hindering power should be taken out of the way. Upon this dreadful beast the drunken harlot takes her seat. It is for her the hour of seeming triumph. "She saith in her heart, I sit a queen." The great world-power to whom the dragon gave "his power, and his seat and great authority," is seen under the woman's control. But it is the hour of God's judgment upon her. Ten kings arise; "these have one mind and shall give their power and strength unto the beast" (Rev. 17:13). "These shall hate the whore and shall make her desolate and naked and shall eat her flesh and burn her with fire" (vs. 16). Anti-Christ shall destroy popery and be destroyed by Christ himself (Rev. 19). All this does not prove that lodgery will not be destroyed along with popery. But is it not true that lodgery, as it is to-day, bears a striking resemblance to the photograph of "the beast" given by inspiration in the writings of Daniel, Paul and John? And if such likeness exist, may it not be that the personal anti-Christ who is to appear shall rise up out of the system of lodgery? Answers to these questions cannot here be given, but they suggest reasons for believing that popery and lodgery are as distinct entities as the harlot and the beast.

IRA D. STONE.

Governments are instituted among men to secure the rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. It was because these rights were trampled under foot by the Stuarts and the House of Brunswick that the colonists bade defiance to the "Mistress of land and sea," and declared to the world all men to be created free and equal.

Liberty is indeed a priceless jewel, and is set in the heart of every true American citizen. It has been purchased by the sacrifice of home and loved ones. For it brave men have shed their life's blood. Statesmen and orators have put forth their grandest efforts to awaken the people to a realization of its privileges. And the mothers of our land have unceasingly labored to instill into the minds of their children the great principles of civil liberty.

What is civil liberty? Where is it found? Does it exist among the savage and barbarous tribes of North America? Or is it to be sought for in a country that is governed by a parliament of the people? Where do we expect to find civil liberty most highly developed? in China, under an absolute autocracy; or in the United States, under a constitutional government?

The answers to these questions are evident. If a nation is to enjoy civil liberty, its government must be in the hands of the people. The laws of the land must be supreme. The rulers must be subject to these laws as well as the ruled. No oath of allegiance to any other power than that of the state can be permitted. The state must be the only power that can try and punish criminals. Every individual in the whole land must have the privilege of doing as his conscience may dictate, in so far as his acts do not interfere with the rights of others.

When any institution attempts to take these powers from the hands of the people, or government, that institution becomes dangerous to our civil liberty, and should not be tolerated by a free and self-governing people. Slavery did this, and for two hundred and fifty years was a blot upon our nation's honor and self-respect. As slavery was, so secret societies are. Slavery bound the Negro in servitude. Secret societies bind men of every color, nationality, and religion. Slavery hunted its victims with the lash and blood-hound. Secret societies call them out after night, murder them, and throw their bodies into a river, or conceal them in "catch basins."

Secret societies are dangerous to our civil liberty because they enslave the individual. They require an oath of allegiance contrary to the principles of both church and state. They hold this oath superior to Christian or civil duty, and thereby take from the man liberty of conscience and freedom of speech.

Is a member of a Masonic lodge in a state of slavery? Mackey says that the power of the master of a lodge "is absolute. He is supreme arbiter so far as the meeting is concerned; nor can any appeal be made from his decision to that of the lodge." "His commands must be implicitly obeyed." "He has the right of congregating his lodge whenever he thinks proper and closing it any time that in his judgment may seem best." Can men who value liberty bind themselves to implicit obedience to the master of a lodge? Have we forgotten that page in our history where our grandfathers refused to pay a tax on tea without a voice in saying how much that tax should be, and how it should be levied? Never did despot have more complete power than a lodge master? And yet this man and his whole lodge are subject to a still greater tyranny. The Grand Lodge is ruler of the subordinate lodges. Mackey says, "It is completely despotic," and that "its edicts must be obeyed by the local lodges without examination." According to Chase, "the Grand Lodge has the power to erase or extinguish any local lodge; to seize its money or property; to tax lodges or individual members; and to inflict punishment with no limitation except its own discretion."

From this we see that every member of the Masonic lodge places about his neck a noose which only needs the discretion of the Grand Lodge to swing him into eternity. Shall men be trained to submit to a secret, irresponsible despotism located in a lodge or triangle of a lodge? These institutions are among us. On every hand we see their influence. Thousands of young men are every year binding themselves to a slavery that is more wicked than ever was that of the Negro.

Behold the candidate for admission into the Masonic lodge, blindfolded, half-naked, and with a halter about his neck. He is brought before the altar, where, kneeling and placing his hands upon the Bible, square and compass, he swears "to conceal and never reveal the secrets of Masonry." In other degrees he promises "to obey all signs given, handed or sent by the hand of a brother Mason;" "to keep the secrets of a Royal Arch Mason as inviolable as his own, murder and treason not excepted." Is this man free? When such oaths as these become universal, where will our civil liberty be? There is no advantage in our republican government, so far as civil liberty is concerned, if our citizens ally themselves to this secret empire.

When the individual swears allegiance and obedience to a secret fraternity, he has sworn away, not only his personal liberty, but also the possibility of good citizenship. Henceforth he will be called upon to serve two powers. But reason, as well as the Bible, teaches that no man can serve two masters. Therefore, when the laws of the state and the laws of the lodge conflict, he must choose which he will obey. If the lodge to which the man belongs is a strong one; if its oaths are stringent and its members subject to secret and severe punishments for disobeying its rules; and if, on the other hand, they are bound to shield each other from the consequences of a violated law, we can safely conclude that that man will disobey the laws of the state rather than those of the lodge.

This fact has been demonstrated over and over again. It was during the trial of the Morgan murderers that Judge Marcy was led to exclaim: "If men will defy heaven and earth, what can human courts do?" At this same time John Q. Adams said: "Go to the court; you will find witnesses refusing to testify upon the express grounds of Masonic obligations, avowing that they consider these obligations as paramount to the laws of our land." It was but recently, in the trial of Alex. Sullivan on the charges of the now martyred Dr. Cronin, that a man by the name of Reynolds refused to give testimony, claiming that his office in the Clan-na-Gael exempted him from testifying. If these instances are true, the fact cannot be denied that men hold their oaths to secret organizations to be superior to the laws of the land.

When a fellow member commits a crime, no matter how heinous, or how worthy of punishment it may be, his brothers in the lodge are compelled to sear their consciences, hold their tongues, and aid in concealing him from the clutches of the law. Silence is not only required of a person while a member of a lodge, but according to his oath, he is obliged never to reveal the obligations to which he has sworn obedience. Once a lodge man always a lodge man, is their motto.

Trial by jury, that "buttress of liberty," as Chatham called it, is one of the things for which the colonists struggled. It has become imbedded in the very marrow of our political system. Without it judges become arrogant, rules oppressive, and civil laws of none effect. Yet even this institution is being undermined by those secret orders that claim the right to inflict punishment, even to the death penalty, upon their members. Moreover, our whole judicial system is so permeated with the virus of these secret organizations that it is well nigh impossible for justice to be obtained. It is a sad state of affairs, but it seems that Thaddeus Stevens spoke the truth when he said: "By Freemasonry trial by jury is transformed into an engine of despotism and Masonic fraud."

It makes one shudder, even at this day, to read the story of the "Knights of the Golden Circle." According to Nicolay and Hay this organization was composed of 500,000 members. It was officered by men of both Union and Confederate armies. Its ranks were filled by deserters from the Union army, border ruffians, and those men in the North who sympathized with the South yet dared not faced the battle, choosing rather to join a hidden oath-bound institution. The plan was to overthrow the Government, establish the Confederacy, continue the Negro in bondage, fill the public offices with their own members, and carry on the affairs of the nation to suit themselves. The plan failed. But it has taught us a lesson. It shows what men will dare to undertake when they think their acts will be concealed by the veil of secrecy.

The Ku-Klux, the White Caps, the Clan-na-Gael and the Masonic societies are all political in their character, and are therefore directly opposed to the principles of liberty given to us by the framers of our Constitution.

Can we doubt as to the influence of secret societies upon our civil institutions? We see men take oaths of allegiance to powers that subvert the fundamental principles of our land. We see these same men stand in our courts of justice and refuse to give testimony because their lodges forbid. We see juries disagree and guilty prisoners go free, because they and some of the jurors belong to the same lodge. We see citizens divested of their right of personal choice and compelled to vote as their lodge may dictate. We see men bind themselves together for the express purpose of destroying our Government. We see editors, lawyers and ministers daring not to express their opinions upon secret societies, or doing so only to find their positions taken from them, their business destroyed, and their hopes for all future success blasted. We see men of every rank and avocation in life cower and hold their tongues in silence for fear of having rolled upon them the anathemas and hatred of this secret empire.

Are we Americans and submit to these abuses? Are we the descendants of those brave souls who dared bid defiance to European despotism, and cower before these temples of iniquity? Must we stand by and see our noble flag, the emblem of liberty, trailed in the dust behind the chariots of those who swear allegiance to a secret world? It is time to be up and doing. We may be few in number; we may have the pitying contempt of those who think they stand secure in their secret fastnesses. But if we have God and the right on our side we shall prevail.

Statistics are not always infallible, but those given by the bureau of labor in regard to the condition of the working girls of the country is probably as near reliable as statistics ever come because there is little or no reason to falsify them. Recent investigation by this bureau would seem to prove the theory that girls are driven to lives of shame by being ground by hard-hearted employers a false one. In this direction and to determine whether working girls went to recruit the houses of prostitution to a greater extent than other classes of young women, investigation was made in fourteen of the principal cities of the country. In certain of the cities investigation was made as to the number of women who had been married before entering upon a life of shame. In Boston it was 7 per cent; Chicago, 25 per cent; Cincinnati, 20 per cent; Louisville, 46; New Orleans, 2 per cent; Philadelphia, 3 per cent; San Francisco, 25 per cent. The table shows that the largest number of the fallen coming from any one occupation are those doing housework, hotel work and cooking, the number being 20 per cent of the whole. The next largest number are seamstresses, including dressmakers. But the most alarming condition which was revealed is the large number who enter upon a dissolute life from the home, which is 32 per cent. This relieves the working girls of a most serious suspicion. — Buffalo Times.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

The Farmers' League at Springfield, and What they Discussed—The Gypsy Moth at Bedford—The Secular Papers begin to Speak out about the Swindling Endowment and Benefit Orders—A Talk with Miss President Shafer—The Greek Letter Societies of Wellesley College.

The State convention of the Farmers' League, which recently gathered in the city hall at Springfield, was a proof that the farming interests of Massachusetts are not yet dead; and also demonstrates the superiority of such open societies for the honest tiller of the soil, to secret alliances like the Grange, which I am sorry to see the Connecticut Home is advising the farmers of that State to join on the ground that 75,000 Michigan farmers have within the past six months united with the order to defend themselves against monopolies and trusts. If the Home would look candidly into the matter, it might find out that the Grange was as much of a monopoly as any against which it is nominally arrayed.

The chief subjects of discussion were "honest butter," and the tramp nuisance. The resolution which alluded to the question of honest vs. bogus butter as "one of vital interest to the home," sounded a little funny, for say the worst we can of the latter, whoever heard of its breaking up a home, causing divorce suits, or being otherwise destructive of domestic harmony! Many of these same farmers voted last spring against the amendment from a tender regard to their barrels of cider wherein lay coiled the poisonous alcoholic adder, the destruction of which is a more vital question than all the oleomargarine butter that was ever made. However, no one can deny that the subject has an importance of its own, not only on account of its bearing on agricultural interests and public health, but national integrity.

The resolution on that outgrowth of our modern civilization—the tramp—which calls for legislation conferring police powers on property owners by which they can defend themselves against trespass, thus making "every man's house his castle," gives a glimpse of one of our national perils in the increasing numbers of those who lead a vagabond existence, and the seeming powerlessness of either the law or the Gospel to reach the source of the evil.

It is said that a movement has been started to consolidate all the one million farmers in the United States who belong to agricultural societies, into one grand federation. The ostensible object of the movement will be the protection of the farmer, the real point aimed at, more political power for the Secret Empire, for the Grange will be the controlling power of any such federation.

There are said to be fifteen non-secret endowment assemblies in process of formation in Massachusetts, four in Connecticut, two in Rhode Island, and two in New Hampshire. But they have the same Masonic origin, and are nothing but a cunning move on the part of the Secret Empire to rope in that class, larger than many suppose, who have an instinctive dislike to secrecy. It is an encouraging sign that the secular papers are beginning to speak out on the subject.

The Springfield Republican, alluding to the new order of the Fraternal Circle, says: "Another of those speculative ventures formed upon the model of Mrs. Howe's bank, was projected locally last week by grace of the idiocy or carelessness of the legislature of 1888. This new rival of the Five Year Benefit and Iron Hall orders 'goes them one better,' promising to pay $200 in two years."

A Traveler correspondent, commenting on a remark of the Malden Mail, "But shouldn't this kind of swindling be stopped?" says: "Insurance Commissioner Merrill in his report to the legislature under date of May 3, 1888, speaking of the order of the Iron Hall, very clearly sets forth the dangers of this class of so-called insurance, yet the legislature practically snaps its fingers in the face of this trusted official's able and exhaustive argument, and passes laws which make legal what the Mail terms a swindle. Just so long as the members of our General Court refuse either to listen to words of wisdom from those whose experience fit them to give advice, or look into and study the matter for themselves, just so long it will be impossible for such swindling to be stopped."

It adds this bit of wise counsel which, if followed, would offset the idiocy of our law-givers and make it practically harmless: "Consult history, consult simple mathematics, use the same judgment in these matters as you would in your business, and these so-called "fraternal" associations, advertising, as they do, from $500 to $1,000 in from five to seven years on an investment of from $100 to $300, will soon die the death they so justly deserve."

It will be remembered that the New York State convention requested the writer to lay before Miss Shafer, president of Wellesley College, a resolution deprecating the presence of secret Greek Letter fraternities among the girls of that institution; and she is glad to be able to state that there has been some misapprehension on this point.

Miss Shafer positively assures me that in Wellesley these societies have no affinity with other college societies which go by that name, and that before the girls were allowed to join them, their constitution had first to be read and approved by the faculty. She also informed me that on one occasion proposals came from a certain Western college, for the Greek Letter society there—the same one of which Miss Willard is a member—to be introduced at Wellesley; but as it included a certain amount of secrecy, some details of the constitution not being allowed to be made public, the proposal was considered ruled out at once by this very fact, it being fundamentally opposed to the laws which govern Wellesley College.

That they cannot affiliate with even the society to which Miss Willard belongs, because forbidden to have anything secret in their constitution, seems to prove that the Greek Letter societies of Wellesley are what Miss Shafer assures me they are—purely literary organizations like the societies of Art or Philosophy. But this being the case, it seems unfortunate that they do not drop a name so thoroughly imbued with secret associations and be known simply as literary societies. Then no misapprehension could possibly arise.

The facts given above are very encouraging as showing that one of the foremost woman instructors of the age, as well as the faculty of the largest female college in the world, disapprove of secrecy as a principle. The coming Congress of Churches at Boston, I believe, will, under God, do an important work in enlightening our educated Christian public to see that it is impossible to denounce the Clan-na-Gael, or the oaths of the Endowment House, and then give their tacit approval to college associations, poisoned by the same virus, however diluted, of organized secrecy.

ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 6, 1889.

Since I last wrote you the Fifty-first Congress convened, organized, took its oaths, drew its seats, and heard the President's message. The Senate, House of Representatives, and Administration are now formally in the hands of the Republican party. The new Speaker now has the pleasure and perplexity of forming his various committees. That finished, the business of legislation will begin.

It was precisely at noon on Monday last when, for the first time in nine months, the flags were hoisted on the staffs from the two wings of the Capitol. Long before that hour an immense throng of spectators crowded the galleries and lobbies, elbowed, pushed, peered over each others' heads, and enacted the scenes so familiar to Washingtonians who frequent the Capitol on these biennial opening days.

There was no excitement at either end of the Capitol, but, as is usual, the attractions on the House side were the greater. The staid dignity of the Senate, with its old time members and officers, promised nothing of interest; while in the popular body a slender majority was about to undertake the work of organization, menaced by a minority upon whose indulgence the success of their schemes in a large measure depended. Since the gusty battles over the tariff bill of the last session, that dangerous minority, apparently softened by the lapse of time, was kind and compliant enough, until the majority proceeded to deprive it of its spiritual consolation in its chaplain. Then it declared itself, and reinforced by a contingent of independent Republicans, showed the majority upon what a fragile thread will hang partisan measures during the coming two years.

The sensation in regard to the chaplaincy developed while the election of the other House officers was in progress. The usual formal resolution presenting the caucus nominees was offered by Representative Henderson of Illinois. Then Mr. Cheadle of Indiana, a Republican, moved an amendment, substituting for the chaplaincy the name of Rev. W. H. Milburn, the blind chaplain of the two past Congresses, for that of Rev. C. B. Ramsdell, the caucus nominee. A parliamentary struggle ensued, ending in the Democrats securing the adoption of the amendment and its final passage by 160 to 155.

When the gentleman from Indiana was interviewed in regard to his bolting the caucus by favoring the election of Mr. Milburn as chaplain of the House of Representatives, he said his action was based on thoroughly non-partisan reasons. Some time ago he was talking to Mr. Milburn in regard to his means of support, and he found that the latter had nothing except what he derived from his position as chaplain of the House. Acting upon this, Mr. Cheadle asked several other Republican members if they would support Mr. Milburn for the coming place, and they consented to do so. The blind preacher, he mentioned, had never been a partisan in any sense.

The first annual message of President Harrison to Congress was read with the interest that always attaches to the utterances of a new administration of which specific declarations of policy are expected. The subjects dwelt upon with most length are the tariff, the surplus, the coinage of silver, the civil service, pensions, and the colored franchise in the South. It is useless to give space to the subject matter of the message, which you will read for yourselves, but I will mention that expressions of opinion here regarding the document are varied and conflicting, according to the politics of the critic. The Southern Democrats are irritated at the position taken by the President on questions relating to their section, and some of them resent it in strong denunciatory terms. They charge him both with ignorance of conditions existing in the South, and with ill will toward the Southern people. They assert that the message will stimulate them anew to resist the proposed Federal elections legislation contemplated by Republican managers.

There has been much excitement among the liquor dealers of Washington on account of the recent proposition of the City Commissioners to limit the number of drinking saloons of the city to four in a block. "Four saloons left to each block?" I hear you say. "That is horrible to think of." And so it is. Four saloons to the square are bad enough, to be sure, but to suppress any of them is a move in the right direction, and better than nothing, especially when one realizes the fact that even such a weeding out would rid the city of more than a hundred saloons, and those of the worst character.

Quite a delegation of wholesale liquor dealers called on the Commissioners and made an appeal for less restriction. The Commissioners did not give them any satisfaction concerning their future course in regard to the issuance of liquor licenses, and temperance people are thankful for even a small abatement of the great evil. *

He that leans upon his comforts will find them to be a weak reed; but he who leans upon God will find him to be a Rock.

REFORM NEWS.

NOTES BY THE WAY IN OHIO.

DALTON, O., Dec. 5, 1889.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The month of November in Ohio was remarkably stormy and unfavorable for lectures, but I have improved the time in visiting and conferring with many friends and some enemies of our reform. At Wooster I found Rev. J. M. Wilson of the U. P. church a staunch defender of the faith, but indisposed to avail himself of the labors of others. Pres. Scovill of the University is quite in sympathy with us, but is much influenced by other members of the faculty, some of whom are Masons. Rev. Dr. Davis is an outspoken and positive anti-secretist, but thought it would be impracticable to get a hearing before the students. The M. E. pastor was also in sympathy with us, but, like his brethren, he was hedged about with difficulties.

From there I came to Dalton, where I met Rev. J. G. Madge of the U. P. church and Rev. D. A. Newell of the Presbyterian church, both of whom received me kindly, and expressed cordial sympathy. After arranging for a future lecture, I went to Navarre and Justus. In each of these places I found a United Brethren church, the members of which were not only divided, but imputed to each other most unchristian motives; and denied to others all right to use the houses of worship which the very persons thus proscribed had built and sustained. I told these brethren that while I was not indifferent to the merits of their controversy, I thought the wickedness did not consist in the side that they took, but in the exceedingly unjust and uncharitable feelings which they manifested towards each other.

From here I went to Summerdale and Sherrods-ville, where I found old-time friends of our reform, whose hospitality was surely appreciated. Dr. Sherrod of Sherrods-ville is a Democrat, a prohibitionist, an Anti-mason and a Methodist. Withall he is a man of learning and enterprise. Though growing infirm by reason of age, he manages a farm and a coal-mine, and is about opening most extensive beds of fire-clay, which have been pronounced by experts to be superior for the manufacture of fine earthenware.

At Bolivar I became acquainted with that veteran reformer, David Yant, who introduced me to his pastor of the M. E. church, who also has no sympathy with the lodge. From here I went to Cambridge and to New Concord, where I found many friends, and spent the Sabbath listening to able discourses in the Presbyterian and the U. P. churches. From there I went to Senecaville, then to Cumberland, Freeland and Chandlers-ville, where I found stalwart friends and ample hospitality, but no opportunity to speak.

On Thanksgiving Day I reached Utica, where I spent the Sabbath preaching in the "Christian" church, being most kindly entertained by the brethren. There are many most excellent people in that place, and they are reformers in their way, but they seem not to have remembered "to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace."

Finding no opportunity, as I expected, for continued labor, I went to Mt. Vernon, and on Monday attended the ministers' meeting in the First Baptist church. I was much impressed with the talent, piety and zeal of the five pastors, who compose the union. By invitation of Rev. S. Strong of the Congregational church, I addressed them on the work of the N. C. A. All seemed interested, and gave the matter candid attention. The Baptist pastor expressed his earnest disapproval of all secret societies, but had no time to give to their consideration. None were connected with any of them except the Congregational pastor, and that was simply an insurance society. The Presbyterian pastor manifested most interest and desired further information.

From here I went to Danville and Buckeye City, where I called on the M. E. and "The Brethren" ministers, and arranged to preach on the secrecy question in the Brethren church. Both ministers were quite in sympathy with our work. From here I went to Gann, where I arranged to preach, and was kindly entertained by some old-school United Brethren.

My next stop was at Millersburg, the county seat of Holmes county. Here Rev. Gailey of the U. P. church, who has just enclosed a fine house of worship, received me kindly and subscribed for our paper. The two Lutheran pastors also expressed their sympathy, but the German pastor could not read English. The Presbyterian and Methodist pastors expressed much sympathy and interest, and gladly received the literature I put into their hands. From there I went to Fredricksburg in Wayne county, where I spent the night with pastor Long of the U. P. church, who, with his excellent wife, has always been trained in anti-secrecy principles. I arranged with him and the Presbyterian pastor, Rev. Moore, to lecture in the near future. I also called on the M. E. pastor, and for the first time in some months met a minister who is a violent Mason. He will not announce nor attend my lecture, but will reply to it. He thinks secret orders of vast utility, and is very bitter against the men who have "committed perjury" by revealing their secrets. He did not want the Cynosure, for he knew more about the matter than we could tell him.

From there I went to Orrville, where I called on the Presbyterian pastor, who is quite in sympathy with us, and wished me to arrange to give a lecture to his people. From there I came here, where I expect to lecture to-morrow, and then go home.

In reviewing my journey, I am much impressed with the manifest fact that in the progress of this discussion the ministry in all the denominations, and especially in the Presbyterian and M. E. churches, are coming to see the evil and wrong of the lodge system and to mildly oppose it.

H. H. HINMAN.

PHILADELPHIA AND BUFFALO.

HOPEFUL MEETINGS IN THE CITY OF PENN—STATE-MENT CONCERNING THE U. P. PASTORS
IN THE LATTER.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Dec. 5, 1889.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I have worked in this city for nearly a week past. The Lord is leading and preparing the way for glorious meetings. Sabbath morning I received a great blessing at Friends' meeting. Sabbath evening found me speaking to a little company in a U. B. church in South Camden, N. Y. I speak there again this evening. About midnight I was called to point a dying man to "the Lamb of God." For Monday evening a meeting was kindly arranged by Bro. Frank Haas, and I was privileged to address some two hundred, who responded heartily in appreciation. Arrangement is made for me to speak in the First Reformed Presbyterian church next Sabbath evening. Dr. Stevenson of the Christian Statesman is their beloved pastor. Dr. McFeeters of the Second R. P. church, and Dr. Barr of the Eighth U. P. church, will invite their people to unite in this meeting. I am informed that Dr. Barr faithfully enforces the rule excluding lodge members from church membership in his church.

A fact of which I am deeply sensible, that I appear before the public in a wrong light, is affirmed by friends here. During October a report sent by myself of a meeting of a United Presbyterian presbytery at Caledonia, N. Y., appeared, in which I gave a conversation with Rev. Mr. Dodd of the First U. P. church, Buffalo, N. Y., and stated that I found Rev. Mr. Rusbridge, pastor of the mission church, a Mason. In reply the latter has written the Cynosure, the Instructor and the United Presbyterian that he is not a Mason, never was, nor does he belong to any secret society.

The senior editor of the Cynosure was in Buffalo at the time these reports came, and had a conference with these brethren. Finding Mr. Dodd much opposed to the lodge and desiring further information as to its teachings, and that I was mistaken in the very serious charge brought against Mr. Rusbridge, he advised to take a charitable view of both sides and let the matter drop. But in self-vindication I desire to state the facts, as I understand them.

I was assigned for dinner with Rev. Rusbridge. As we left the church Rev. Russell remarked, "I don't want you fellows to get to discussing secret societies," or words to that effect. On inquiry I informed the lady where we dined of my mission. When seated at the table, she remarked that it seemed strange to her the United Presbyterian church had taken the position it had in regard to secret societies. She knew excellent men belonging to the Presbyterian church who also belonged to the lodge, etc.

I replied, while it was true that good men often got into the lodge, it was also true that Masonry was opposed to Christianity. No more could a man be an intelligent Mason and an intelligent Christian, than he could be a Mohammedan and a Christian. As I was proceeding to explain, Mr. Rusbridge broke in, substantially as follows: "Oh, pshaw! That's all bosh! I know men, most excellent men, men whose testimony we must accept, who say that's not true." Proceeding in a very excited way he extolled the lodge at length. He related instances he had known where lodge members had been financially helped; said he would rather belong to the Masons (he may have used the word "lodge") as far as gaining help when traveling was concerned, than to be a United Presbyterian minister; for, said he, "I could make myself known as a member of the lodge, but they might question my being a U. P. minister." He said a man who had not belonged to the lodge knew nothing about it, and one who had and came out could not be believed. As the candidate advances in the degrees he is told, if he is not satisfied, he can withdraw any time.

Said I, "You talk as though you had been there?" Said he, "I have."

Now, Mr. Editor, you can well imagine after this galling, foolish talk, thwarting my effort to get our hostess enlightened in regard to the lodge, my blood was boiling with indignation. To be thus met by a U. P. pastor, building a mission church, and knowing as I did the terrible and damning effects of the lodge, my soul was fired with indignation. I reported him a Mason: 1st, Because the conversation commenced in relation to Masonry. 2nd, He denied statements made in regard to Masonry. 3rd, He said no one could know the facts unless a member of the lodge. And 4th, When I said, "You talk as though you had been there?" having in mind the Masonic lodge, he replied, "I have."

Had I not reasonable grounds for this mistake? Rev. J. L. Thompson of Elgin, N. Y., writing me in regard to this matter, states that Rev. R. told him he was a member of the Knights of Pythias, but is not a member now. This, therefore, was evidently the lodge Rev. R. had "been there" in.

Rev. Dodd found Masons in his church when he accepted his Buffalo pastorate, and is perhaps not so much to blame for their presence as might have been inferred by some, from the statements made to myself published at the same time. When I have evidence that Rev. R. is trying to right the wrong he did our hostess, by upholding the lodge, and that he is working against it, then I will do all in my power to atone for this mistake. As truth is opposed to a lie, as light is opposed to darkness, as Christ is opposed to Satan, so is the lodge opposed to the advancement of Christ's kingdom in the earth.

W. B. STODDARD.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TALMAGE AND NATIONAL CONSCIENCE.

TOPSHAM, Vt.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—On a visit to one of my neighbors last July, the conversation turned upon our nation and government. As I was about to leave he gave me one of Talmage's sermons, preached soon after the last Presidential election, and wished me to mark the difference between its teachings and the principles taught by the Covenantant church, of which I am a member. After reading it, I wrote him that on reading the sermon, I thought it very good. It says we must have a national religion, and the majority of our people civilized, and those lies of all sorts which are manufactured at our elections be rebuked, or we will be ashamed to have foreigners visit us at such times. This is what the Covenanters are striving for.

I think God is dealing with us as a wise father would deal with a wicked son. The wise man says, "He that spareth the rod hateth his son." So God has given us a terrible whipping for enslaving our colored brother. Was it not almost equal to the slaying of the first-born in Egypt? This was one reason why many ministers had so much to say against the government, because it legalized the slave-trade, causing children to be sold from their parents, and wives from their husbands, in the most cruel manner. Should we not be very thankful that slavery is done away, and that the Constitution is so amended that there shall be no more slavery in these United States.

But are we not as a nation committing as great a sin in legalizing the rum traffic? Dr. Sloane once said, "Drunkenness violates every precept of the Decalogue; takes the two tables, dashes them to the ground and tramples them in the dust." Yes, it is the crime of crimes.

Then there is the great sin of Sabbath-breaking. I ask, is not Uncle Sam the greatest Sabbath-breaker in these United States? Is he not keeping thousands of our citizens at work in the P. O. department in direct opposition to the Fourth Commandment? If God loves our nation, what can we expect but more severe chastisements until the nation repents. Talmage says he expects to live to see a political party containing the Ten Commandments in its platform. That is what National Reformers are pleading for. That God may be acknowledged, and the government administered according to his law.

Then we could all vote. But is it right for Christians to vote in either of the two great parties, of whom Joseph Cook says, "they are both down on their knees to the rum traffic,"—a traffic which is sending over 60,000 of our citizens yearly to a drunkard's grave? Yes, Uncle Sam is a bad son yet; but Talmage thinks we will come out all right in the end, by taking God's law for our rule. So we think.

Again, after speaking of our great continent containing over 17,000,000 square miles, he asks the question, "Who shall have this continent, Christ or Satan?" and says to his people, "You and I must help to answer this question by our prayers and votes." It seems that Pennsylvania, Rhode Island and other States are deciding for Satan. His text was, "The Lord opened the eyes of the young man," etc. Should not every Christian be laboring and praying that God would open the eyes of the young men of our nation,—yes, and the eyes of the old men, too, that they may leave the ranks of Satan and come up to the help of the Lord against these great sins which are a reproach to any people.

I would like to say a few words against secret societies before closing this letter. We learn that there are over two hundred of these secret orders in our capital at Washington, and the number is still increasing. Yes, its name is "Legion." Mr. Ronayne, a seceding Mason, says our land is honeycombed from one end to the other with these secret orders, which are a great curse both to church and state. Our Saviour said he spoke plainly to the world and in secret said nothing. So we would expect all Christians to follow his example. But it is not so, for we see not only members but officers of the church, ambassadors for Christ, still in connection with these anti-Christian orders; and some are so blinded as to speak of Freemasonry as the handmaid of religion, when it is really the device of Satan to make men believe they can be taken to heaven without Christ.

We read in Revelation of three unclean spirits coming out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast and the false prophet. I think these may be compared to secretism, drunkenness and Mormonism, which our nation must fight against until they are destroyed, or they will destroy us as a nation. "For the nation and kingdom that will not serve thee shall perish." But we hope the time will come when the nations will own Christ as their king, then we may expect to see that Scripture fulfilled.

"Yea, all the mighty kings on earth
Before him down shall fall;
And all the nations of the world
Do homage to him shall."

For he is "King of kings and Lord of lords."

JOSIAH DIVOLL.

A WARNING TO MASONIC INFIDELS.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Dec. 2nd, 1889.

DEAR EDITOR:—A. T. C. Pierson, a 33° Mason—a chief in Baal was buried yesterday, from the "People's church," with all the Masonic honors that the Masons of the State could afford him. He died on Tuesday last at the age of 74. The funeral procession, headed by a platoon of mounted police, is said to have been the largest ever witnessed in the city,—more Freemasons in it than Elijah slew on Mt. Carmel.

When the Masonic pastor of the "People's church," Rev. Dr. S. G. Smith, introduced the reading of the 12th chapter of Ecclesiastes by saying, "Let us hear the word of the Lord," it sounded strangely to us who know how shamefully the Masonic fraternity scandalizes and lies about the Bible, even tearing the name of Christ, the only Lord and Redeemer, out of it in the quotation in their ritual taken from it, even although in their sacrilegious "fifth libation" they so infamously swear to draw their swords in defence of Christianity.

"There are no bands in their death," says the Psalmist. No doubt Mr. Pierson died as he lived, a true Mason, and has, therefore, doubtless gone to his "Grand Lodge above," wherever that may be. In a conversation about a year ago he expressed antipathy towards Christianity as held in both Romish and Protestant churches. In his book entitled, "Traditions of Freemasonry, and its Coincidences with the Ancient Mysteries," he, as its title implies, has completely shown the identity of Freemasonry with that abomination so severely reprobated in the Bible.

If any of God's people are in the Masonic lodges, this ought to be a fearful warning to them to come out and obey the truth. Yours truly,
W. FENTON.

—GENTLEMAN GEORGE—

NOT A MEMBER OF THE LODGE.

LANCASTER, O.

The Cincinnati Enquirer of November 26th, in concluding a long and highly eulogistic biographical notice of Hon. George H. Pendleton, ex-United States Senator and Minister to Germany, whose recent death at Brussels caused such universal expressions of sorrow and regret, says:

"It was a singular fact about Mr. Pendleton that he never was a member of any society or order."

The same account says that he was an Episcopalian by religious faith, and a liberal supporter of his church and charitable institutions.

The career of Mr. Pendleton is another striking proof of the fact that success in life does not depend on the artificial support of the lodge, but that the highest honors and the most commanding influence may be attained by those who are truly great without the aid of any such underhand influences.

Will the young men of the nation make a note of this?

COLUMBIAN.

OUR SCHOOLS IN THE NEXT CENSUS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 1, 1889.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—This office desires to secure the best results possible regarding the schools of the country with a few salient inquiries.

James H. Blodgett, A. M., of Rockford, Ill., a gentleman of long experience in educational work and in public affairs, has been appointed a special agent for the collection of statistics of education for the United States.

Public schools are so related to systems of public record that their statistics are obtainable through established methods.

Incorporated private schools have a place in public records.

Parochial schools generally render stated reports to some controlling body.

Unincorporated private schools form a considerable element of usefulness hitherto unmeasured. It is desirable to gather reports of the number of teachers and pupils in such schools, without troubling them for the financial statements that schools supported by public funds owe to the taxpayers.

The enumerators of population will report each person who has attended school within the year, and whether at a public or at a private school; and, for all persons 10 years of age and over, those who can read and write. This will be more than has been done heretofore. Other educational statistics must be reached by different methods, in which every one interested may render some aid.

Any lists of private schools, no matter how brief, or names of single schools, no matter how humble, open in any part of the present school year, with the address of the principal teacher of each, will be of assistance to this office.

Very respectfully,
ROBERT P. PORTER,
Superintendent of Census.

PITH AND POINT.

A GOOD SUGGESTION—LET EACH CHOOSE A DAY FOR HIMSELF.

"Shall the throne of iniquity have fellowship with thee, which frameth mischief by a law?" As the Vice President has a law on his side in his saloon license, I do not know of any other way than to appeal to the Lord of lords and King of kings, knowing that he hath promised to hear and grant petitions of two. Let a day be set for fasting and prayer to the Lord of heaven and earth, to stop the iniquity committed in high places by the Vice President of the United States.—N. JACOBSON, Hutto, Texas.

ROMANISM AHEAD!

Are the people aware that about one million and a quarter of dollars have been paid to teach popery to the Indian children in five years by our government? Let this go on for twenty more years at the same rate of increase, and the priests and nuns will have received over one hundred millions of dollars from Uncle Sam to teach popery to Indian children; and time-trimmers in politics are quiet over this violation of our civil constitution! Rome ahead in Canada, too! Shall we follow the example? bear it patiently, or grin and bear it? A priest in Ottawa, the capital of Canada, is reported to have gathered up Bibles among his flock and burned them up after mass, on Sunday, November 10!—T. H., Chicago.

FROM A GOOD LETTER TO THE WASHINGTON AGENT.

I regret very much my inability to be with you at the Houghton Convention. There are multitudes of our people who have not yet bowed the knee to Baal (Mah-hah-bone), and rejoice greatly in your efforts to save them. The time has come when we should declare with no uncertain emphasis whom we will serve. If the Lord be God, I am on his side every time. I want to spend my energies in a struggle for a principle, and care not whether the world call me hero or fanatic. The cause may appear slow in its progress, but it is an earnest power, and points with unerring certainty to the apex of moral triumph. It is planted by the hand of truth, and he who questions its ultimate issue questions the eternal years of God. Noble, indeed, are the men and women who pledge their lives and their sacred honor in behalf of such a cause. How much longer will the children of darkness continue to be led astray? when will the timid and the vacillating have courage to speak their sentiments? It is not ours to lament the past, nor speculate on the future, but calmly and fearlessly "Act in the living present, heart within and God o'erhead." Truth and right are in the balance, and we have no time to waste on the problem of expediency. Go forward! Down with the frivolities, corruptions and "whited sepulchres" of secretism! Place the "handwriting on the wall" squarely before the people. There is death and a woeful judgment in the cup, and the people must know it.—A. K. DUFF, York, N. Y.

LITERATURE.

The December Century opens with a series of unpublished letters written by the Duke of Wellington, in his very last days, to a young married lady of England. These letters are published by authorization of the present Duke of Wellington, and present the Iron Duke in a very attractive light,—amiable and unpretending; the careful guardian of the children of his friend in their childish illnesses. Besides pictures of the Duke's residence, etc., there are three portraits of Wellington. Mr. Charles Barnard's illustrated article on "The New Croton Aqueduct" is the first full account of that great engineering work. A striking feature of this paper is Mr. Barnard's expose of the frauds in the building of the aqueduct—the empty places in the masonry being shown by means of photographs. Rev. W. E. Griffis, the well-known authority on Japan, writes of "Nature and People" in that fascinating island—more of Theodore Wore's pictures being given in this connection. Prof. George P. Fisher's papers on "The Nature and Method of Revelation" begin in this number. Their appearance has been made especially timely by the creed revision and doctrinal discussions now in progress. The first article is on "Revelation and the Bible." The chapters of the Lincoln Life deal with the fall of Richmond and Lincoln's visit to the abandoned capital. They are full of melancholy interest, since we remember how closely followed the last great tragedy of the war.

The Old Testament Student for November contains an elaborate prospectus for the "American Institute of Sacred Literature," which has grown out of the Summer School in Hebrew, begun some years ago by Prof. Harper in the Baptist Theological Seminary of this city. This organization seems destined to exert a strong influence upon Bible study. The Student contains "The Inspiration of the Old Testament Inductively Considered," by Rev. Henry A. Rogers, "The Value of Egyptological Study," by F. C. H. Wendels, "The Use of the Words Priest and Prophet in the New Testament," by Prof. F. Gardiner, D.D., with a continuation of Prof. Beecher's "Postexilic History of Israel."

The editor of St. Nicholas has secured an account of "The Boyhood of Thackeray," illustrated by fac-similes of drawings and letters not hitherto published, and also a copy of a bust, showing Thackeray at the age of 11. Miss Ewell tells a story of early Virginian history, an incident of the Indian massacre, strongly illustrated by Birch. Mr. Theodore Roosevelt extracts from the diary of his brother, experiences in "Buffalo Hunting," which will be enjoyed by all boys who love life on the plains, and supplements them with much interesting text of his own.

The Youth's Companion sends out such a heavy issue each week, amounting to one-third of all the second-class matter that is mailed at the Boston postoffice, and the office finds it so unwieldy to handle, that it is sent direct from the publishing house to the postal car, without going through the postoffice at all. The amount mailed daily averages from five to six tons. Its present circulation is over 430,000.

Ever new, beautiful and instructive, we exclaim on opening the American Garden. Among the illustrated articles are "Gardens About Paris," "The Custard Apple," "California Peaches," "Japanese Dwarf Trees." The war on the fence goes bravely on.

LODGE NOTES.

Cantons of Patriarchs Militant of the department of Illinois, I. O. O. F., from Chicago, Danville, Litchfield, Fairfield, Monticello, Marshall, Champaign, Galesburg and Peoria, paraded at Springfield, and participated in a grand prize-drill.

The thirty-fourth semi-annual convention of the Scottish Rite Masons of "the Valley of Chicago," was held lately at the Masonic headquarters on Monroe street. Days were given to conferring the degrees from the fourteenth to the thirty-second and a grand banquet.

It is reported that, within the past six months, 75,000 farmers in Michigan have joined the Grange. The reason given is that they have been forced to do something in self-defence against monopolies and trusts. The lesson learned from combination is combination, and so they re-commit the old folly of fighting the devil with fire.

"General" Charles F. Griffin, "commander-in-chief of the Sons of Veterans" of the United States, has issued a general order in which he decides that "Colonel" Frank McCrillis, of Chicago, a post division colonel of the Illinois division, Sons of Veterans, is not entitled to membership in the order. McCrillis served two terms as "colonel" of the Illinois division, Sons of Veterans.

The ninth annual banquet of the Northwestern association of the Delta Kappa Epsilon fraternity took place in this city Thursday evening. About 100 members were present. Judge Richard S. Tuthill presided as toastmaster, and among the speakers was Judge Julius S. Grinnell. The Delta Kappa Epsilon is one of the largest college secret societies in the United States, having thirty-four chapters.

One thousand grand representatives and past grand representatives attended the opening session of the Odd-fellows' Grand Lodge of Illinois in Springfield lately. An offer of forty acres of land and the sum of $5,000 in cash for the location of the proposed Odd-fellows' Orphan Home in Lincoln was received from the lodges of that city. The Grand Lodge donated over $800 to the proposed home.

Ex-Representative John R. Byrne, a member of the Knights of Labor, was arrested at Scottdale, Pa., some days since, on a charge of conspiracy, preferred by ex-Representative Edward Callaghan. The information also includes Master Workman Powderly and Peter Wise, a local labor leader. The suit grew out of letters Mr. Powderly published in the Journal of United Labor in June, 1888. At that time Callaghan was a candidate for the Senatorial nomination, but was overwhelmingly defeated. Callaghan alleged that he was boycotted and injured in his business by Knights of Labor, through the influence of Byrne, Powderly and Wise.

About fifty delegate farmers from the twenty clubs in the northern part of Illinois met at Decatur in convention and organized the Illinois Farmers' Alliance. Resolutions in the interest of reforms, such as free coinage of silver with gold, favoring the Australian system of voting, in favor of governmental control of railroads and the telegraph, reduction of taxation, a graded income tax, reduction of freight and passenger rates, the opening of the Hennepin canal, further legislation against bogus butter, election of United States Senators direct by the people, and uniformity of text books in the schools, were adopted. After some opposition Hon. A. J. Streeter, Freemason, was made an honorary member of the Alliance.

For some time great dissatisfaction has existed in the three divisions of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, of Bloomington, in regard to the actions of the State Board, and particularly of Edward Spellman, of Peoria, who is an active member of the Clan-na-Gael, and is the State delegate, or virtual head of the State organization. He is also the head of the great whisky trust. The Ancient Order of Hibernians has been suspicious for some time that there was a plot on the part of such members as are Clan-na-Gaels to gobble the whole concern. A strong feeling of animosity has gradually developed between the two organizations, which has been intensified by the Cronin murder developments and Spellman's prominence in Clan-na-Gael affairs. Great dissatisfaction has arisen from the enormous State assessments for life insurance purposes which have been levied. Three divisions of Bloomington followed the example of as many in Peoria, and have seceded from the State organization. It is likely that the organizations of Chenoa and Merna in McLean county will follow the example of the Bloomington Hibernians, if they have not already done so.

The camps of the Modern Woodmen of America of Rock Island county, held a convention at Rock Island and appointed a committee to formulate a call to be addressed to the various camps of the order in the county for a meeting of the head camp at Peoria, Dec. 17, to investigate the finances of the order and the alleged frauds in the head consul's office. At Woodstock half of the camps of McHenry county assembled in convention, and a committee was appointed to formulate a plan for getting together a body representing the entire membership of the order to try the charges preferred against the head consul. Emissaries of Head Consul Root, in the persons of Deputy Head Consul Jewell and ex-Head Clerk Kennedy, were present unbidden, but were refused a hearing in the convention.

CATARRH.

Catarrhal Deafness--Hay Fever.

A NEW HOME TREATMENT.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness, and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N.B.—This treatment is not a snuff or an ointment; both have been discarded by reputable physicians as injurious. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent Free by A. H. DIXON & SON, 337 and 339 West King Street, Toronto, Canada.—Scientific American.

Sufferers from Catarrhal troubles should carefully read the above.

LOOK HERE, FRIEND, ARE YOU SICK?

Do you suffer from Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Sour Stomach, Liver Complaint, Nervousness, Lost Appetite, Biliousness, Exhaustion or Tired Feeling, Pains in Chest or Lungs, Dry Cough, Night sweats or any form of Consumption? If so, send to Prof. Hart, 88 Warren Street, New York, who will send you free, by mail, a bottle of Floraplexion, which is a sure cure. Send to-day.

Your wasted cheeks may have all the plumpness and bloom of health through your use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This time-honored remedy still leads the van. It improves digestion, purifies the blood, and invigorates the system. Give it a trial.

BEECHAM'S PILLS act like magic on a weak stomach.

THE N. C. A. FUNDS.

The General Fund is that from which the running expenses of the Association are paid. From it the agents on the field are supported.

The Foreign Fund is that from which the foreign demand for literature against the lodge is supplied to missionaries.

The Free Tract Fund clearly states by its name the object for which contributions are solicited. Millions of pages have been distributed by means of this fund.

The Cynosure Ministers' Fund. The donations to this fund have enabled the Association to send many copies of the Cynosure to the ministers of the South, especially to pastors of colored churches. The result has been a blessing to them and their churches.

Contributions to any or all these funds are urgently solicited.

FORM OF BEQUEST.—I give and bequeath to the National Christian Association, incorporated and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, the sum of — dollars for the purposes of said Association, and for which the receipt of its Treasurer for the time being shall be sufficient discharge.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 12, 1889.

EVERYBODY, read Bro. Arnold's proposition on the 9th page. Nothing could be more generous on his part, or better show his confidence in the success of his enterprise. Work can be done in Wheeling now cheaper than in the Spring. It is a little matter for a few hundred who may read this note to send him a dollar each and the work is done. Let the matter be cleared up this week. Don't wait till next.

THE CRONIN TRIAL.

This famous trial draws to a close. As we go to press the last speech is being made for the defense by lawyer Forrest, who is a prominent member of the Democratic Iroquois Club, and a leader in the Tariff reform convention last spring. Three speeches were made on that side before he began. They were adroit, able and eloquent, in some respects superior to the presentation by the state. Seldom has a bad case been more ably managed. The testimony for their side was only to prove an alibi for the men on trial. Their witnesses were many of them dragged out of the saloons, and ignorance, stupidity and dishonesty were manifest in their faces.

The case has been well managed on the part of the state. Of those who assisted States' Attorney Longenecker, Mr. Mills once ably held the same office; Mr. Hynes was once a member of the Clan-na-Gael, is a leading Irishman, defended Alexander Sullivan in the trial for the murder of the teacher Hanford, and is now bitterly hostile to his former client in respect to Irish affairs; and Mr. Ingham was Mr. Grinnell's first assistant in the Anarchist prosecution. Mr. Foster, who defends Beggs, the Senior Guardian of Camp 20, Clan-na-Gael, was one of the lawyers who defended the Anarchists. The speeches of Ingham and Hynes, occupying over three days, were among the most powerful speeches ever made before a Chicago jury. The logic of the prosecution is almost matched by the skill of the defense; and, as the days pass while these pleas are made, public excitement grows, and the judgment of men upon the decision of the jury is taking form.

The evidence is very strong implicating Coughlin, the detective, O'Sullivan, the ice-man, and Bourk, as members of the conspiracy which murdered Cronin, and it is believed the jury cannot escape a fatal judgment for them. Kunze was a mere tool of Coughlin, a thief and contemptible character; he may have a term in the penitentiary; but Beggs, who did the will of some prime conspirator in Camp 20, may escape entirely.

If this judgment shall prove true, it will be asked What had the Clan-na-Gael to do with the affair? That has not been proved. A timid and inexperienced judge ruled out important testimony which might have fixed upon the order the odium that undoubtedly belongs to it. When a court rebukes jurymen for holding an opinion adverse to the lodge, and rules against evidence that would probably open up all the workings of a desperate, oath-bound, secret clan, little can be expected in such a trial as this. If Beggs is saved from conviction, he may undoubtedly thank Judge McConnell.

Mr. Longenecker also has a tenderness for the lodge. In cross-examining Clan-na-Gael witnesses they escaped with a convenient forgetfulness of many important matters. One poor wretch said on the stand that he was not a Clan-na-Gael, but a Mason and Odd-fellow. Immediately there seemed to be a softening of heart to him, and the States' Attorney neglected an important item of testimony to which a juror called attention, and which evidently destroyed with the jury all the evidence of the witness. In his final speech Mr. Longenecker referred to the fact that the city office-seeking gang are joining all the secret societies just before election, and passed on to a eulogy of the United Workmen order, to which he once belonged, but was suspended for his shabby interest in the society.

One lady acquaintance of O'Sullivan testified that the ice-man had denounced Cronin, after his death, as a traitor who deserved his fate. She expressed her horror at the murder, and said it was as bad as the Masons killing Morgan. O'Sullivan insisted, however, in approving the death of a traitor. This episode in the trial was a warning to Masons who yet brutally insist that Morgan deserved his fate. Should O'Sullivan hang, they do well to remember the fact.

An attempt was made in Philadelphia a few days ago to galvanize the corpse of the Clan-na-Gael, and give it a new life. An attempt was made to separate the so-called I. N. B. (Irish National Brotherhood), or Triangle branch from the order. No adherent of this Sullivan faction was permitted to take part; a new executive board, new passwords and ritual were attempted. The Triangle "inner circle" and Camp 20 were expelled by name. Even the head of the order, Spelman of Peoria, head of the whisky trust, was frozen out. He and Sullivan have, however, a large following in this city and Nebraska, from whence President Harrison took his minister to Chili. The order once numbered 23,000, but only 10,000 are left in the reorganized lodge, and half as many stand by the murderers of Cronin, among them many Chicago policeman. It is improbable, however, that this effort will avail. We are assured by intelligent Irishmen, who are in a position to judge impartially, that the secret society business is dead for their countrymen, and will not be revived. But other lodges have their "exits and their entrances," and if the devil has a work for Irishmen to do in this country he will give them some kind of a lodge to do it with, and the Clan-na-Gael is no better nor worse than any other for such a purpose.

FREEMASONRY IN BRAZIL.

The recent overthrow of the Emperor Dom Pedro, of Brazil, raises the question whether a mild, wise and pacific ruler, whom his subjects have heretofore regarded with general, if not entire confidence and respect, has been set aside as a result of any general wish of the people, or rather as the climax of a secret conspiracy, not against the imperial government alone, but equally against the rights and interests of the nation. Our Declaration of Independence—the result of no sudden outbreak—affirms that all experience shows that nations are far more willing to endure evils than to appeal to revolutions to destroy them. And hence it seems very improbable that the Brazilian people really desired such a change.

It has been well known that for years Freemasonry has obtained a strong foothold in Brazil, and that it has done so in spite of the civil and religious influences. Some ten years since, Masonry was at open war with the Roman Catholic priesthood, led by the Bishop of Pernambuco. The struggle was long and bitter, and the lodge at length prevailed. It is also known that the late slave-holders of the empire hated the head that had devised, and the hand that signed the decree of emancipation. There is much reason to believe that these two powers (the lords of the lodge and of the lash) have secretly combined, as they did in our own land, to subvert all lawful authority and establish a government of their own. Satanic influences, either in the church or the state, always come "with all deceivableness of unrighteousness." All along it has been falsely pretended that Freemasonry was the synonym of Protestantism and of civil liberty.

Especially has this pretense been put forth in Brazil. It has received toleration from our missionaries in that country because of this pretense. But so far from its being favorable to evangelical religion, its only claim rests on the fact that Romanism (with which it has much in common) has placed it under interdict. The principles of Protestant Christianity and Freemasonry are, indeed, in most striking contrast. The first honors the Lord Jesus Christ as the head of the church and the righteous ruler of the universe. The latter ignores and rejects him from its ritual. Protestantism teaches salvation by faith; Masonry teaches that men are saved by their works. No one can understandingly love the one that does not hate the other. So far from Freemasonry being the conservator of civil liberty, it is in itself a system of most despotic government, and has generally been allied with despotism.

From our scanty knowledge of the facts we may not be able to affirm that the Brazilian revolution, like that which was attempted in our own land, was conceived in the lodge, and brought forth in Masonic hypocrisy, but considering all the circumstances we have much reason to think so. It, as seems probable, it shall be found to have arrested the progress of Christian civilization; if it shall involve a great nation in the horrors of civil war, and under the pretense of serving the people shall rob them of the last vestige of true liberty, it will only prove what ought to be well known, that Freemasonry, as a factor in civil government, is an enemy, not an ally of the liberties of the people. Whatever may be the causes or the results, we can afford to wait before we extend our congratulations to a sister republic.

WAS WILBERFORCE A MASON?

A Freemason's Monitor, published in Philadelphia, 1843, on page 16 of the book, claims William Wilberforce, of England, as a Freemason! We have no doubt but this is an infamous Masonic falsehood. Wilberforce was an active member and champion of the Clarkson-Macaulay anti-slave trade committee for twenty years, till the slave trade fell. Was there a Freemason in this country who was a known Abolitionist?

Even if Wilberforce joined the lodge in his youth, as Washington did, like Washington, too, he must have quit it in disgust. His whole career contradicts the slander. Sir James Mackintosh wrote of him: "He is the very model of a reformer. Ardent without turbulence, mild without timidity or coolness, neither yielding to difficulties, nor disturbed or exasperated by them; patient and meek, yet intrepid; persisting for twenty years through good report and evil report; just and charitable even to his most malignant enemies; unwearied in every experiment to disarm the prejudices of his more rational and disinterested opponents, and supporting the zeal, without dangerously exciting the passions of his adherents." His best-known writing, entitled, "A Practical View of the Prevailing Religious System of Professing Christians, in the higher and middle classes in this country, contrasted with Real Christianity," drew from the Bishop of Calcutta the encomium: "The author, in attempting it, risked everything dear to a public man and a politician, as such,—consideration, weight, ambition, reputation." And Dr. Scott, the commentator, himself a fearless man, wrote: "Taken in all its probable effects, I do sincerely think such a stand for vital Christianity has not been made in my memory." Frost, the historian, adds this word: "Where religion or morals were directly concerned, points on which few cared to interfere, and where a leader was wanted, he never shrunk from the advocacy of his opinions."

Such witness is never given to men who adhere to the lodge. The profligate Prince of Wales, Albert Pike and Mayor Cregier represent that class.

Masons started the same report years ago about John Wesley; and this, in the face of the fact that Wesley wrote of the lodge in his journal, "What an amazing banter upon mankind is Freemasonry!"

—The article by Bro. Worrel forcibly presents his views of the prophecies that review great social and religious movements of our time. The lodge is identical with popery only as the shadow is with the substance which produces it. But the worshipers of both are destined to the same "lake of fire burning with brimstone" (Rev. 19: 20). These are pictures, it is true, but they are pictures of terrible facts.

—Pres. C. A. Blanchard spoke last week against the lodge in Sycamore and Elgin, Ill. The first meeting was arranged by State Agent Hawley; the latter was a result of the State Convention. The Swedish Lutherans have purchased and occupy the old Congregational church building in Elgin. They would have opened it for the State convention if desired. They were pleased with the convention and hope to continue its influence.

—Branch 34 of the Iron Hall in Boston is in trouble. A Mrs. Martin has sued for $58, the amount which her husband had paid in assessments prior to his death. Shortly after that event an assessment had been levied, which the widow paid on the understanding that unless she did so she would lose all claim to what had previously been paid in. The lodge now refuses to refund the money, claiming that she must either take up the certificate and carry it on, or forfeit the sum in question.

—Some time since Rev. J. M. Snyder of Nebraska wrote in the Wesleyan Herald of Brighton attacking the rule of the Wesleyan Methodist church which prohibits all secret societies. In the last Herald Rev. Isaiah Martin, an influential pastor in Michigan, advocates the same illogical idea. But Bro. H. A. Day, the editor, urgently combats this position and maintains the only standard authorized by the Word of God—Entire Separation of these worldly organizations from the churches of Christ.

—In an editorial on the drainage-trustee election in this city, the Daily News speaks with emphasis on "oath-bound politics" thus: "The candidates on the Democratic ticket were chosen by a secret, oath-bound organization of which M. C. McDonald is the prophet. It is not the ticket of the Democratic party, but the ticket of the secret 'inner circle' of the Democratic party. The Morning News is opposed to oath-bound societies in politics. It has said so in dealing with the Clan-na-Gael and with the United Order of Deputies. It is opposed to M. C. McDonald's imitation Tammany."

—The discussion of church and state relations has pressed upon our columns more than our readers are aware, for we have been compelled to say No to several esteemed contributors; and the publication of Bro. Wylie's article, which has been waiting several weeks, should for the present close the case. No doubt all will not agree with him; but all will agree that he puts the case very clearly—so clearly that it is not difficult to determine where our paths would diverge and we should cease to walk with him. We have seldom seen this question more ably stated; and if we do not fully accept all his propositions, we differ so little that it is not worth while to continue the debate.

PERSONAL NOTES.

—The senior editor of the Cynosure has been for a few days too unwell to aid as usual on the paper. He hopes for renewed vigor after a brief rest.

—Our earnest reformer friend Helin of Omaha has been nominated for city treasurer by the Prohibitionists. No city ever had a man of more integrity in that office.

—Bro. Gladwin, who is now in Kansas on his way westward, writes on page 5 in a way to rouse our readers to renew prayer and labor. Let us daily cry to God to deliver his church from this lodge curse.

—The India Watchman of Bombay notices the narrow escape of Rev. M. B. Wilcox, missionary in China, from the assault of a mob. We trust this is not the Bro. Wilcox whose occasional letters from Foochow have been enjoyed by our readers.

—Rev. J. S. T. Milligan, of Denison, Kansas, late president of the N. C. A. national convention, was lately assisted at a communion service by his son, Rev. J. R. J. Milligan, of Allegheny, Pa., where seven members were received to the fellowship of the church.

—Gen. James Husted, who as speaker in the New York legislature has the doubtful honor of introducing Masonic tricks with his gavel in that body, was badly left at last election for speaker. He has again rallied his Masonic henchmen, and it is said he will be re-elected at the next meeting of the legislature.

—Reading the article in Our Day for August, "Age of Lodges," by Pres. C. A. Blanchard, convinced Rev. William J. Coulston, pastor of the Baptist church of Hollidaysburg, Pa., and led him to renounce membership in the Patriotic Sons of America, Phi Kappa Psi and Knights and Ladies of Honor.

—We learn that Rev. John F. Carson, of Brooklyn, N. Y., is about beginning the publication of a monthly church paper in connection with the work of his Covenanter congregation. The thanks of the Cynosure are due him for calling attention to the remarkable testimony of Dr. Pentecost, appearing on our first page.

—Anthony Comstock, the brave defender of virtue, has again been vindicated in the courts.

A Philadelphia sharper, who published a so-called Agent's Herald, attacked him without mercy, and was sued for libel, found guilty, and sentenced to six months' imprisonment. His bravado will have time to evaporate before he comes out.

—Mr. Campbell, the Democratic Governor elect of Ohio, is a Knight Templar Mason, a member of the Knights of Pythias, G. A. R., and the B. P. order of Elks. He seems to have been a well-ordered politician. His Democratic predecessor was as well known for his Masonry, of which he had taken many degrees, as for his atheism. Gov. Foraker is also a high Mason, and member of the G. A. R.

—Rev. P. B. Chamberlain of Walla Walla, Washington, died at his home Nov. 1st last, after a long illness. He went to Oregon in 1855 and was pastor of the First Congregational church, Portland, until 1862, and was then pastor for seventeen years of a church in Walla Walla, which he organized. He was engaged in teaching, more or less, during all this time, and for several years had charge of Whitman Seminary. He was a faithful man, and true to Christ against the secret lodges. He formerly contributed often to the Cynosure.

—A dispatch from Holland, Michigan, where relatives of Rev. Wm. Hazenberg, of Johannesburg, South Africa, reside, states that this missionary brother and his wife have discovered valuable gold deposits on their property and have become immensely wealthy. Characteristically they are using their riches to establish schools, reading-rooms, and in other good works. They expect to visit this country in January, and will afterward proceed to the Netherlands, where they will work among the poorer classes. Bro. Hazenberg went to Cape Town some years ago as an independent missionary, living by faith. His letters to the Cynosure will be well remembered, and our readers have several times responded to our request to send him aid. He has distributed several shipments of anti-secret literature in Cape Colony and the Transvaal. We rejoice in his good fortune, confident that it will be well used for the promotion of the truth among men.

I. R. B. ARNOLD'S RIVER MISSION.

About two hundred dollars in cash donations have already been received. Three hundred more will be necessary before the hull or bottom can be ordered and paid for. It is to be built of the best material, in a first-class, substantial manner from the bottom upward.

Bro. Arnold offers from this date to donate during the year as many dollars to the Cynosure fund for colored preachers as the patrons of the Cynosure contribute to help build the chapel. In this way every dollar donated becomes two dollars for the cause. Reader, can't you sit down just now and put a plank into that floating chapel? Address I. R. B. Arnold, Wheeling, W. Va. Please write your name and address plainly with each contribution.

PAPERS, BOOKS AND TRACTS WANTED.

If those who have on hand a quantity of Cynosures or other good religious papers, tracts or books suitable for distribution among colored people, will send them prepaid by mail or express to us at Wheeling, W. Va., we will see that they are carefully and judiciously distributed. We occasionally find opportunities where we can make good use of a package of Sunday-school singing books.

I. R. B. ARNOLD.

—A conference on the Christian principles of civil government was held in Zanesville, Ohio; Nov. 19 and 20. Notwithstanding the very unfavorable condition of the weather, the attendance was fair. The Sabbath question was discussed by Rev. James P. Mills, Rev. Galusha M. Anderson, D.D., and Mrs. J. C. Bateham; the Labor question by Rev. L. L. Magee; "Marriage and Divorce," by Rev. D. Stafford, D.D., and Judge Granger, Zanesville; the Temperance question by Rev. J. C. Holiday; Law and Liberty, or Limitations of Personal Liberty, by Rev. S. F. Scovel, D.D.; Atheism or Romanism in the Public Schools, by Rev. T. P. Stephenson, D.D.; and the Moral Accountability of Nations, by Rev. D. McAllister, D.D. All these topics were discussed from a Christian standpoint, the doctrine being held that God is supreme, the Lord Jesus Christ the Great King, and the Scriptures the infallible rule, and American institutions are Christian, not infidel or atheistic, and Protestant, not Roman Catholic. Our great lack is that of public national recognition of these principles.—United Presbyterian.

A WORD TO ILLINOIS FRIENDS.

At the annual meeting of the Illinois Christian Association, it was voted to employ as State agent for the ensuing year, Rev. C. F. Hawley, who has been doing excellent service for the Iowa Association during several years.

It is the desire of the Executive Committee to keep Mr. Hawley actively engaged in arousing public sentiment and spreading information among the people as widely as possible; and to this end it is important that funds should be pledged toward his salary, so that he may not be under the necessity of spending his time canvassing for money.

Every two dollars we raise will leave him free to put in a day's time in direct furtherance of the cause. Something over a hundred dollars was pledged by friends present at the annual meeting and Mr. Hawley is now at work arranging for a meeting in DeKalb county, which we hope may rival the annual meeting in interest and effectiveness.

It is desirable to keep him at this kind of work in other parts of the State. Friends, what do you say? We have an able, efficient, zealous State agent; do you wish to keep him employed to the best advantage? If you can devote any funds to this purpose, please write at once to the treasurer, E. A. Cook, 17 River St., Chicago, Ill., and state what you can pay on or before Oct. 1, 1890.

If any can send cash now, it will be well to do so, as money will be needed constantly to keep the work moving.

E. WHIPPLE,

Chairman of Finance Committee.

A TOWN SUBMERGED.

TOWN OF SIX HUNDRED ALMOST OVERWHELMED—THE COUNTRY THREATENED.

MILES, Iowa.

A lady writes me of her desire to promote the cause of foreign missions, but is unable to get her neighbors to assist except with very small mites. She says: "This is only a small place, about six hundred inhabitants. There are seven secret societies, a W. C. T. U., an Aid Society and the W. F. Mission Society."

What can a town of six hundred do with seven lodges to devour their time and money? I begin to see one great reason why the Christians of America do so little for missions. That small town has two home missions (the Aid Society and the W. C. T. U.), a foreign mission society, and its churches. Then comes in the flood of lodges and devours the fat of the land. Both saints and sinners combine to keep up this mongrel religion, and the field of the Lord is overwhelmed with tares and weeds.

In India a gentleman who had given his heart to God, saw it his duty to take the ten rupees monthly which he had paid to his Christless lodge and give it to the mission cause for spreading the salvation of Jesus. If Christians in America could have their eyes opened in the same way, what offerings and what prayers would pour in for the rescue of a lost world.

Having been a member of several secret societies for years, I speak with long experience and most careful observation, and I declare it my deep conviction that secret lodges are, as a rule, a hindrance both to personal religion at home and to mission work abroad.

Having looked at heathenism for about eighteen years in Asia, I see the whole lodge system to be derived more from the philosophy and mysteries of idolatry than from even the lowest type of Christianity. I earnestly call upon my brethren in Christ to come out and be separate and touch not the unclean thing. For what concord hath Christ with Belial, and what agreement hath the temple of God with idols?

Be faithful to your vows to God; be true to your conscience. Take your offerings away from those more than semi-heathen altars, and place them on the altar of Christ to help us bring the heathen to his precious salvation. What will you do? Write and let me know.

WALLACE J. GLADWIN, Missionary.

THE HOME.

KEYS OF POWER.

BY MRS. ADAMS.

Have you the wonderful keys, brother?
Beautiful keys of gold,—
Pure gold of the glory of God, brother,
Given to you to hold?

This opens heaven, that opens earth,
Each is a golden key,
Given to us by the hand of God
To unlock eternity.

Your "faith in the power of God," brother,
This is the great, strong key,
That opens the gates of heaven for us,
And unfolds its mystery.

Have you the "patience of Christ," brother?
This is the other key,
That will open the hidden secrets,
Known only to God and thee.

Ear hath ne'er heard such language,
Such music is truly divine;
'Tis knowledge too wonderful for me,
Yet it is yours and mine.

'Tis faith that opens the grace gates,
That reaches the throne of God;
The Father will hear and will answer,
Readeth the Word of God.

STOPPING THE PAPER.

Mrs. Jacob Willis sat lost in thought, not very pleasant thought either, judging from the manner in which she knit her brow and tapped an impatient foot. The fact was, Mr. Willis had been complaining that family expenses were increasing instead of decreasing. Something must be done to cut them down, that was evident, and she, Mrs. Willis, must be the one to devise some plan whereby the income must be made commensurate with the outgo of the family funds.

"The very foot with which I am tapping the floor this minute needs a new shoe," she soliloquized, "to say nothing of Jamie and Jennie, who need not only shoes, but rubbers and mittens to keep out the cold, and to-morrow the milk bill will be left. I owe Mrs. Jenks two dollars for making Jamie's pants, and next week one dollar and a half must be forthcoming to pay my subscription to our religious paper for the year—that is, if we continue to take a religious paper. I wonder"—here she again became lost in silent thought, but her brow was still knit in perplexity and the impatient tapping of the shabbily-booted foot went on.

Pretty soon she broke out again, but more impetuously than before:

"I believe it will have to be done; of course I can't expect James to give up his daily paper; a man wouldn't know where to find himself without his paper, and I'd be ashamed of a man who would be content not to know what was going on in the great world from day to day. It will come hard, awfully hard, but really I begin to think it my duty to deny myself the luxury of a religious paper; with our growing family and increasing expenses I must make the sacrifice, and might as well go about it at once. Shoes we must have, school-books must be bought, food is a necessity, and help in the kitchen I cannot do without; so I see no other way to begin saving but to write and stop the paper."

She was not a weak-minded woman by any means, Mrs. Jacob Willis; but once convinced a certain course was the inevitable or the best one to pursue, she set about pursuing it forthwith. So down she sat and penned a little note, full of regrets, but said plainly the pressure of unavoidable expenses necessitated the act on her part of stopping the paper. "And it was my paper, and I loved it," she said, as she closed the envelope, and brushing away a falling tear, she called Jennie, and bade her post the letter on her way to school.

When Friday night came, Mr. Willis remarked to his wife that as he was to take part in the meeting, he should like to run over her paper a moment.

"I've stopped it," she said.

"Stopped it!" he ejaculated blankly; "why, wife, what made you do that?"

"Because, you said we must cut down expenses," she answered, her voice trembling, "and besides," she added gently, "you have said two or three successive years, when the subscription price was due, that it seemed a useless expense."

"Very true, so I have," assented Mr. Willis, "and I believe we can very well do without it, at least better than we can afford to pay for it year after year."

So Mr. Willis departed for the meeting of prayer without the useful hints with which the religious paper might have furnished him had he been able to afford it.

On Saturday morning a neighbor ran hastily in, asking Mrs. Willis if she would allow her to see her paper for a moment. "I heard," she said, "there was another list of those useful recipes such as you allowed me to copy once, and I knew you would spare it a few moments."

"I've stopped my paper," faltered poor Mrs. Willis.

"Stopped it! Oh! well, never mind," and the neighbor departed rather confused.

"What made you tell her you'd stopped it?" asked Mr. Willis, who was just leaving for his business when the neighbor appeared. "I'm a little ashamed to have it known we, a Christian family, take no religious paper."

"I'm not half as ashamed of it as I am regretful," his wife answered gently.

Saturday night found the week's work nicely done, the children had taken the usual bath, and now gathered about their mother, lesson papers in hand.

"Come, mother," said Jamie, "Jennie and I are ready for our Sunday-school lesson. Where's the paper? I'll get it."

"We have no paper to-night, Jamie," Mrs. Willis answered cheerfully; "so we'll try to get along without its help."

"Why, where is it?" persisted Jamie.

"We could not afford it this year, my son," spoke up Mr. Willis. "You can learn your lesson just as well without it."

"Oh! dear me," piped up Jennie, "what shall we do without it? I don't see what you stopped it for; I say it's real mean."

"You shouldn't say things are real mean which can't be helped," remarked Mr. Willis. "Mother and I know best about such things."

And Jennie was silenced, but by no means convinced.

"And there's the story mother always read to us after the Sunday-school lesson was learned," wailed Jamie. "What shall we do without that?"

"Come, come!" exclaimed Mr. Willis, impatiently, "don't let me hear any more about that paper; make the best of a necessity. We can't afford it, that's enough. I'm surprised it makes such a fuss all around, just one paper."

No more was said that night.

The next morning, which was Sabbath, just as Mr. and Mrs. Willis were starting for church, a man so lame that he walked laboriously and only crept painfully along, was seen coming up to the door.

"Ah, here comes poor Mr. Edson," said Mr. Willis; "what could he have come all this distance for? Good morning, Mr. Edson; how is your wife this morning?"

"Better, sir, thank you; considerable better; she is sitting up to-day, and I came over, seeing she was feeling so smart, to see if you'd kindly lend me your paper; wife said 'twould be good as cordial any day to hear me read one of those nice sermons."

Mr. Willis hastened nervously to forestall his wife's forthcoming declaration.

"I'm very sorry, Mr. Edson, very sorry, but our religious paper didn't come this week. I'll find last week's copy for you, and next week I'll send over one of the children with this week's issue, if possible."

Nothing more was said on the subject until the family were seated at their ample dinner; then Jennie asked a little timidly:

"Pa, are you going to take mamma's paper again?"

"Yes, Jennie, I am; and I'm going to black my own boots hereafter to help pay for it."

The children were very quiet for a moment; then Jennie asked thoughtfully:

"And wouldn't it help if we didn't have raisins in the pudding? I'd a great deal rather have one nice story and a lesson every week than to have plums in our puddings."

"Yes, Jennie, that would help," replied the mother; "and as Margaret is about to leave, I'll hire a less expensive girl and do more of my own cooking; that will probably be a great saving in more respects than one. I miss the information and pleasure derived from my paper enough to make the extra effort willingly."

It was surprising how much happier they all felt, and when towards the last of the week the paper came, impulsive Jennie kissed it.

"Why, it looks just like an old friend," she exclaimed.

"Yes, and it is a friend in more ways than we realized; and not only a friend, but a help and a teacher," replied her mother.

Mr. Willis was silent; he saw the child's enthusiasm and heard the mother's comments; but afterwards, when only his wife and himself were in the room, he said:

"Wife, I am positively ashamed that I ever could have been so blind and stupid as not to properly appreciate the worth of a good religious paper. Absolutely ashamed that my poorer neighbors and my own children knew more of the worth and teaching of the religious press than I did. We will economize in some other direction than this in the future, do without something not actually indispensable to our comfort and satisfaction; and I promise you have heard the last from me you are ever likely to about not being able to afford one religious paper. We can't afford not to have it."

And that was how Mrs. Willis succeeded in stopping her religious paper.—Golden Rule.

FOUR NOTED BLIND MEN.

John Metcalf, a most wonderful production of the last century, was born at Knaresborough, Yorkshire, England, in 1717, says the St. Louis Republic. At the age of 4 a hard attack of the measles struck him totally blind—so blind that the brightest rays of the sun gave him no perception of light. Yet he did not give up in despair. A calamity had overtaken him which would have benumbed the faculties of a less courageous man forever. Not so with John Metcalf. It seemed only to brighten his remaining senses. At first he learned music, and, at the age of 12, was the most expert violinist in all England. When he arrived at man's estate he was owner of a house, a small farm, and a horse and carriage. At the age of 23 he was a well-known carrier, engaged in the occupation of carrying persons through the crowded streets to and from places of amusement. Besides his street work he frequently engaged to carry travelers to York, a distance of sixteen miles. In all this hazardous work he was as trusty as any man with two eyes, and got into but few difficulties from which he could not easily extricate himself. He became a great hunter and followed the hounds with as much pleasure and as surely as the most keen-eyed hunter. He had his own horse, and could tell the baying of his own hounds among hundreds. At the age of 40 he began the study of surveying and bridge-building. This not for idle pastime, but for profit. At one time he was the official surveyor of Yorkshire. Even to this day there are dozens of monuments to John Metcalf in his native shire in the shape of elegant roadbeds and splendid bridges. At Huddersfield one of the finest and most substantial bridges is known to have been constructed by him. What he could have accomplished with organs of sight unimpaired we can only conjecture.

John Gough, an Englishman by birth, became quite celebrated as a botanist and writer on subjects pertaining to natural philosophy. He was totally blind from the age of 3 years, the sense of vision being so deadened that he could not perceive the glare of sunlight upon the snow on the brightest winter days. Disabled by this appalling affliction he studied botany, his wife, brothers and sisters doing his reading, and collected and arranged by the sense of touch alone, and without the least aid from any living human being, one of the largest and most valuable collections of dried herbs and grasses at that time (1780) known in Britain.

That wonderful invention, the string alphabet for the blind, was invented by a man who never saw his queer-looking machine, the face of his mother, or the "glad sunlight" of which he so feelingly wrote. David Macbeth was blind from birth, yet a perfect genius in a dozen different ways. He was an accomplished musician, a perfect prodigy in mathematics, and an inventor of no mean order of merit. Besides his string alphabet, he was the inventor of one of the earliest known revolving-barrel churns, of a clamp to be used by book-binders in stitching leaves together, and of a self-oiling attachment for wagons and carriages. He could take his watch to pieces and put it together almost as quickly as the man who made it could have done. It was without a crystal, and by gently touching the hands with the tips of his fingers he could tell within one second of the time of day or night. He was an expert at the national game of cricket, and was reckoned as being one of the most valuable men in some parts of the game, but useless in others. When he died he had been engaged for years on the perfection of a fire-escape, which has since, with some slight changes and additions, made a London firm independent.

Vidal, the blind sculptor, is one of the wonders of the French capital. He has been blind since his 21st year. We can quite easily understand how a blind farmer would cultivate the ground with the plough, spade, and hoe; how he would feel around the tender plants and gently loosen the dirt from their roots, or how the blind Birmingham (Ala.) miner tells, with the sense of touch alone, the direction and to what depth to drill his holes before putting in a blast; but the work of Vidal stands out in bold relief, unique, wonderful and incomparable. To be a sculptor it is generally supposed that one must have the "mechanic's eye" and the artist's taste and perspicuity. The latter faculties Vidal has to an exceptional degree—even more acute, he believes, than if the former were not lost to him forever. By slowly passing his hands over an object he notes its external proportions, and imitates them in clay in a manner which strikes the beholder dumb with surprise. A dog, horse, human face, or anything alive or dead, he models with as much ease as any of the dozens of Parisian sculptors who still retain the faculty of sight. From 1855 to 1875 Vidal received more medals than any other exhibitor of works in the Paris art exhibition. Many of his works, made in the solitude of his perpetual midnight, are now on the shelf at the great exposition, where the blind wonder contends in friendly rivalry with his less unfortunate brother artists. He never complains, is always genial and festive when among his friends, who always speak of him and to him as though he could see, and well may they do so, for he is one of the best art critics in all Paris.

WINTER APPLES.

What cheer is there that is half so good,
In the snowy waste of a winter night,
As a dancing fire of hickory wood,
And an easy-chair in its mellow light;
And a pearmain apple, ruddy and sleek,
Or a jenneting with a freckled cheek?

A russet apple is fair to view,
With a tawny tint like an autumn leaf,
The warmth of a ripened corn-field's hue,
Or golden hint of a harvest sheaf;
And the wholesome breath of the finished year
Is held in a winesap's blooming sphere.

They bring you a thought of the orchard trees,
In blossom April and leafy June,
And the sleepy droning of bumble-bees,
In the lazy light of the afternoon,
And tangled clover and bobolinks,
Tiger-lilies and garden-pinks.
If you've somewhere left, with its gables wide,
A farm house set in an orchard old,
You'll see it all in the winter-tide
At sight of a pippin's green-and-gold,
Or a pearmain apple, ruddy and sleek,
Or a jenneting with a freckled cheek.

THE SCIENCE OF POP-CORN.

In what condition is the starchy interior of the grain just before it explodes? The common experience of the kitchen and laundry will help us here. In making up the mixture for stiffening clothes, the laundress puts starch into water and boils it, and we all know that in this process the starch loses its powdery character and becomes blended with the water into a pasty, translucent mass. The effect upon the individual starch granule is a softening and considerable increase of its bulk and, finally, its rupture and diffusion through the water. While we can not see the inside of the grain at the critical moment when it has all but burst, we may, in view of what we now know, probably surmise the truth. Is it not very likely that, as the grain gets hotter and hotter, the moisture present in the cells, or in the starch-granules themselves, softens them first, and then, when the heat becomes too great to permit its remaining in the fluid state, it suddenly turns to steam, and the now plastic starch expands in every direction, forming the little vesicles shown in the figure, losing at the same time, of course, the moisture and thus becoming firm and brittle again? This is the conclusion to which I have been brought, and I think of the wonderful physics of popped corn with great satisfaction whenever I shake my popper over the glowing coals.—From "Why Corn Pops," by Harry A. Doty, in St. Nicholas for November.

TEMPERANCE.

PROHIBITION IN KANSAS THE UNALTERABLE POLICY OF THE STATE.

Chief Justice Albert H. Horton says on the question of resubmission:

"I am opposed to the resubmission of the prohibition clause of the constitution by itself to the people. This is called for mainly by the enemies of the law, and largely for political and partisan purposes. Its friends do not desire resubmission. They do not wish to bear as tax-payers the expense of resubmission alone; they are not anxious for the presence of orators and newspaper correspondents, many non-residents of the State and with no permanent interest in Kansas, going about defaming the people of the State, exaggerating present evils that greater evils may come. The people do not care to have the State again made the scene of the expenditure of money by liquor dealers' associations; nor do they wish the 'jointist' or 'boot-legger,' who still lurks in Kansas, to believe that there is, or is to be a suspension of judgment in his case.

"There are thousands of children in Kansas, who have now arrived at years of observation and discretion, who have never seen a saloon. It is the hope of the great majority of the voters of Kansas, that while these children remain in the State they never shall see one. It is the hope of this majority, which is being daily reinforced, that the word 'saloon' shall never meet the eyes of the children as they file out of the doors of the public school. With the education these children are receiving, it is absolutely certain that when they become voters they will sustain the doctrine of absolute restriction.

"In all the cities and counties in Kansas, where the officers have fully, promptly and energetically performed their duties and where the prohibition law has been effectually enforced, all classes have been benefited. Its beneficent influence has reached rich and poor, but most of all it has helped the laboring man. This is the laborer's age. In spite of all assertions to the contrary, the world thinks, talks and acts more with reference to the interests of the man who lives by his daily toil than ever before. Prohibition, in such cities and counties, drove out the robber and despoiler of the poor. The effect of the passage of the law was immediate. The hand of the liquor seller, before stretched out between the hand of the employer and the employe, disappeared from the pay table. Grocers, bakers and dealers in clothing noticed a change. The money came to them for the necessities of life that before had been expended for its bane and curse. The traps before set at every step for the feet of the laboring man disappeared. The father is no longer allured, with the consent of the State, to squander the money of his wife and little children. He no longer takes the furniture, or the scanty clothing from his little home, and exchanging it for money at the pawn shop, spends the proceeds in the nearest saloon. Employers have repeatedly testified to the benefits which came with the change. However numerous may be that class which the enemies of prohibition gleefully asserts exists, who send hundreds of miles for liquor to be consumed secretly in their offices and at their sideboards within the State, it may safely be assumed that the laboring men, the men who earn daily wages by the toil that consumes the day, do not go to the trouble and expense of sending out of the State that they may start a home saloon of which their children are to be the customers.

"There are good and intelligent voters in the State who sincerely believe if 'resubmission' was voted upon and largely defeated, then all opposition to the enforcement of the prohibitory law would at once cease. Some of these voters, although strongly temperance, favor resubmission. They are simply mistaken. If the prohibition clause were resubmitted to-morrow and carried by 5,000, 10,000 or 25,000 majority, the opposition to the enforcement of prohibition would not cease. The liquor interest is never satisfied. This interest is craving, exacting, restless and disturbing always and everywhere. In New York State there is neither prohibition nor high license, yet the liquor interest of that State is more active, united and influential against the Republican party than any other. For years, with the support of the Democratic party, it has been able to defeat high license time and again in the legislature. In Ohio, the liquor interest has strongly opposed both high and low license, and at the late election, Gov. Foraker was defeated because he had declared publicly in favor of closing the saloons on Sunday. If low license is demanded, the liquor interest opposes that; if high license is proposed, the liquor interest fights the proposition with all the wealth and power at its command; if local option is tried, the liquor interest declares against sumptuary laws; if prohibition is proclaimed, the liquor interest demands resubmission at once. The liquor interest fights to the bitter end each and every movement tending to advance or strengthen the temperance cause. Like a hungry tiger, it 'grows upon what it feeds' and always resists restraint."

THE CRUEL SALOON.

The Chicago Tribune of Nov. 14 has an editorial of extraordinary pathos and power upon the story of Mrs. Hoertel, as given in her testimony in the Cronin case. It calls it "a sad and pitiful story of marital misery caused by liquor," and then goes on with these strong and scathing words:

"This poor woman spent her days scrubbing, ironing and washing. Her health was not robust. When she went to her home her husband was not there. The door was locked. She could not get in. She set out in search for her husband. She went straightway to the saloon where he was in the habit of spending his and her earnings, and where she had often found him before in a condition of beastly intoxication. She peered through the windows. She was afraid to look in at the door lest the brutal saloon keeper might draw his revolver on her as he did before when she sought to take her husband from his den, and out of his clutches. She did not find her husband. For two nights and two days she wandered about the streets of Lake View. Her husband, angered that she should have sued the groggery keeper who sold him liquid poison, and maddened by the influence of the vile stuff, changed the locks on the doors so that she might be barred out. In his besotted and bestial state he thought of that piece of brutality. Or was it suggested to him by the vile groggery-keeper who had kept him four days in his hell-hole away from her, and who took from the stupefied man over $400 of the poor woman's money?

"For trying to protect her husband the groggery-keeper persecuted her—brought trumped-up charges of chicken stealing against her. The Lake View justices who had the indecency to issue the warrants against the poor woman drew the line at that. They refused to fine her. Only one fine was inflicted, and that was because, when driven to despair, she made what the justice considered to be violent remonstrance against the groggery-keeper's attempts to rob and poison her husband."

This is a mighty temperance lecture; but does it determine the Tribune to use its vast influence and eloquent pens for the abolition of the 'hell-holes' and 'vile groggery-keepers'? O, no; it was not to point a moral at all, but only a weapon for municipal warfare. The peroration of this brave and burning editorial was, "What is Mayor Cregier going to do about it?" "Only this—and nothing more!" Christian Standard.

Men trust rather to their eyes than to their ears; the effect of precepts is therefore slow and tedious, whilst that of examples is summary and effectual.—Seneca.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The calling of Jeroboam, vs. 26-33. The blinding effect of continued wilful sin on the understanding was never more sadly illustrated than in the case of Solomon, all whose wisdom seems to have departed from him with his disobedience. On no other hypothesis can we account for the extreme impolicy of his course. David had ruled over a free people, with whom compulsory servitude or taxation, except for national and religious purposes, were unknown. If Solomon had been content to be God's viceroy instead of aping the magnificence of an Oriental despot, his sun might have gone down in unclouded splendor. But he wanted the praise of men; he was not satisfied with the simple but far greater honors of a theocratic king. One act of sin and folly always makes room for other and greater ones. He had alienated the common people by the oppressive taxation to which he was obliged to resort in order to keep up a royal state proportioned to his extensive harem; and outraged the feelings of every devout and pious Jew by licensing the worship of false gods in sight of the very Temple of Jehovah. Revolution was in the air, and those very classes which had been the support of David's throne in the revolt of Absalom were now the most deeply disaffected. Jeroboam well illustrates Solomon's own maxim, "See'st thou a man diligent in his business, he shall stand before kings." He was of obscure origin, and Jewish tradition ascribes to his mother an indifferent character, but all this was no bar with God to his succeeding to kingly honors. Circumstances of birth weigh nothing with Jehovah. To every American youth a royal inheritance is offered, but it must be accepted on God's conditions. We often boast that we are a nation of sovereigns, but no man is truly a sovereign, unless he can rule himself. If he allows any evil habit or vice to have dominion over him, or if he has sworn away his liberty to unknown superiors in some secret lodge, he is king only in name.

2. The duty of waiting God's time, vs. 34-39. Jeroboam was given plain instructions as to how he must do to insure the perpetuity of his dynasty, and the example of David who had been called to take the place of Saul under very similar conditions was placed before him as an object lesson. But he showed an essentially weak and ignoble character by his impatience to seize the throne before Solomon was dead, though told expressly that the latter should keep his kingdom during life. Patience is a god-like virtue; it allies us with the Divine. It is as much a duty to wait God's time as to be ready for that time when it comes. A perfect faith in God's promises would give us perfect patience to wait for their fulfilling. There would be no doing evil that good might come; no talking about the expediency of a certain line of conduct when the only question to be considered is the right or wrong of it; no casting of votes for men or measures that a Christian's conscience cannot approve, because it is thought the safety of the country depends on a certain man or a certain party being in power, when it really depends on no man and no party, but on the keeping of God's commands.

3. The end of Solomon's reign, vs. 40-43. We see here the futility of a policy dictated by mere worldly prudence. Solomon by allying himself with the King of Egypt thought to immensely strengthen his own dynasty, yet it was Egypt that gave refuge and protection to all the conspirators against his crown and life. It is in the bosom of the very sin which a government for expediency's sake upholds that the viper's eggs of conspiracy and secret intrigue are hatched. Any alliance with wickedness is sure to bring its own natural punishment with it, whether it be a church, a state, or an individual.

HELPFUL THOUGHTS FROM PELLETIER'S QUARTERLY.

I. PROMISES AND THREATENINGS. The fulfillment of God's warning is a proof that he will fulfill his promises. One Jewish rabbi laughed over the desolation of Jerusalem while his friend wept. Why? Because he said that this fulfilment of God's word of threatening was a proof that the promise too would certainly be accomplished.

II. DID SOLOMON REPENT? The question is not answered, probably lest sinners take too much courage to go on in sin, hoping to repent at last. Even if Solomon did repent and thus was saved, it was so as by fire and too dangerous an experiment for any one to repeat; and through all eternity he will be less than he might have been.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—The Baptist church in Wheaton is experiencing a very gracious revival. The meetings are led by a young evangelist named Houser, who is very successful in reaching the young, and is faithful in his testimony against worldly amusements. The Woodmen lodge is arranging for a dance, and he gave a powerful warning against the affair.

—The total number of student volunteers in our colleges for missions in the States and Canada (Dec. 17) was 3,100. One hundred and three volunteers have sailed; seventeen more are under appointments. The student interest in missions extends over two continents. American colleges are joined in this work with the universities of England, Scandinavia and Germany.

—Missionary "bands" are being introduced in the English universities. Oxford has just started one with a membership of fourteen.

—The entire Senior class—fourteen in number—in the United Presbyterian Theological Seminary, at Allegheny, Pa., have reported to the Board of Foreign Missions their willingness to engage in foreign work. Churches and an individual have engaged to provide for the support of six, who will probably be sent during the coming season.

—All the missions of the Reformed church in America are asking for men and some for women. Present necessities call for five or six men and two or three women. Two years ago their Japan mission asked for ten men and four women. Only one of each could be sent. Already this year three applications have been refused from lack of means.

—The organization of a new missionary society is now being considered by Christian workers in the United States. Almost simultaneously suggestions on the subject came from China, Africa and Chicago, to Dr. Dowkontt, of the New York Medical Mission. The China Inland Mission and Bishop Taylor's mission in Africa, which are self-supporting, are the models set before the friends interested. It is proposed that the new organization shall embrace some of the peculiar features of these two missions, and have in it the element of medical missions. The originators desire to take Canada into the organization, and make it a representative international missionary society.

—Rev. O. P. Gifford, of the Warren Avenue Baptist church, Boston, has offered his resignation, having accepted the call of the First Church, Brookline. Mr. Gifford is one of the speakers at the Boston Conference this week.

—A new feature in the work of the Kinzie Street Railway Department, Chicago, is a series of noon-day meetings in the shops of the Chicago & Northwestern Company at West Fortieth street. These gatherings had an average attendance of over 200 men daily, and as many as 400 have attended a single meeting.

—Philadelphia is trying to consolidate its three presbyteries. The Presbytery of Philadelphia is the oldest in the General Assembly, being organized in 1716, and is called the "Mother Presbytery."

—The new business house of the Methodist Book Concern and Mission Building is one of the finest in New York. It is in the style of the Italian renaissance, and cost about $1,000,000. It is on the corner of Fifth avenue and Twentieth street, 105 feet on the former, and 110 on the latter.

—The general Christian conference, under the auspices of the Evangelical Alliance of the United States, opened on Wednesday in Tremont Temple, Boston. On the last day, Friday, "Our Debt and Duty to the Immigrant Population" was the moving topic. Rev. C. E. Amaron, of Springfield, Mass., spoke of work among French-Canadians. "They are very prolific," he said, "and their leaders hope to build up Quebec, with New England, into a French Catholic nation. There are proportionately fewer French children in our public schools than five years ago. Our remedy must be in supplying the French Protestant churches with pastors." Rev. Dr. Parkhurst, of New York, spoke of the need of personal contact between Christians and non-church-goers. "There can be but one mediator," he said. "There is no 'monopoly' in the mercy sent, no 'corner' in grace, no 'trust' in sacramental privileges, although the clergy rather like this distinction. There is no more room for an altar in this sense in a Protestant church than for a golden calf."

—The Evangelical Alliance reports that there are now in thirty or forty cities and towns several thousand church members making regular monthly visits upon an average of ten families each, in the interests of their church and Christian life. These forces represent a large number of churches of all denominations, aroused to the duty and privilege of undertaking to preach the Gospel to every creature. The common plan of calling out the forces is, first, for each pastor to select his "supervisors," one efficient layman for every hundred of his members, and then select ten visitors for each supervisor. These visitors are properly instructed for their work before undertaking it. The territory to be visited is divided into districts of about one hundred families each, and each district is placed in charge of a supervisor. Sometimes three, four, or five supervisors of adjoining districts, together with their visitors, meet monthly for mutual instruction and encouragement. Each supervisor's district is subdivided into fields of about ten families each, and to each field is assigned a visitor, who is expected to call monthly, that through personal acquaintance may be acquired a personal influence which shall be used to win the family to Christ and the church. The monthly meeting, which is necessary for reports, discussions, suggestions, instructions, is often of intense interest as well as great profit. A letter from an eminent pastor, in an Alliance where two hundred and twenty visitors are at work, says: "I know some visitors who pooh-poohed the plan at the outset, but now regard it as the grandest opportunity of their lives to do good. We can hope for the conversion of the masses when we have converted the churches from lukewarmness to fervor."

In his very able and eloquent paper, before the Roman Catholic Congress, Mr. Bonaparte said that "whatever the Pope may become, he never can become a subject." If not, why not? All the Apostles, Peter not excepted, were subjects of Tiberius, Caligula, Claudius and Nero, four emperors of whom the best was worse than the worst kings of the House of Savoy. The popes down to the time of the Hohenstaufen emperors, were subjects. For thirteen centuries they held their place and maintained their independence without exercising any sovereign political authority over Rome. The period when they did exercise it was not half so long, and certainly not a quarter so illustrious. Gregory the Great, Leo the Great, Gregory VII., Innocent III., Gregory IX., were subjects. Can any later popes be put in comparison with these five as asserters of the dignity and the authority of the papacy? Certainly this rehearsal of papal claims will not help to the object which we believe Cardinal Gibbons has at heart—the establishment of an entente cordiale between the Roman Catholic church and the American people. It can only strengthen the conviction of Protestants that that church everywhere is a foreign organization, working for the interests of a foreign potentate, rather than for the great ends which are proper for a Christian church.—The American, Philadelphia.

The Christian Intelligencer calls attention to the fact that, in the paper on one side of which could be read Archbishop Ryan's sermon telling how Protestants are gradually disabused of the old notion that Roman Catholics held that the Bible should not be used, on the inside was printed a dispatch from Ottawa, Canada, telling how a visitor saw in a parish in Quebec several hundred Bibles publicly burned on the square in front of the church, at the instance of the cure, who had collected them from his parishioners. "It would seem to an unprejudiced person that these two things do not hold together, that men do not usually burn the books they desire others to read."—United Presbyterian.

According to the Statistical Year Book of Germany, for 1889, the latest data on the religious status of the country are these: 29,369,847 Evangelicals, 16,785,734 Catholics, 125,673 other Christians, 562,172 Jews, 11,278 confessors of other religions or professing no religion at all. The Evangelicals include Lutherans, Reformed, and the United church, i. e., the union formed in 1817 in Prussia and some other states between the two Protestant confessions; the Catholics include Roman Catholics, Greek Catholics and Old Catholics. In 1871 the proportions were these: 25,581,685 Evangelicals, 14,869,292 Catholics, 82,158 other Christians, 512,853 Jews, 17,156 of other or no religion. The most noteworthy features of these figures is that while the Evangelicals and the Catholics have grown in equal proportion, the number of "other" Christians has increased in much larger proportion.

In regard to Paul's remark that "though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day," Dr. Meyer says: "There is here a noble testimony to the consciousness that the continuous development of spiritual life is not dependent on the condition of the body." Paul was no materialist. He never confounded the morally self-conscious personality which he calls the "inward man," with what he calls the "outward man." The two were in his view distinct alike in nature and destiny.

IN BRIEF.

Captain Pratt, of the Carlisle, Pa., Industrial School, says the Indian boys connected with his school earned $12,000 by manual labor on farms and elsewhere during the past year. That proves that the young Indian idea can grasp other industries besides scalp raising.

The Woburn Advertiser tells of a dog in Manchester: A bright-witted girl telephoned to her father at his office, asking if her dog "Curly" was there. Reply came on that he was. "Well, take him up in your arms and hold the receiver to his ear; I want to tell him to come home," said the girl. Her father did so. The dog's countenance wore momentarily a look of astonishment at hearing "Come home, Curly! Come home!" in the feminine tones of his mistress. It took him only an instant to understand what was wanted, and then he made a break for home as fast as he could go.

The New York Post has an interesting article on Catholic charities in this city, which shows the value of the buildings and sites owned by this church and devoted to charity amounts to about $5,500,000, and that the expenditures in behalf of the various institutions amounts to about $800,000 a year. The church educates over 30,000 children at an annual cost of $600,000. It supports three hospitals, which are open to all, regardless of their religious faith. Charles D. Kellogg, a Protestant, and secretary of the Charity Organization Society, says that the Catholic charities equal, if they do not exceed, those of all other religious organizations put together.

Mount Pulaski, Ill., is excited over an attempt to destroy a family by means of an infernal machine. Robert Rennell, a wealthy citizen, received by express a box, and upon opening it found an ingenious and deadly contrivance. Connected with the bomb, which was either nitro-glycerine or dynamite in some form, were wires which ran to a small electric battery so arranged that when the lid of the box was taken off the battery was set to work. Mr. Rennell discovered the nature of the machine in time and hurried his family out of the house. A few moments afterward the explosion occurred, and the building, a two-story brick, was demolished. No explanation of the motive of the crime has been made.

The remarkable achievement of sinking a deep shaft through treacherous ground by means of first freezing the earth has been accomplished at the Chapin mine, in the upper Michigan peninsula, by the Poetsch process. The contract was to freeze, excavate and curb up a rectangular shaft 15½x16½ feet, and 100 feet deep. This was done by first putting down the freezing pipes three feet apart in a circle 29 feet in diameter to the depth proposed to be reached by the shaft. The pipes were connected at the top and filled with a solution of brine containing about 25 per cent of calcium chloride. The brine was frozen to a point below zero by means of an ice machine, and in forty days a frozen wall of ice, earth and stone was formed ten feet thick. The excavation in the meantime had been going on, and seventy days from the commencement it was completed to the ledge 100 feet down, in spite of some difficulty from the percolation of water at the bottom, which was stopped by freezing. Except for this ingenious method the sinking of the shaft would, it seems, have been practically impossible on account of the great inflow of water.

The Fifty-first Congress, which convened on Monday, Dec. 2, is the first Congress in sixteen years in which the Republican party has had a majority in both branches. In the Forty-third Congress, elected in 1872, and convened in December, 1873, the Republicans controlled both the Senate and the House. But in the Forty-fourth Congress the House was lost, and although the Republicans held the Senate in that and in the succeeding Congresses, they lost it as a result of the elections of 1878. They regained the House in 1880, but lost it in 1882, and since 1883 the Senate has been Republican and the House Democratic. In the Fifty-first Congress, if every member were in their seat, there would be in the Senate—not reckoning the Senators to be chosen in Montana, whose titles are likely to be questioned—45 Republicans and 37 Democrats. The House numbers 330 members, of whom 169 are Republicans and 161 Democrats. It will require 166 votes for a quorum in the House, so that the Republicans, when all are present, will have three more than a quorum, and a majority of eight over their political opponents. The return of the Republican party to full control of the legislative and executive departments of the government after this long period is an event of no ordinary interest. For the first time since the term of the Forty-third Congress, which expired in March, 1875, there is an opportunity for the Republican party to impress its policy as regards matters in which it can command the unbroken support of its representatives in Congress upon the legislation of the country. Opportunity carries with it responsibility.

Take Hood's Sarsaparilla 100 Doses One Dollar

The Chief Reason for the marvellous success of Hood's Sarsaparilla is found in the fact that this medicine actually accomplishes all that is claimed for it. Its real merit has won for Hood's Sarsaparilla a popularity and sale greater than that of any other blood purifier. It cures Scrofula, all Humors, Dyspepsia, etc. Prepared only by C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

You can make a large sum of money at work for us in your own locality. During the past few years, those who have thus worked have received over Five Millions of dollars for their services—more than a barrel of money. We want a few more workers at once. The work is easy, pleasant, adapted to both young and old of either sex. You can work all the time or in spare time only. Any one can do the work after studying our directions for a day or two. This is the chance of a lifetime for those who apply at once. Any one anywhere can earn $100 per month. Great workers, under the most favorable conditions, earn $20 a day and upwards. No class of people in the world are making so much money, without capital, as those at work for us. Whatever you have done, or whatever you may do, you should look into this royal chance. You will find that you can easily make all that we claim, and more. If you write to us before we secure all the workers we need, we will lay all before you FREE. Better write before you read, and then if you conclude not to go to work, or if we cannot employ you, no harm is done. Every one of our workers makes big money. True & Co., Box 399, Augusta, Maine.

FIFTY YEARS and BEYOND;

OR,

Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by

REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors and gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

The Master's Carpet.

BY

F. Ronayne.

Past Master of Keystone Lodge No. 639
Chicago.

Explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the Lodge, thus showing the principles on which the order is founded. By a careful perusal of this work, a more thorough knowledge of the principles of the order can be obtained than by attending the Lodge for years. Every Mason, every person contemplating becoming a member, and even those who are indifferent on the subject, should procure and carefully read this work. An appendix is added of 32 pages, embodying which gives every sign, grip and ceremony of the Lodge together with a brief explanation of each. The work contains 429 pages and is substantially and elegantly bound in cloth. Price, 75 cents. Address

Freemasonry at a Glance,

HOME AND HEALTH.

CARE OF THE TEETH.

Brush your teeth, and teach your children to brush their teeth after every meal with tepid water, and always just before retiring at night, with a good dentifrice. If you could brush your teeth but once a day, you should do it the last thing before going to bed; for the constant movement of the tongue and saliva against the teeth during the day keep them partially cleansed. But at night the muscles and tongue are at rest, and the small particles of food that are floating about in the mouth, or lodged between the teeth, unite with the stagnant saliva, producing an acid that attacks the tooth either at the neck or in one of the irregular convolutions of the crown. While too vigorous brushing is to be deprecated, yet it is better to err in overdoing than not brushing thoroughly enough. Every accessible surface of the teeth should be thoroughly brushed to remove any food that may be lodged there. Do not rest content to brush only the fronts of the teeth, but also the inner surface and crowns; the upper teeth should be brushed downwards and the lower teeth upwards, in order that the bristles may pass between the teeth and force out any particles of food there; it also presses the gums against the necks of the teeth. Always use a soft wooden toothpick after meals, never a pin or any metal one.—Home Knowledge.

A CURE FOR STOOPED SHOULDERS.

How often one hears the remark: "What a big, fine fellow Mr. So-and-so would be if he didn't stoop!" And still such a misfortune can easily be cured. The stooping figure and halting gait, accompanied by the unavoidable weakness of the lungs, can be attended to and finally cured by the very simple and easily-performed exercise of raising one's self upon the toes in a perfectly perpendicular manner several times daily. To take this exercise properly one must take a perfect position, with the heels together and the toes at an angle of forty-five degrees. Then drop the arms lifelessly by the sides, animating and raising the chest muscularly to its full capacity; the chin should be well drawn in, and the crown of the head feeling as if attached to a string suspended from the ceiling above. Slowly raise upon the balls of both feet to the greatest possible height, thereby exercising all the muscles of the legs and body; this done, then reassuming the standing position without swaying the body backward out of the perfect line. Repeat this exercise, first on one foot and then on the other. The result will be a surprise to many to know what a powerful straightening-out power this exercise has upon round and stooped shoulders, and it will soon be apparent that the lungs will begin to show expansive development.—Philadelphia Telegraph.

Boiled or roasted onions are a specific for colds on the chest. They may not agree with every one, but to persons with good digestion they will not only be found to be a most excellent remedy for a cough, and the clogging of the bronchial tubes, which is usually the cause of the cough, but if eaten freely at the outset of a cold, they will break up what promised, from the severity of the attack, to have been a serious one.

Those who use lime as a fertilizer apply from ten to fifty bushels to the acre; ashes may be applied at the same rate, salt at the rate of 200 to 400 pounds, and plaster at the rate of 100 pounds.

It is not generally known that a few sprigs of cedar bush, mixed with hay or any kind of litter for hens' nests, will keep them entirely free from hen lice.

There are upwards of 1,000,000 agricultural land-owners in Germany, possessing less than three and a quarter acres each.

Thousands of people have found in Hood's Sarsaparilla a positive cure for rheumatism. This medicine, by its purifying action, neutralizes the acidity of the blood, which is the cause of the disease, and also builds up and strengthens the whole body. Give it a trial.

FARM NOTES.

POULTRY—BREEDS FOR LAYING.

The best breeds of fowls for laying are those that suit the climate in which they are kept. It is an oft-repeated inquiry as to which breed is most suitable, by those who contemplate poultry keeping. Such inquiry can only be answered by those who have experimented with different varieties in different locations. There is no doubt that the Leghorns are equal to any other breed for egg-production, but it does not follow that they are the most profitable fowl under all circumstances. They are divided into two classes—the single and rose-combs—and there is a further subdivision, according to color. The single-comb varieties of fowls are subject to frozen combs in very cold weather, but when properly managed they escape harm. The difficulty may be overcome by "dubbing" them, as is done with Games, but as the principal points of the Leghorns are given to the comb, they would thereby be disqualified from competition at the fairs and poultry shows. A frosted comb would not be very objectionable to those who only breed fowls for profit and not for exhibition, but when the comb becomes frosted, the hen ceases to lay until the injured member is completely healed. As the comb may be frozen several times during the cold season, the loss of time from egg-production, owing to the effect of the temperature, would be quite an important item. The double-comb varieties, though exposing quite a large surface to the action of cold, have their combs closer to the head.

In thus noticing so small a matter as the comb, the object is to present one of the difficulties in the way of keeping a breed that never sets, but lays well. While the breed may not find favor in cold climates, that is no reason why it should not be popular in other sections. As the Leghorns have their virtues and faults, so do the other breeds of fowls. In raising fowls for market, many object to the Brahmas and Cochins on account of their slow growth, and this objection may be a strong one if the fowls are to be sent to market as chicks, as they do not feather until well advanced. If matured fowls are intended for shipment, the largest carcasses, with fine appearance, may be obtained from such breeds. The Plymouth Rocks, which grow fast, and are uniform in appearance when young, also make good market fowls when grown, but, while they are excellent layers, they are liable to become excessively fat when highly fed, especially when they are confined, which is a hindrance to egg-production. This may also be an objection to the Brahmas and Cochins. The best results are derived from Plymouth Rocks when they have free range. All breeds do best with freedom, but the larger ones are more contented under restriction. It is best, therefore, in selecting a breed for laying, to take into consideration its hardiness, fitness for market, time of maturity, adaptability to climate, and disposition. By selecting that breed which possess qualities adapting them to the conditions of the particular section of country, the best breed for laying as well as for other purposes will be secured.—P. H. Jacobs, in American Agriculturist.

TAKING CARE OF HORSES.

Some have the idea that many horses are injured by feeding too much grain. Is it not more in the way they are fed rather than in quantity? Farm horses that have been ploughing from half-past 6 in the morning until noon, if the weather is very warm, come to the barn fatigued. The careless teamster feeds them their corn meal (a fair amount) while they are yet perspiring, the result of which, in a short time, is in the horses being "used up." If that same amount of meal had been given them at the proper time they would have thrived upon it. Although oats are more easily digested, and are natural food for horses, a horse that is fatigued, after any kind of labor, should be rubbed and brushed and allowed to rest awhile before being fed, then the digestive organs are in a condition to receive it.

The Best Remedy Taken in Season,

FOR Sore Eyes, Cancerous Humors, Prurigo, and other manifestations of depraved blood, is Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Used persistently, according to directions, it effectually eradicates all traces of disease, and restores the sufferer to a sound and healthy condition.

"I hereby certify that I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla, with excellent success, for a cancerous humor, or, as it seemed to be, cancer on my lip. Shortly after using this remedy the sore healed. I believe that the disease is entirely cured, and consider Ayer's Sarsaparilla to be an infallible remedy for all kinds of eruptions caused by impure blood."—Charles G. Ernberg, Vasa, Minn.

"For years my blood was in an unhealthy condition. After having tried other medicines without success, I have lately taken Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and with the best results. I think this medicine is the only blood-purifier that can be absolutely relied upon."—Mrs. Oliver Valentine, 144 Quincy St., Brooklyn, New York.

"A neighbor of ours who was rendered nearly blind from scrofula, was entirely cured by using three bottles of Ayer's Sarsaparilla."—Stephens & Best, Druggists, Ball Play, Tenn.

"For several years afflicted with disorders of the blood, I have received more benefit from the use of sarsaparilla than from all other medicines."—B. Rice, 140 Endicott St., Boston, Mass. Made by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla arrests blood-poisoning before it pervades the system. Don't delay till the forces of nature are exhausted and there is nothing to work on. Begin at once the use of this medicine, and be sure you take no other to counteract its effects.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla cured me of a bad case of blood-poisoning and restored me to health. My system was saturated with a poison which all ordinary remedies failed to reach, but Ayer's Sarsaparilla did the work completely. This was twenty-one years ago, and no symptoms of the disease have since appeared. I have recommended this wonderful medicine to hundreds of people, similarly afflicted, and always with the most satisfactory results."—A. H. Christy, Bourbon, Ind.

"For many years I was troubled with scrofulous complaints. Hearing Ayer's Sarsaparilla very highly recommended, I decided to try it, and have done so with the most gratifying effects. I am convinced that Ayer's Sar-is the best possible blood-medicine."—John W. Starr, Laconia, Ind. Price $1; six bottles, $5. Worth $5 a bottle.

Another way to abuse a horse is to scrape its legs with a card or curry comb. Many a poor animal has been "stormed" at and "slapped" because it did not stand still to have an old card raked over its joints. If the poor beast could speak (I have often wished they could) he would tell you it "hurts." How much more comfortable for the animal to take a little tepid water and dampen a woolen rag or sponge and wipe its legs, then apply the root brush. Then there would be no occasion for scolding.

One more abomination! That is the head check rein. No horse can travel easily with the check rein running through the bridle at the top of the head. There are a great many things that could be mentioned upon this subject.—N. E. Farmer.

THE VOICE

Those who overtax the voice in singing or public speaking will find "BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES" exceedingly useful, enabling them to endure more than ordinary exertion with comparative ease, while they render articulation clear. For Throat Diseases and Coughs they are a simple yet effectual remedy. Containing nothing injurious they may be used as often as required, and will not disorder the stomach like cough syrups and balsams. For forty years they have been recommended by physicians, and widely used, being known all over the world as one of the few staple cough remedies. Sold only in boxes.

Did you notice that fine head of hair at church last Sunday? That was Mrs. B—. She never permits herself to be out of Hall's Hair Renewer.

PAGAN COUNTERFEITS

IN THE

Christian Church.

A pamphlet of 52 pages, by Chas. A. S. Temple.

The following from Rev. H. H. Hinman shows his estimate of its contents:

"I have read with great interest 'Pagan Counterfeits in the Christian Church' by Chas. A. S. Temple. I regard the subject discussed as important, and its presentation both able and timely. There is a most manifest drift in all our Protestant denominations towards unauthorized ritualism and the substitution of human inventions in place of the simplicity of the Gospel, as given by Christ and his apostles. In calling attention to this tidal wave of formalism, the author has conferred a lasting benefit on the church as of Protestantism."

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

President Harrison and party left Washington Friday afternoon for Chicago via Indianapolis. At the last moment Mrs. Harrison decided not to accompany the President, owing to the condition of her sister, Mrs. Scott-Lord, who is seriously ill at her home in Washington.

Senator Cullom yesterday introduced a petition from the Shorthorn Producers' Association in favor of subsidies for the steamships to South and Central America, and one in favor of Chicago as the site of the proposed world's fair in 1892.

The total collections of internal revenue for the first four months of the present fiscal year were $46,733,350, an increase of $4,039,364, as compared with the corresponding period of last year. The increase on spirits alone was $2,398,160.

James H. Blodgett, of Rockford, Ill., has been appointed a special agent to collect statistics of education in the United States for the eleventh census.

Secretary Windom has transmitted to Congress the estimates for appropriations required for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891. He estimates that the sum of $341,428,977 will be needed. The estimates for 1890 were $323,467,488. The appropriations for the present fiscal year were $323,495,936.

CHICAGO.

President Harrison reached the city Monday forenoon from Indianapolis, where he spent the Sabbath. He was escorted from the station by regiments of militia, and the Union League gave a grand reception in the afternoon. Vice President and Mrs. Morton reached the city on Sabbath morning.

COUNTRY.

The New York park board has appointed a committee to consider means of preserving the Egyptian obelisk now in Central Park. The stone is rapidly chipping off under climatic influences, and the inscriptions will soon disappear unless some method of arresting the decay is adopted.

Legal proceedings are to be begun against every building and loan association in Missouri, for failure to comply with the new law requiring each of them to deposit $100,000 in cash with the State Treasurer.

The managers and performers in all the Cincinnati theaters, except the Grand, were fined for giving Sunday performances.

A grind-stone weighing three tons exploded in the Kalamazoo Spring and Axle Works Wednesday, killing Irving Hall. One piece weighing a ton flew fifty feet.

Near Perry Station, Prior Creek, Indian Territory, two men robbed the express car of a Missouri, Kansas & Texas train, securing between $45,000 and $50,000. One of the bandits took control of the engine while his partner gained access to the express car and rifled the packages.

A two-story brick dwelling at Dayton, Ohio, was blown to atoms by an explosion of natural gas. Two children were killed, and the owner, his wife, and father were terribly and probably fatally injured, and were rescued and taken to the hospital.

Reports from Charlotte, N. C., are to the effect that a cyclone passed over a portion of Buford county, blowing down houses and uprooting trees. One family, consisting of father, mother and four children, was entirely wiped out, being instantly killed.

Four little girls, daughters of Hugh Dunn, a wealthy mine operator at Elliottsville, W. Va., found a keg of powder in an abandoned shaft and exploded it. All four were blown to atoms. The mother, on learning of the accident, became violently insane.

Fire at Philadelphia early Monday morning consumed the bakery of Gustave Gross, whose wife and four children perished in the flames. Gross and another family who occupied the rear part of the house narrowly escaped.

The new steamer China arrived at San Francisco Friday morning from China and Japan, making the trip from Yokohama in 12 days 11 hours, thus beating all trans-Pacific records.

A call has been issued for a national conference at Springfield, Ill., Dec. 18 and 19 next, of State boards of live stock commissioners and State veterinarians, to recommend action to the various legislatures for the suppression of cattle diseases.

The thawing of frozen dynamite at Howard Junction, Pa., Friday, resulted in an explosion which killed two men and seriously injured a youth of 18.

A cotton-gin on the Meredith plantation at Colfax, La., exploded Thursday morning, killing six men and two women and wounding many others, all Negroes.

In the jail at Florence, A. T., were five Apache Indians, sentenced to be hanged Friday for murder. Three of them strangled themselves in their cells Wednesday night, leaving but two to face the executioner.

At Elgin, Ill., Monday, John Stapleton and his wife, aged about 60 years, and their grandson, aged 10 years, were found dead in their house, having been suffocated by coal gas.

Two severe shocks of earthquake early Tuesday morning caused the inhabitants of Alton Bay, on the shores of Lake Winnipisaukee, N. H., to rush from their dwellings in fright. The towns of Alton and Guilford were also shaken, and the bell on a steamer on the lake was rung by the shock.

Dr. T. B. Harvey, a well-known physician of Indianapolis, Ind., died Thursday. He was delivering a lecture to the clinic class of the Indiana Medical College, when he was stricken with cerebral hemorrhage and died in a few minutes.

Peter Uhl, of Canton, Ohio, went to sleep on a sofa Monday night while smoking a cigar. A paper caught fire, and his 10-year-old son Willie was suffocated by the smoke.

Gov. A. C. Mellette, of South Dakota, says that from personal investigation he knows that there are nearly 3,000 persons in Minor county actually destitute, and many must die of hunger unless relief is furnished them at once. The Governor is now making a canvass of the counties on the Missouri river slope, soliciting aid for the famished settlers.

FOREIGN.

Two hundred thousand miners employed in the coal mines in the Saar district have petitioned the Kaiser to intervene in their behalf. They complain that even the unmarried men cannot live on the wages they now get, as all things are very dear. They ask that a court of arbitration may be appointed. It is expected that the Kaiser will receive another deputation. Several collieries on the Rhine have notified their customers that they are forced to interrupt delivery in order to keep a reserve against contingencies.

A dispatch from Zanzibar Dec. 6 announces that Emin Pasha has met with a possibly fatal accident. Being near-sighted he walked out of a window by mistake and fell twenty feet on his head, fracturing his skull. He now lies at Bagamoyo in a critical condition. All the doctors except Stanley's physician declare that Emin's injuries will prove fatal. Stanley's physician is hopeful of saving Emin's life, but says that under the most favorable circumstances the patient cannot be moved for at least ten days.

Father Schynz, who returned with Stanley, declares that half measures are impossible in Germany's dealings with the Arabs, and that Germany must either consent to slavery or maintain her position in Africa by force until the Arabs submit. He says it will take centuries to suppress the slave trade completely.

Recently a mob attacked the China Inland and Methodist Episcopal missions at Naukang. They destroyed both chapels and an opium refuge, and stoned the officials who attempted to interfere. The missionaries and ladies took refuge in the yamen.

The Holland Chamber has approved, by a vote of 31 to 13, the government bill for grants to denominational schools and the abolition of free education except for paupers.

It is reported in Paris, the headquarters of atheist Masonry, that the Jesuits will be expelled from Brazil, and that their expulsion will be followed by the sale of their houses and lands. They own extensive tracts of the best situated and most fertile lands in the country.

Advices from Rio Janeiro to Nov. 22, confirm the statement that the revolution in Brazil was precipitated by the attempt of the government to remove disaffected troops from Rio Janeiro to the provinces. The revolt was confined to the military and students. The populace was passive. The only act of bloodshed was the attack upon Minister of Marine Ladario, who was shot in three places. He is recovering from the effects of his wounds. In Bahia and Pernambuco business proceeds as if nothing had happened. The Bank of Brazil addressed a letter to the chief of police advising him that a guard for the bank was no longer requisite.

President Sacasa has signed the treaty admitting Nicaragua into the United States of Central America, but it is believed that the Nicaraguan Congress will reject the measure. The treaty forms a union of the five republics of Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Honduras, San Salvador and Guatemala, under the name of the United States of Central America. For the first ten years this union will simply be an offensive and defensive alliance, and the president of the union will have charge only of the diplomatic and foreign relations of the five republics. At the expiration of that period the union will be cemented by the adoption of a constitution which will embrace all political, commercial and other relations between the five republics and foreign powers.

The latest reports from Brazil begin to tinge the revolution there with blood. It was not an affair of the people, but of a small body of conspirators who got control of the army and used it to suddenly carry out their carefully studied plot. The navy refused to submit until a number of sailors had been killed; and the subservient and indolent populace are at length awakening to the condition of their government. In name only a republic, its rulers are a cabal, whose cohesive force is probably the Masonic oath and not patriotism. The history of this revolution is yet to be made public, but the lodge promises to appear the chief agent in it.

Salt Lake City is looking up. Since the decision of Judge Anderson the people begin to realize that their redemption draws nigh. The real estate values feel the change immediately and powerfully. The demand for lots has enormously enhanced. There is nothing like good government and a recognition of morality in a community to give it a substantial prosperity. Salt Lake is one of the best located towns in America, and but for the control of the Mormon church and the curse of polygamy it would now be one of the largest and most enterprising cities west of the Rocky Mountains. With Mormon rule broken there is great hope for Salt Lake and even for Utah.

The verdict of the jury in the Cronin case was given Monday afternoon, after three days of consideration. It was received with a sense of relief, but without satisfaction. It releases Beggs, the Senior Guardian of Camp 20, gives Kunze three years, and Coughlin, O'Sullivan and Burke a life sentence in the penitentiary. It is believed that this verdict is a compromise, and that one juror disagreed with the judgment of death determined upon by eleven. The city has been full of wild rumors, and much excitement. Thus probably ends a case of unparalleled length in American criminal records, and of vast importance. Though the terms of punishment are inadequate to the crime, yet the guilt of these lodge murderers is established. But the verdict gives no hope that the inner circle of conspirators, of whom the convicted men were but the tools, will ever be discovered.

Rev. J. H. Nelson gave, in a sermon at Lake Bluff Camp-meeting last summer, a testimony respecting Brazil which is worth recalling at this time of change in that country. He had been a missionary in that South American empire and spoke from experience when he said that "the Roman priests had been teaching the people all manner of degrading falsehoods. This had been going on until most of them believed that the power of salvation was in the priests' hands. No matter how wicked a man, he was holy when in the robes of his office. Superstition filled their hearts." He also testified that "the worst enemy of the Catholics there was Masonry. It was that which had opened the way for the Protestant missions. Although the Masons often stood by him in his work, because of their enmity to the Romish church, the lodges were all hot-beds of infidelity."

George May Powell, the philanthropist of Philadelphia, during his late visit to Chicago to attend the State Sabbath convention, addressed the Chicago Board of Trade managers. Mr. Powell is president of the Arbitration Council, and he spoke in advocacy of arbitration. Pushing preventives of conditions creating causes for arbitration, was, he said, their chief work. Its agitation of profit-sharing on railways and in manufacturing and commercial concerns had encouraging results. One railway which has profit-shared two years reports no lives lost—no serious accident, and the greatest prosperity in its history. "The Council is scattering documents showing gratifying results from public school savings banks. It advocates postal savings banks, and reduction in rates on third and fourth class mail. The savings banks means homes and growth of individual business, and the man with even a small sum in bank, or who owns even so humble a home or business, will not carry the red flag or throw bombs. The Council claims that elimination of ethics from political economy is the chief cause of industrial friction, and such elimination kills the goose that lays the golden egg. Therefore, there is no more dangerous or unprofitable citizen than a native American who has lost his conscience."

The very general manifestation of respect for the memory of Jefferson Davis, and mourning for his death in the South, cannot easily be reconciled with equally positive expressions of loyalty from the same States. Let us hope, however, that with the passing away of the generation, whose experiences in war left ineffaceable bitterness, there may come a healthier and more hopeful spirit over the nation. The magnanimous and kindly spirit of General Clinton B. Fisk, the Prohibition leader, gives an incident respecting Davis which lightens the dark picture of his later life. All the public and private correspondence of the rebel leader, when his plantation in northern Mississippi was captured in 1863, fell into the hands of General Fisk, who declares that a spirit of loyalty to the Union was breathed throughout the letters which Mr. Davis wrote in the stormy period between 1850 and 1856, and specifies the endorsement which was on the back of a letter written to him in the autumn of the latter year by a committee of Maine Democrats. These people urged him, as Secretary of War, to cripple the military establishment of the United States by every means in his power, and at the same time increase the fighting strength of the Southern States. On the back of this Mr. Davis wrote: "Not to be entertained for a moment."

TEMPLES AND FEATHERS.

BY MRS. A. E. KELLOGG.

In the 8th chapter of the prophecy of Hosea we find a terrible summing up of the transgressions of Israel, which culminates in this: "For Israel hath forgotten his Maker and buildeth temples."

Is human nature very different at the distance of 2,600 years, from what it was when this charge was made against Israel? Israel, chosen of God and set apart from the nations by command, by miracle, by marvelous deliverances, and by exceeding great and precious promises, had forgotten all these and had become abominable and sinful exceedingly. The sentiment of reverence had not, however, become extinct. They felt the need of an object of worship, and so they built temples to be the residence of fictitious deities. Ah! yes, they had forgotten their Maker and enshrined the gods of the nations with whom they had been forbidden to have any affinity, and they worshiped Baal and Ashteroth and Moloch. Why? Because in the sensuous worship, with the pomp and circumstance and costly gifts, they could find a deceitful peace, a drugged conscience. Yes, they had forgotten their Maker and built temples! They were weary of being reminded that the wages of sin was death, and sin was any transgression or disobedience of God's perfect law, which should surely receive a just recompense of reward; and hence the bleeding lamb and the smoking sacrifice, always pointing to the coming of the Just One who should take away sin by the sacrifice of himself.

And what was the consequence to Israel of substituting a false worship for the true? Ruin! "Oh, Israel, thou hast destroyed thyself!" but he adds, "In me is thy help." Commands and promises were the basis on which the nation of Israel was established, and enforcement and fulfillment was the condition of its existence. So when they forgot their Maker, he gave them up to their own devices.

Was not our own nation based also on the Law and Providence of God, and a faith in an atoning Saviour? And are we proving nationally that the doctrine of the atonement is as irksome to us as to them? And are the costly temples, which are rearing their haughty heads in every city all over the land, proof that men are weary of the self-denying doctrines of the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ, and are drifting into idolatry, forgetting their Maker and substituting for the law of Christ a human code which exalts the creature and constructs a ladder out of their own self-righteousness with which to scale the walls of the heavenly city. This, with the mummeries which are practiced in darkness, which would not bear the light of day for an hour, is the means by which they are to attain everlasting life.

These thoughts have rather forced themselves upon me from the fact that Denver seems just now the hot-bed for the growth and maintenance of oath-bound secrecy. Orders spring up in a night like Jonah's gourd, and if they would only perish in a night as that frail protection for Jonah's head did, it would be well. But convention follows convention in quick succession, so that one would be troubled to keep track of them; and a temple is rising, story upon story, toward the clouds, to accommodate the central lodge, from which all others spring.—the lodge, which traces its secret rites to the idolatrous worship of Baal and the obscene orgies of the priests and priestesses of Isis and Osiris. And the uninitiated are made to wonder at the proposed gorgeousness of the finishing and furnishing of this wonderful Masonic temple; large enough, it would seem, to accommodate the four hundred who were fed at Jezebel's table. But where is Elijah?

And now we are regaled with the prospect of the triennial conclave of the Knights Templar in 1892, when a sum of $200,000 is expected to be paid for the privilege of witnessing the pitiful display of human folly, in making a spectacle of themselves for the delectation of small boys and curious women.

It has been conceded that a fondness for dress and ornament belonged to the weaker sex; and that it was inherent in her nature as the conservator of beauty; and that it was equally God-given that strength and courage and solidity should belong to man. But like climatic changes, for which we can give no reason, men and women seem to be changing places. Among other recent events, "The Woman's Congress" has held its anniversary in our goodly city; and while earnest women, with solemn dignity and in modest apparel, were discussing grave questions of deepest interest in an orderly, womanly fashion, there was also a convention of Odd-fellows. What they discussed, alas! we do not know; but they might have made a school-girl envious by their display of millinery. Such plumes as were toyed with by the breezes! Such sashes as gracefully encircled their rotund forms! And such glittering ornaments to dazzle the beholder as they were kindly exhibited without charge on the public street! If the time consumed in these constantly recurring conventions was put to a better use, families and communities would surely be better off.

To a thoughtful person this intense activity among all the secret orders is alarming, and bodes no good to the Republic, and is a standing menace to the church of God. And if the church was true, and her members loyal to the Lord Jesus Christ, we might have less dread of the outcome of all this. But this secret power has invaded the pulpit, and men come to their prayer meetings with odors of the "mystic shrine" upon them; and leading members of secret orders are prominent in church circles, too! If only the senior editor of the Cynosure could give one of his rousing lectures here, and tell what he knows about the Secret Empire, it might do good. But I doubt if a church or theater could be secured for the purpose. No class in this community is exempt. It reaches the church, the jury, the bar, and possibly the bench; and it seems as if the time might be coming to us, as to Israel, when only seven thousand men could be found who had not bowed the knee to Baal, or who had not received the mark of the beast in his forehead or in his right hand, signifying that brain and muscle had been surrendered to a power not of God; and the time may be nearer than we think when no man may buy or sell unless he has "the name of the beast or the number of his name" upon him.

Denver, Colo.

SECRET SOCIETIES UNNECESSARY AND SINFUL.

FROM AN ADDRESS BEFORE THE IOWA CONVENTION,
BY REV. DAVID M'KEE, OF CLARINDA, IOWA.

We propose an examination of these societies, based on the testimony of both friends and enemies, and show that their secrecy is not necessary, but really damaging to the ends they propose to accomplish.

Sickels, quoting from Preston, says Freemasonry is established "with the praiseworthy design of recalling to our mind the most sublime truths in the midst of the most innocent social pleasures, founded on liberality, brotherly love and charity." The object proposed to be gained by Odd-fellowship is "Benevolence, Brotherly Love and Charity." The Knights of Pythias take as their motto, "Friendship, Charity and Benevolence." We give these as a sample of the objects proposed by secret societies generally. The object published to the world is usually one that is laudable in its character, and has no need of the veil of secrecy to conceal it, under the obligation of the most solemn promises, and in many cases the most horrible oaths that diabolical ingenuity can frame. It seems to outsiders a strange way to cultivate the spirit of liberality, by confining it to those who are never likely to need its exercise, and excluding all the helpless who are likely at any time to need aid. If the ostensible objects are not the real objects of these societies, they are acting the part of pirates on the great sea of human life, by holding out false colors to allure the unsuspecting, and deprive them of their liberty.

But even if we admit that the ostensible objects are the real ones, there is much that is objectionable.

1. Their manner of admitting members.

We assume here that the revelations made by those who have seceded from these societies are true. The modes of initiation, in certain of these societies, degrade the individual, strip him of his manhood, and bind him, by the most degrading promises or horrible oaths, to obey laws and keep secrets that he knows nothing about. This is directly contrary to the Scripture form of an oath. The divine command is: "Thou shalt swear, the Lord liveth in judgment, and in righteousness, and truth." That is, Thou shalt swear intelligently and truthfully in regard to what is right and proper to be performed.

I thought that Masonry had gone as far as it was possible for men to go in degrading initiatory rites, but had to own the mistake when reading the amplified ritual of the "Third Rank of the Knights of Pythias." There the king in the council of ten informs the candidate, Esquire John Brown, that he cannot now retreat; bids the Sergeant-at-arms deliver him to Pluto (the devil) to be tested whether he is fit to be admitted to the order of knighthood in the Third Rank. When the Sergeant-at-arms obeys the command he addresses Pluto as "Imperial Prince." In reading the title I could not help exclaiming, "You are right once, Mr. Sergeant-at-arms. No other imperial prince than Pluto would ever have taught you such diabolical nonsense."

Suppose the church should employ such methods in receiving members; or the State in naturalizing citizens! All sober-minded men would cry out, "Shame!" Compare the oath and the mode of the induction of a Grand Master of a lodge with the oath and manner of the inauguration of the President of the United States, and note the contrast. Had the Chief Justice put President Harrison in his induction into office through the same forms by which the master of a lodge is inducted in his office, his conduct would have astonished the nation. We believe Masons themselves would have objected. Is the office of master of a lodge of more importance than the President of the United States?

2. Their selfishness.

I have already referred to one of these institutions, namely Masonry, as excluding women and all men who are not able-bodied, or are ever likely to need aid. It may be said that Odd-fellowship is not liable to the same objection. It confers the degree of Daughters of Rebecca on women. But the degree of Rebecca is not Odd-fellowship. Donaldson, in his Odd-fellows' Text Book (p. 418), says that Odd-fellowship is a secret society for gentlemen only. Again he writes, p. 214: "The simple truth is this: 'Woman is not entitled to, and seeks not a place amongst us. Our institution was originally intended and framed exclusively for men, and the various modifications it has undergone has not adapted it to the other sex. They could not with propriety, in conformity with the usages of the world, take part in our private assemblies without exposing themselves to the censoriousness of the age.'"

But why, Mr. Donaldson, if the aim of your association is to promote liberality, charity and brotherly love; why would woman's presence in such a work expose them to the censoriousness of the age? This is the very work which, as you say, in substance, in the charge given by the Noble Grand, they are especially adapted to perform.

The true reasons of instituting the degree are given by Mr. Colfax in Donaldson's Pocket Text Book, p. 410: (1) It will tend to increase the resources of subordinate lodges, by the advance of members in the degree. (2) It affords an additional incentive for brethren, and an additional argument for those allied to them, to induce them to progress upward in the order. (3) It will lessen, and ultimately destroy, the prejudice felt against the order by many of the fairer sex in various portions of the Union; and which, undeniably, often tends to prevent accessions to subordinate lodges. (4) It can be made to assist Odd-fellowship in peculiar cases of brothers' sickness; in many such the kindly nursing of woman is needed, assiduous and constant attendance of men.

Now analyze these reasons, and what do they amount to. The sum of them is this: (1) They will use their influence with their husbands to take the higher degrees, and that will increase our funds by their initiation. (2) It will keep our wives from reading us certain lectures for staying out at night by giving them the assurance that when we have taken the fifth degree they can be admitted to a kind of an "Annex" in Odd-fellowship, in which we and they can meet together. But they must not be so foolish as to imagine they have become true Odd-fellows. That is a sublime order for only gentlemen. (4) It will obtain their aid in doing the more unpleasant work of nursing Odd-fellows when they are sick.

3. Their religious forms.

Secret societies, generally, observe some form of religion. The higher orders claim to observe the forms of a universal religion which is common to all men, Jew, Christian and pagan; and, judging from the praise they ascribe to it in their writings, they hold it to be superior to even the Christian religion. They have their confession of faith, their form of worship, their prayers and hymns, high priests and chaplains who conduct their devotions and preach the gospel of their order. In the higher orders of secrecy the religion is Christless. It must necessarily be so. I have examined the prayers of Masons, Odd-fellows and the Knights of Pythias, and do not find the name "Christ" in any of them.

Now, certainly, if ever men need the mediation of Christ, it is when addressing God in prayer. Jesus says, "No man cometh to the Father but by me." How professing Christians, for the sake of enjoying the fellowship of Jews, Mohammedans and pagans, can reject Christ, the only way of access to God as a Father, is to the truly pious mind a "mystery greater than any their orders contain."

It is the boast of secret societies that men of different nationalities and faiths can all meet harmoniously around the same council board. The Patriarchal degree of the Golden Rule in Odd-fellowship is designed to illustrate and enforce this lesson. In the initiation of a candidate the members are dressed in costumes representing the different nationalities and faiths of the world. The Patriarch declares, "Let our brother feel that a code obtains here which tramples on human prejudices, and asserts the high birthright of humanity." The candidate, in assuming the obligation, is assured that it contains nothing that shall conflict with his religion or his politics. But the first lesson read from the "book of law" is part of the 20th chapter of Exodus. The Grand Patriarch reads: "I am the Lord, thy God, which have brought thee out of the land of Egypt; out of the house of bondage." Stop, says the European, that interferes with my nationality. It applies to that Jew, but, my ancestors were never in bondage in Egypt.

Patriarch proceeds: "Thou shalt have no other gods before me." You astonish me, says the Pariah of India; you promised not to interfere with my religion. My ancestors worshiped Brahma and Krishna and a number of other gods. I do the same, and will do so in the future as I do now.

Patriarch reads on: "Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord, thy God, in vain." Response from the whole lodge: We have profaned that name, the name of God, by every promise and oath we took, and we propose to continue the practice.

Patriarch reads again: "Remember the Sabbath," etc. "The seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord, thy God." Right, says the Jew, that is my faith. You are infringing on my religion, exclaims the Musselman, I keep Friday for the Sabbath. The Christian says, It interferes with mine. I keep the first day of the week.

Patriarch continues reading: "Honor thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee." This interferes with my politics, says the Musselman. I possess the land of Canaan, and now you are teaching that Jew that the land is his.

Patriarch again reads: "Thou shalt not kill." Mohammedan says, You are interfering with my religion again. It teaches me that the slaughter of infidels is a meritorious act. You don't mean to contradict the Prophet himself.

Patriarch: "Thou shalt not commit adultery." Musselman: Such teaching cannot any longer be endured. No man is a good Musselman that has not at least four wives.

What a harmonious assembly! The only man who can sit silent and say his religion is not interfered with is the infidel, and that for the simple reason he has none to be interfered with. It would be impossible for any lodge to be composed of all nationalities and forms of religion to conduct a single meeting and not interfere with the convictions of its members.

A HISTORY-MAKING DECISION.

The decision of Judge Anderson in the matter of Moore and others who sought admission to the rights of citizenship through the process of naturalization marks an epoch in history. Its effects may be hardly less potent than were those of the famous Dred Scott case. Moore and others are aliens; they also are Mormons who have passed through the rites of the Endowment house; they wished to be admitted to citizenship. But the District Attorney interposed an objection; he urged that the applicants were unfit for citizenship because they had covenanted allegiance to a church, the hierarchs of which teach that they are "God's vicegerents on earth, and having power to bind and to loose," and, therefore, any law or constitution framed by any human power must be accepted or rejected as it meets with the approval or disapproval of these "God's vicegerents." And in support of this broad allegation the District Attorney offered to prove certain facts, which facts the Court holds to have been proven, and upon proof of which it refuses naturalization to the applicants, and makes a ruling under the terms of which no man in full accord with the faith of Mormon ever can be naturalized.

The facts proven by a vast preponderance of evidence, many witnesses affirming them, several declining to testify as to their knowledge of them, and very few denying their existence, are these:

That the rites of the Endowment house are obligatory on Mormons. As much so as yearly confession and communion are upon Catholics, or as baptism is upon Episcopalians.

That a part of such rites consists of an oath to obey the priesthood in all things, temporal and spiritual.

That the penalty prescribed for disobedience or for disclosure of the secrets of the Endowment house is that the offender "shall have his or her throat cut from ear to ear, his or her heart torn out, and his or her bowels cut out."

That after taking such oath of allegiance and hearing the penalty for its violation, the person initiated is given a peculiar garment, which, or the like of it, is to be worn as long as he or she lives. This garment has certain marks near to the heart and bowels, which marks are to serve as perpetual reminders of the oath and the penalty.

That the neophyte is taught that it is the duty of all members of the church to "avenge the blood of the saints and prophets," that of Joseph and Hiram Smith being included, and to impress this duty upon "his children and his children's children unto the third and fourth generation."

That this teaching is emphasized by the act of "anointing the right arm, that it may be strong to avenge."

That the doctrine of "blood atonement" is taught to the neophyte, and also is expounded and maintained in the writings and sermons of the dead and living hierarchs of the church. The doctrine of "blood atonement" is this: If a member of the Mormon church apostatize, betray its secret, or disobey the priesthood, he will go to an eternal hell, unless some member in good standing save the soul of the erring brother by slaying his body. It is taught to the neophyte that he should be zealous in performing the rite of "blood atonement," upon command of the priesthood, of course.

Incidentally it was proven that men had been slain as victims to the doctrine of "blood atonement." That from Brigham Young, the first, to Wilford Woodruff, the last, president of the church, all its rulers had asserted the supremacy of the church in matters temporal and spiritual. That the members of the church as a body have obstructed the operation of the laws and Constitution of the United States, and the minority of members who are loyal at heart have been and are intimidated by the disloyal majority. Wherefore, the Court has ruled against the admission of alien Mormons to the rights of citizenship.

It is a very far-reaching decision. If sustained, as doubtless it will be, by the Supreme Court of the United States, it will make an end of Mormonism as a political power, for the increase of that body by births is not remarkable. It is upon immigration that its growth mainly depends. But it reaches beyond Mormonism. It prevents any alien member of any lodge, league, clan or order in which illegal oaths are required from the rights of naturalization. No alien who adopts the Mormon doctrine of "blood atonement," to the murderous removal of some "British spy;" no alien who is the slave of a despot domiciled in America, at whose command he foolishly and wickedly will go abroad to murder the persons or destroy the property of a nation with which this country is at peace; no person holding allegiance to any power, foreign or domestic, whose commands are not perfectly in accord with each and every provision of the laws and Constitution of the United States, is eligible to citizenship under the broad and righteous ruling of Judge Anderson, of Utah.—Inter Ocean.

LET CATHOLICS STUDY FREEMASONRY.

The following significant paragraphs lead the editorials in the Catholic Review of the 28th ult. With its politic and guarded expressions respecting the Masonic lodge, the Review is yet mindful of the traditions of the church which have so long been hostile to the order. The suggestion that the principles of Masonry be made a subject of careful study is good. Many Protestants might profit by it. At least a candid study would conduce to the enlightenment of the student respecting the real principles of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, which the lodge antagonizes by its pagan generalizations. The Review says:

"It is perhaps hardly worth while discussing the rumors concerning the church and the American Freemasons. It is not even necessary to give a denial to the assertion that penalties for joining or belonging to that secret society are to be removed. But we take this occasion to caution our enthusiastic brethren as to their utterances in favor of Freemasonry. We all know that in America it is not the diabolical society which it is in Europe, and we feel certain it never will be of that character. Christians of all sects belong to it and give it a good share of their steady nature. But it should not be forgotten that in its nature it is utterly opposed to the spirit of American institutions. We do not need secret, oath-bound societies for any purpose. The society of Freemasons in America has won its popularity among the common people by its steady assertion of large power in all departments of official and social life. It had that power once in some degree. We do not know but that it possesses it still. It was an unhealthy and dangerous influence in American society, and as that society becomes mature it will naturally cast off such influences and destroy them. The dilemma in which Masonry stands at the present moment is very pretty. Either it is what it claims to be, and is therefore a dangerous and unlawful influence in society, or it is purely ornamental and should be done away with.

"At present the curious side of American Freemasonry is its resemblance to a religious sect. It has its religious ritual for solemn occasions, its vestments, and its profession of faith. It seems to profess a misty deism, and in order to make itself understood by all classes of Christians takes the crucified Christ for one of its symbols and the Blessed Mother of God for another. It holds itself in religious matters as on a level with Christianity, which it regards as a force of the same beneficent nature as itself, only not so universal. It has claimed again and again three of the marks which belong to Catholicity, and in order to counteract the effect of an apostolic origin, it dates its existence from the building of Solomon's Temple. The gentlemen who seem anxious to give the order of Freemasons a footing among Catholics are evidently biting off much more than they can chew. Who are they, anyhow? Are they simply testing public feeling by hinting at what might be if the world were very, very good? Or are they bidding for the political support of Freemasonry? So far they have not ventured to show themselves, and have left us wondering as to their possible character. It is, however, evident that a good and careful study of American Freemasonry is now necessary if we are to save ourselves from much immediate and future trouble. The publisher who will give us such a study, exhaustive and yet popular, by a competent man, will deserve well of his country and his Catholic brethren."

THE-G. A. R. DRAWS THE COLOR LINE.—The name of an entirely worthy and respectable colored veteran, who applied for membership in the Nathaniel Lyon Post, G. A. R., in Connecticut, has been withdrawn on account of opposition which made his rejection certain, and which was based entirely on his color. This organization of patriots, which claims so much credit for establishing the cause of freedom and equal rights that a third of the revenues of the Government is not sufficient to pay the debt of gratitude, is not willing to recognize the claims of a colored veteran to an equal footing in its ranks with those with whom he fought. A newly-organized local post in the District of Columbia has also refused to admit colored men to membership. In striking contrast with this spirit is that shown by the senior class in our oldest and greatest institution of learning, which is sometimes accused of exclusiveness and an aristocratic tendency. The Harvard seniors have just chosen as their class-day orator for next June one of the two colored members of the class, simply because he has exhibited more talent for oratory than any other member. The young man is not only a Negro and the son of a former-slave in the District of Columbia, but a son of toil and poverty, who in his struggle for an education has worked at times in a barber's shop. He is treated by his class not only as an equal, but in respect of one exceptional talent as its best man, and it has bestowed upon him the highest honor in its gift. It is a credit to the class and a forcible answer to a false charge respecting the spirit that prevails in the venerable university at Cambridge.—New York Times.

The world is taking object lessons, long to be remembered, both from the secretism of the Mormon church and the Clan-na-Gael secret oath-bound organization. People who are too deaf to hear and to blind to see what evil there is in secret societies will do well to investigate the cumulative evidence being brought to light, both in Chicago and Salt Lake City, against these evil combinations of men of which Paul in his epistle to the Ephesians, chap. 5, verse 11, warns all Christians, where he by divine authority commands them, "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them." Of course Paul was an ignoramus and did not know half as much about the charity, benevolence and other good things in secret organizations, as the Mormons, the members of the Clan-na-Gael secret order, and Masons, Odd-fellows, etc., do; but still there are a few who have not bowed their knee to the Baal of lodge idolatry, and can be relied on in the present day to follow the inspired injunction just quoted from that unpopular old book, called the New Testament.—Sandy Lake News.

"Bible games, suitable for children on Sunday afternoons," may be very attractive, but are certainly not in the line of the Fourth Commandment. "The Sabbath is to be sanctified by a holy resting all that day, even from such worldly employment and recreations as are lawful on other days," and without provision for games, even though they have a religious label attached to them. One of the main uses of Sabbath education is to teach children reverence. The day is holy; let it therefore be observed in a way becoming such a character, the children being taught to see something in it of the majestic kindness that is in Him who has appointed it. And that will not likely be by the use of plays and other diversions.—United Presbyterian.

No more specious falsehood was ever put upon the theological market than that the voice of God in Scripture is obscured by the individuality of the writers. It was in order that God might most perfectly reveal himself that he chose a varied human individuality as his method. We need but to look into nature to see that all his methods are absolutely perfect.

Other qualities have in a measure set spirituality in the back-ground. Intellectual brilliancy and flash, eloquence, "hustling," after the manner of the world, have too largely taken the place of the beauty of holiness as factors in our church life.—Christian Standard.

SECRECY AS A BASIS OF ORGANIZATION.

ADDRESS OF REV. O. P. GIFFORD, PASTOR OF WARREN AVE. BAPTIST CHURCH, BOSTON.

Some years since there was living in a pleasant New England town a family with a number of children, and as is often the case in such circumstances the doctor was a frequent visitor at the home. Indeed, this family was afflicted in many ways, and the mother and the doctor had a hard fight with death and disease. The oldest daughter was weak in the joints, the boy was bow-legged and chicken-breasted, and diphtheria and fevers wrestled to throw one and another into the grave. The doctor insisted that the house was wrong and must be examined, and beginning at the bottom to be sure of thorough work, he found a sewer pipe broken. Malaria had been the weapon of death smiting the household, and nothing but the faith and heroic devotion of the mother had warded off the fatal stroke. The disease was manifested in many ways, but there was but one pipe broken, and so but one source of disease.

We have all seen strange manifestations of disease in public life, an unaccountable breaking down on the part of civil officers. A blight falls on our public school system, public funds disappear, courts are open doors for the escape of men steeped in crime, a Morgan disappears, a Cronin is murdered. We inquire into the cause of these perplexing manifestations. We go down into the cellar, so to speak, of public morality, and find the pestilential cause to be ORGANIZED SECRECY.

Societies organized on the basis of secret obligations are the cause of our social undermining, weakening the force of public morals, striking in the dark at our home life. Catholic orders, Freemasons, the Clan-na-Gael and a great multitude of other organizations have in common the secret society basis, and may be classified together and discussed as parts of one system.

A Scotch Mason in giving the pedigree of his order calls it the "mother" of secret organizations. It is held to be older than any of the rest. It has, in fact, an Egyptian ancestry. It is pagan in its birthright. It is Christian in its christening. But the christening has not spoiled the paganism. They tell us that the pagan virus has been taken out of the old mysteries and philosophy since they have been adopted by this secret order. But not so. It is pagan in its origin; devilish in its principles; and

There may be times when secret organizations may be needed, but only as temporary expedients. In the exceptional times of war; or when patriots are struggling to throw off a despot's yoke, as when a Russian autocrat chokes every breath of freedom, men may pledge themselves to secrecy for the time being. But never in such a state of society as ours. In our free American Republic there is no need for secret societies, no more than Christ had need of them, who at his last trial said, "In secret have I said nothing." In the dark ages, when tyrants were to be opposed, such societies might have an apology. In Russia, where military despotism rules; in France, when infidelity was seated in the places of power, secrecy had its place in securing a new and better order of affairs. But in a government like ours, where purity in public morals is extolled, and popular freedom is in all the air, there is no need of secret lodges at all in our borders. When there are no more secret societies with us to antagonize the churches of Jesus Christ, to proclaim their false basis of morality, and nullify the Ten Commandments, we shall be, as we claim to be, a Christian nation.

I do not know what men can need of a secret society more than they have in their own peaceful homes. The family, with its natural and comely private relations, is secret society enough for me. I do not find it necessary to go outside the number made up of my wife and myself, and vow life-long secrecy with other men; and, perhaps, with men of whom the idea of giving them a familiar place in my home circle would be abhorrent to decency. And there must of necessity be a sundering of the most sacred ties given to us as men, when the hand is raised to pledge secrecy with strangers.

There are some very obvious reasons why secret organizations are wrong and should be opposed. A secret is something that needs keeping—a treasure that needs guarding. But a man joins a secret society under the disadvantage of not knowing what these secrets are that are to be kept, what is the character of the treasure to be guarded. It may be something dangerous, something incompatible with public safety and private honor. The time may come when such secrets should be divulged. What shall then be done with the oath of perpetual secrecy? If these lodges have any wisdom, any good that the world needs, no man should keep it secret. No man has a right to hide his light under a bushel. Light is what the world needs. He who has it must give it. A Freemason, a Clan-na-Gael, a Roman Catholic priest may hide his light under a bushel;

BUT NO MAN MAY.

The whole genius of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ is out and out. It is to be open; to freely impart your good to men; to conceal nothing that men need. It is organized antagonism to the Gospel for men to hold their good away from their fellows. If the secret societies have any valuable thing they are keeping from the world, they are under condemnation of the Word of God. I don't believe they have any secret worth keeping. I have no doubt that even their goat is a stuffed goat.

It may be said that there is reason for secret societies in sociability; that the relations of men as companions demands them. But that means that their privileges are for the few instead of the whole. That is selfishness, and so is utterly un-Christian. This kind of classification of men is a great evil. It begets the caste spirit, and that very thing is already one of our most difficult social problems. Men have too much of it. We need rather to be more sympathetic, more caring one for another, aiding the brother to his feet who has been rudely jostled down. A great part of our labor problem is just here. If instead of forming exclusive agencies the weight of human intellect had been thrown in toward aiding the needs of men, there would be no need of secret societies. The best work of man's genius and of his heart should be to help his fellow-man. The lodges make the excuse that the churches do not do their work; that they are not helpful and charitable; and these organizations are needed to make up for the defect. That is not true. Who opens our free dispensaries and hospitals? Who goes in the van of civilization to open the dark regions of the earth; and when by disease or savage men one line falls, and another, and another, who sends in volunteers to fill the ranks? We may not do our whole duty; but because we, as Christians, have neglected any part of our work, that is no reason, no authority for others to form secret societies to profess to perform such work. To watch with the sick; to help the poor and the unfortunate is a good work; why curse it with the cross-bones and skulls of a secret society. There never was a thing that was right but could be given to the open day. It is the introduction of the devil's principles into Christ's pure Gospel when secret societies are organized to do his work.

It is urged also that men may organize to meet an enemy with secret warfare when they cannot hope to overcome him openly. On this ground the Freemasons and other societies claim that they have the best means of fighting the Roman Catholics. But it is better to fight fire with water than to fight it with fire. It is better to fight these moral battles for the salvation of the church and the government in the light of the Gospel, openly in the day, than by secret cabals meeting like owls or bats, as if the measures to be put in effect were too dishonorable to be examined in the daylight. These systems of iniquity and despotism, which it is so pretended we must meet, are not to be overcome with weapons borrowed from the devil. They shall be withered and blasted by a revelation breaking from the all-conquering Word of God, and not by a paltry secret which men have to swear themselves to keep.

If you are going to plow a field you must not always be dodging about among stumps. It will not pay. You must drive a straight furrow from side to side. Get your dynamite and blow those stumps out of your way. Neither can you begin to turn under these lodges and leave any to one side of the furrow. You cannot fight organized secrecy in one name and tolerate it under another name. Such a policy is worse than dodging stumps. You must clean the field and give way for the plough-share and the straight furrow of the truth. To condemn one society or order and apologize for another is illogical; it is suicidal to your argument. The same principle binds them together in one bundle, and thus they will be bound in the judgment day.

The multitude of secret societies is something wonderful. It would be easier to take the census of the frogs in Egypt, or the lice on the persons of Pharaoh's people. We have lodges for "benevolence," for "temperance," for "insurance," for "social intercourse," for "brotherhood," for war on Catholicism and to promote Catholicism. In the Catholic Congress held a few days ago in Baltimore there were Knights of this and Knights of that almost without number. They had one condition of membership. They had to swear allegiance to that trembling old man in Rome. We cannot successfully combat these secret leagues controlled by the Jesuits until Protestants are willing to give up their secret organizations and take their stand beside the open Bible and the outspread Constitution of the United States. They must be willing to dissolve their secret societies in the cup of patriotism. They cannot say to the Romanist, Give up your societies, but I must keep mine.

We must not allow the traditions of former generations to darken our counsel, or dim our clear apprehension of the truth. Don't say, My father, or grandfather, or uncle belonged to a secret order, and therefore they must be all right. My father was an Odd-fellow; and if his son was not a better man than he, I might have been an Odd-fellow, too, or a member of some secret society. But we must hold to the principle of progression in ideas, more light from age to age on moral questions. We ought to know better than our parents could the character of these organizations. We ought to maintain that each generation should be better than the one before; and not forever take their failings for our examples. And we must make a clear distinction in this matter between the members and the society. It is not the men but the system that underlies their organization which we must oppose. It is this lodge principle which exalts the secret society oath above the obligations of common morality and honor,—which virtually puts the society in the place of God's revelation—this we cannot too strenuously oppose. I have talked with lawyers again and again who have told me how they have observed this lodge obligation magnified into greater importance than any other. If a liquor-dealer be a Mason, one Mason on the jury will hang the case every time. If they can get one Mason on the jury they can rely on preventing any conviction. One man of twelve can decide in the jury box against justice.

The only way to overcome the operation of this unjust and destructive system is an appeal to principle that shall tingle in every ear and arouse the dormant conscience of the people. We must show men how contrary is this system to that revealed for the regulation of mankind in the Word of God. We must bring about a separation of the church from this evil. When Christian men come out from the lodges they will collapse, as when the bones are drawn out of the human frame. And we must not make any exception. They tell us to spare this or that secret order, but it will not do. They are all organized on a false basis of morality, and our eye must not spare, any more than did Samuel when he slew Agag. We must smite this false image and set free the consciences of our fellow-men which are blindly grinding at the mill of secret ceremonies as was Samson in the Philistine prison house.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13, 1889.

The new Speaker of the new Congress is commended on every side for his remarkable industry. He was elected a little over a week ago, and before the expiration of a week he had announced five of the more important House committees. Such progress is not only unusual but surprising, and goes to show that Mr. Reed proposes to make the Fifty-first Congress, so far as lies in his power, one of business and real work. In the past, Congress has not thought of settling down to public business until after the holidays. Indeed, seldom have the committees been announced until just before the adjournment for the holiday recess. But by this prompt action the practical work of the session, in some of its branches, will begin immediately.

The sensation of the week in Washington was the recent defalcation of Silcott, the trusted secretary of the ex-Sergeant-at-Arms of the House. As the $80,000 stolen by Silcott was drawn by him from the Treasury for paying the salaries of Congressmen, the consequent loss and inconvenience to many Congressmen have been engrossing questions at the Capitol since the exposure of the robbery. It is not yet known whether members can recover their missing salaries. The Congressional investigation of the case just ended leaves it to the House to decide where the loss shall fall; whether on the individual members, or on the government.

On Wednesday last both Houses of Congress took a holiday in order to attend in the Hall of the House (where all official ceremonies are held, because it is so much larger than the Senate Chamber) the exercises commemorative of the centennial celebration of the inauguration of George Washington. The program was very simple. There was music, a prayer by the Chaplain of the Senate, an address by Chief Justice Fuller, of the Supreme Court, and the benediction by the Chaplain of the House. The exercises were attended by the President and Cabinet, the Supreme Court, the Diplomatic Corps, delegates to the Pan-American and International Marine Conferences now in session in the city, and the principal officers of the government. Ceremonies of this kind in Washington must necessarily be of an official character, and admittance is only by card. There is no hall in the world, I may say, that could accommodate half of the crowd that would attend on such occasions, were they open to the public. Exclusive assemblies are not in keeping with our republican institutions; but for the reason mentioned above they are unavoidable here when the ceremonial must take place indoors.

Temperance workers and retail liquor dealers have both been watching the action of the city commissioners in a certain test case which came up yesterday, regarding the enforcement of a proposed rule limiting the number of liquor saloons to four in a block. The case on which the question was raised was that of a man who had applied for a license in a block where licenses had already been granted to four saloons. A majority of the commissioners revoked the proposed "four in a block" rule by granting licenses for a fifth. It was two against one, the two holding that to refuse a man license simply because four had already been issued for the same square, would be taking a more arbitrary stand than they were authorized to do.

Congressman Pickler, from the new State of South Dakota, made a temperance address last Sabbath at the Congregational church. He mentioned that the Dakotas were the first two States to enter the Union with prohibition in their constitutions. He stated further that the people of those two States were in earnest in their attempt to show that prohibition does prohibit.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE ARKANSAS CAPITAL.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Dec. 9, 1889.

On the morning of the 30th ult. I left Memphis, taking the Little Rock train, which was transferred to the Arkansas shore on a huge ferry-boat. We passed through a large amount of unbroken woodland, interspersed with frequent fields of cotton and corn, and I noticed that the land was flooded in many places from the rains. Little Rock is a city of some 30,000 inhabitants, pretty well scattered, with a large percentage of colored population. There are large common and graded schools, and well-manned colleges for both nationalities; and a vigorous Congregational church, sustained, apparently, by business men.

On Sabbath evening I addressed the congregation assembling at the corner of State and Fourteenth streets, on the reforms of the N. C. A., which was well received, as an interlude before the sermon. The Zion M. E. Conference, in session in the city, had the pulpit for that night. On Monday I called on Pres. Thos. Mason, of the "Philander Smith College," who took me through the departments. I found the Carpenter library well placed and cared for among the books in the reading-room. This institution is large and finely located, with a full corps of teachers whose salaries are paid by the Northern Methodist church, and they are doing a very important work for the freedmen. On Friday morning I lectured before the faculty and students on Temperance and Secretism.

I also visited the Little Rock University, which is an M. E. institution for the education of the white youth in the South. Prof. Bates showed me their library, and I made arrangements to donate to them our five-dollar gift of anti-secrecy books. This university has fine buildings located on beautiful grounds on the north side of Lincoln avenue, and appears to be well sustained. At the invitation of Rev. Joseph A. Booker, president of the Arkansas Baptist College, I preached in the Zion Baptist church, of which he is pastor, on the work of the N. C. Association, Wednesday evening, and lectured before the students on Friday afternoon at the close of the rhetorical exercises. This college is worthy of notice as a very important Christian development. It is the work of the colored people—of the Arkansas Mission Baptist Convention. They have an efficient faculty and a large number of pupils, and one branch of industrial training, i. e., printing. They do the work on a weekly paper called the Baptist Vanguard. But they still occupy rented buildings, although they own a fine lot and have erected a large frame for a college building, which has but little covering as yet, and the work proceeds slowly for lack of means. Where is the Lord's servant, who has a talent or two in his possession, who would like to put a roof on this building, and help to finish to forward the Christian education of this people? The Master would say, I think, to such a one, "Well done, good and faithful servant."

Yesterday I preached in the African Congregational church, and introduced the topics of our reform in my sermon, which seemed to be well received. At 3 P. M. I preached in a Baptist church whose pastor is Prof. Keith, vice-president of the Arkansas Baptist College, and there were many in the crowd who were evidently opposed to intemperance and secretism. So I desire "to thank God and take courage." SAMUEL F. PORTER.

CHEER FOR PHILADELPHIA.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 12, 1889. }

DEAR CYNOSURE:—While lovers of light are gathering in the "Hub" city, the city of "Brotherly Love" is taking advance steps against the secret invaders. Many of the "Sunday" and daily papers are pouring forth their spawn of murders, prize-fights and filth of various kinds, exciting appetites and passions of the unregenerate, thus callousing the conscience, and so destroying the finer feelings of many that they can consider with complacency lodge murders, and read without a shudder the terrible revelations of the Endowment House. Yet, thank God, there are those who have pure minds, whose love for Christ and his kingdom impels to greater exertion as they know of these sickening and terrible realities. My meetings here confirm this belief. Since coming to this city there has scarce been an hour of the day or evening when important visitations and meetings have not taxed my utmost exertion. The Lord has opened one door after another.

The union meeting referred to in my last was held on Sabbath evening in Rev. J. C. McFeeter's (Reformed Presbyterian) church, instead of as expected when I wrote. There were on the platform at this meeting Dr. Stevenson, Dr. Steele and Dr. Barr, the first two being pastors of large Reformed Presbyterian churches, the latter pastor of the Eight United Presbyterian church, and associate editor of the Christian Instructor. All took part in the service, and expressed approbation of the manner in which the subject was presented, one giving a contribution to our cause. I scarcely need add that this meeting was a success; the co-operation of these pastors would insure this.

I have not held a meeting for some time where more enthusiasm was manifest than that of Tuesday evening at Chester, Pa. I there addressed over two hundred people who gathered at the request of their pastor, Rev. J. Trumbauer. Notwithstanding most of his people are poor, they did what they could for our cause, and gave a unanimous rising vote requesting me to return and speak further, which I have agreed to do on next Tuesday evening. A number testified to the Lord's delivering them from various lodges. One young man expected soon to join, but said now he should not. One man was sure the love of God was in his heart, but he could see nothing wrong in the secret society to which he belonged. It was called "the Red Men." He was a white man. I think his conscience was convicting him, and that he will come out all right.

Rev. P. J. O. Cornell, pastor of the Swedish Lutheran church, Augustana Synod, will consult his vestry Sabbath morning in reference to a union meeting of the Swedish churches on Thursday evening next. As pastor Cornell is favorable to it, I think it will be arranged.

The pastor of the Mennonite New School church has promised to try and get a hearing before his people at a future date, but is full of meetings now.

Word has just come from Rev. R. C. Montgomery, of the Kensington Reformed Presbyterian church, that his elders are "willing and anxious" that I address his people next Sabbath evening. So the Lord is leading on in Philadelphia.

There are several of the friends who subscribed with me for the Cynosure months since who were to have forwarded the money for their subscriptions before this. Why they have been detained I do not know. I trust all who know themselves thus indebted to me will remit at once, and thus save me all embarrassment in the matter. One subscription appears like a little matter, and is sometimes easily forgotten, but it is the ones that make up the many. Send to Washington address, 215 4½ street, N. W. Yours for Christ and reform,

W. B. STODDARD.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A WONDERFUL LETTER FROM SOUTH AFRICA.

THE POWER AND GRACE OF GOD IN HIS BELIEVING MESSENGERS.

JOHANNESBURG, I. A. R., Oct. 28, 1889.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Seeing an article in your paper on the subject of "Volunteers wanted for India;" and "Who will go and who will send?" my soul was stirred within me, as I was brought back to the time, years ago, when these questions came home to me personally. How often have I answered the first by calling out from the depths of my heart, "Lord, here am I, send me, send me." Sometimes when coming home from missionary meetings, I would enter my room, and for an hour lay agonizing with God to allow me to be one of the chosen ones to be sent out to foreign shores, to bring the tidings of great joy and salvation.

For more than ten years I waited and prayed, and the Lord gave me a husband with the same desire. We waited to be sent, but waited in vain. Together we labored in two congregations, but our hearts were longing for the time when we could go to larger fields.

One day my husband attended a meeting at Dr. Palmer's in New York city, and there heard Rev. William Taylor give a description of his faith work, and tell how many missionaries he had already working under him in different parts of the globe. From this time we felt the Lord called us to take a bold step, and trusting in his promises alone, to go and work for him.

Now, my dear friends, if any read this who have a heart burning with love to souls, longing to be sent, and feel called to work on foreign fields, where the harvest is so great and the laborers few, allow me to encourage you, my brother, my sister. Cast yourself on the promises of Jesus (Luke 10). Oh, it is so safe to trust Jesus! Remember, he is not changed. He still sends forth his disciples, as he did when here on earth. He still bids them go forth, preach the Gospel, heal the sick. "Freely ye have received, freely give." Praise, glory to this Jesus, our mighty Saviour! We can testify to his faithfulness in performing what he has promised, never to leave, never to forsake us, for he says, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

We can speak from experience, and this induces me to answer to this article. We left our beloved country, with all those dear unto us, now nearly ten years ago, with just enough means to reach South Africa, having only a few dollars left, but rich in our Master's promises, and no other promises of support whatever. For three years we labored in Cape Town, mostly among the Mohammedans; and at times our faith was most severely tried. And here I would say to all who read this, that no one need undertake this life and work who does not expect trials and temptations.

This article would become too long should I enter into details how much the enemy tried in various ways to bring us from our purpose; but by the grace of God we conquered and have overcome. It was while working among the Mohammedans that we learned to know Jesus as the healer of the body as well as the soul, and which power we believe should now be still exercised by missionaries. It was our custom to give these people medicine when sick, trying by this means to obtain a greater influence over them. But while studying the Word we saw a better way, that which the Saviour himself gave the disciples and ordained for all his followers, as we believe. So after this, when they came to us in sickness, we asked in the name of this same Jesus, whom we preached as our Redeemer, to take away their diseases and heal them; and glorious results followed. The Holy Spirit, who does this work, often melted the heart while we were praying for their healing, so that tears were shed, and souls felt the power divine. Jesus did heal them and received the glory, and often sinners were saved.

I can never express the glory that filled my heart when the light came to us that Jesus would still give this power to those that labored for him. Oh, how unworthy I felt myself!—such a babe in divine things, having so much still to learn! It seemed too wonderful to be true, that Jesus would so manifest his love and power, not only in healing my own body, but use us also to be a means of such blessing to others. Oh, how necessary it is for those who labor in the Master's vineyard to be simple-minded, to be indeed teachable like children, and having a child-like confidence in a loving and faithful God and precious Saviour!

After the Lord had taught us by his Spirit this glorious truth, he sent us forth to proclaim it through the length and breadth of the land; and wonderfully did he bless our work. We had glorious meetings wherever we came, and many souls were saved and bodies healed. The Lord also gave us means to publish over forty thousand tracts, of different kinds, on this subject, which mostly have been distributed gratuitously all over the country.

At last coming in this neighborhood, we thought to visit this place for a time. We lived in the wagon and a tent for some months, holding meetings and teaching the children. Afterwards we obtained a stand, on which my husband himself built a reed house, one room to live in and the other as a school and meeting-place. We had blessed times. We have now opened a school mostly for Malays. The Lord has blessed us with means, so that we hope to be able to extend our work in various places, which he may be pleased to entrust us with.

May the stirring appeal from our brother in India to the hearts of God's children find many a response, and earnest hearts answer, I will go, if the Lord will send. We pray that God may bless this feeble testimony to the glory of our mighty Saviour, that some may be inspired with divine love for the perishing, and learn to trust more fully in the living God. Matt. 6: 25-34. Your sister in Christ, MRS. W. HAZENBERG.

A WARNING FROM THE SOUTH.

YORK, Pa.

Until the rebel batteries opened fire upon Fort Sumter, few citizens of the North believed that a bloody rebellion against the Republic was actually in progress. We who lived south of Mason's and Dixon's line, however, had seen the numerous rebel secret society badges, and knew of the secret drilling and arming from the many dark hints and threats of the over-confident conspirators. Again the Jesuits of the South are drilling and arming their Freemasons, Odd-fellows, Knights and other soldiers of the Jesuitic secret empire.

In the Christian Cynosure of Nov. 21, 1889, Mr. A. F. Smith of Nashville, Tenn., says: "I want the North, and every lover of his country, to understand that to my mind if we don't fill up this Southern country with true, loyal citizens, to counteract the spirit of hate by a true Christian spirit of love, this country will see more blood flow than has ever flowed before in all the wars that she has ever passed through. I tell you, friends, it looks to me the Southland is an equipped, armed force to-day. I see that every lodge is a drilled company of men who are learned in all the tactics of war. A colored band played 'Dixie' at the head of a Confederate reunion marching through the streets with all their old battle-flags to the breeze, in defiance of our 'Stars and Stripes.'

"This band belonged to the Immaculates, a secret order after the stripe of their mother, Masonry. Can anyone suppose this nation will prosper while lodgery controls our pulpits and people? Especially is this Southland the seat of the beast. It has not improved in morals, Christianity or good will. Does anyone suppose that our God will look down upon this with approval?"

"A word to the wise is sufficient." But the fools of the North will see and hear when the batteries of rebellion again open fire, to redeem "the cause that never dies." EDWARD J. CHALFANT.

IOWA MUST BE REDEEMED.

CARL, Iowa.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I am in hearty sympathy with the work of reform as defended by your most excellent paper. I am not, as some others, an old soldier in the work of reform, but am just commencing to do what the Lord has called me to do. I thought you would like to hear the news from a part of Iowa which has hitherto been quiet.

There is at present quite an effort being made to overthrow our present prohibitory laws, and substitute local option and high license. Now, I was not old enough to take any part in the campaign for prohibition in Iowa, but I will do all I can to defeat its overthrow. For my part, I don't see much difference between local option and State prohibition, only that State prohibition is on a larger scale, and I think the larger the territory the better. I would be glad to see national prohibition.

The plea made against prohibition here is that it does not prohibit. The people, they say, can send off and get all the liquor they please. Well, if they can, they don't do it. Some of the old sots who have become so addicted to the use of liquor that they suffer without it, and some who wish to show contempt for the law, do get some liquor. But the per cent of those who get liquor now is very small indeed to what it was under the license system. And if it were true that those who used to frequent the saloon still get liquor, still we have made one grand stride in the direction of purity by getting rid of the saloons. The boys of Iowa know not the temptation of the saloon. God save us from ever returning to the old days of saloon power.

In the border towns saloons are kept open, it is said. I admit that in some of the border towns saloons are kept open in violation of the law. But is rebellion justifiable? Is the object of law to justify the action of the wicked? Or is it to promote the best interests of the people? If the former, then we might ask, Is the law obeyed? and if it is not, change it. But if the latter, then the question should be, Is the law calculated to accomplish its object? and if so, then advocate enforcement, not retraction.

May God give the voters of Iowa wisdom and grit to stand by the right. D. W. ROSE.

PITH AND POINT.

A BAPTIST PASTOR WHO FEARS GOD ONLY.

I'm glad there is such a paper as the Christian Cynosure. I am with you in heartiest sympathy, and not afraid to "speak out in meeting" either. A short time since I preached on "Christ the only Way and the Church the only Agency of Salvation." During the sermon I spoke of the lodge system as antagonistic to the church, etc., etc. A minister told me that if I ever opened my mouth again on that line the lodge would crush me. "Indeed," said he, "it is a question whether your usefulness is not at an end in this town." Yet an old man, a member of my church, told me, "You are right." "In thirty-five years' experience as a Mason, the Lord never blessed me in the lodge room, nor has the lodge benefited me in the least," he said in the prayer meeting the Wednesday evening following the sermon. God bless your Association. I've had membership in Patriotic Sons of America, Phi Kappa Psi, and Knights and Ladies of Honor, but renounce them all after reading C. A. Blanchard in Our Day for August, 1889.—WM. J. COULSTON, Holidaysburg, Pa.

A QUAKER ON THE PROHIBITION PARTY.

There is much in the Cynosure of interest, much of which I approve, while there is some matter that is not profitable for me. I have always been of the opinion that secret societies are impotent for good. I cannot agree with your views on temperance. Having been at the head of the temperance department of the Iowa yearly meeting of Friends for five years, and having seen the practical working of prohibition in this State, I am opposed to the partisan methods.—J. E. PEARSON, Des Moines, Iowa.

FROM THE VETERAN CORPS.

I am now in my 78th year, and have taken the Cynosure from its beginning, and I intend to while I live and have my senses. I fear that the Catholics will yet rule the United States. They seem now to control the government, for all our leading men there are stooping to them; and if it comes to that, we may look for the vials of wrath on this nation. My prayer is that God may overrule it in some way in his great mercy and loving kindness. Be that as it may, I expect to be prepared for a better place than this. I enjoy God's blessing daily, and expect to meet you and all Christians in glory, but none of those that deny Christ in any way. If I could I would help on the good cause, but ninety-nine out of every hundred here belong to some secret society. I give my papers to all that will read them.—ELBERT MARCY, Emporia, Kansas.

LITERATURE.

THE SPIRIT OF BEAUTY. By Prof. Henry W. Parker. Price, 75 cents. John B. Alden, New York.

This volume is composed of a series of essays whose general purpose is to exhibit the relation existing between the harmonies and beauties of creation and the character of the Creator. No abstract can do justice to this writer, so like Emerson in the piercing conciseness of his comprehensive style, yet we will give a few hints at his line of thought.

Beauty prevails everywhere, and is due to a vast variety of secondary causes operating under the most diverse conditions. It exists in many forms of animal life in which we cannot discover that it is of any use to its possessors, or can by any possibility be appreciated by them; hence it could not have been created by them, as evolutionists would have us suppose. Beauty in animals, as well as in minerals, must be of divine origin. If the lower animals can appreciate beauty, and do possess rudimentary reasoning faculties, they should be educated instead of being exterminated, and the evolutionist huntsman is a murderer. That H. Sapiens' stone should develop reasoning faculties looks like a preternatural exception. Virtues and vices are symbolized in animals. The aspects of nature impress themselves upon mankind. Character impresses itself upon the physical structure of man, illustrating the saying, "There is nothing hid that shall not be revealed." Evil is self-destructive; there is a power that makes for righteousness. Disasters involving the innocent with the guilty are explicable only on the ground of their moral effects. Without God and a future life all is darkness. Crystals, in their origin, structure, changes and impurities, teach us many lessons in respect to human character, and reveal a God of law, love and beauty. We see man's perfections best in his works, the Creator's perfections best in man; hence, best in man's work. Art is better than nature. Susceptibilities are prophecies. Cities and civilization were a part of the original plan.

Religion transfigures the commonest acts of life, and gives moral beauty to all things, so that whatsoever we do we may do all to the glory of God.

We may not endorse all of Prof. Parker's suggestions, but we do welcome him to the ranks of our great essayists as a brilliant and stimulating thinker, worthy of a place beside Lowell, Emerson, Whipple, Carlyle and Matthew Arnold.

THE AFRICAN NEWS MAP.—The kindness of Dr. Welch, of Vineland, New Jersey, who is associated with William Taylor in missionary publication work, places before us a beautiful map and one of the most interesting to the world at the present hour. Africa is discovering to the world new districts, continental in size, every few years. Bishop Taylor's missions, the new fields in the Sudan, soon to be penetrated by our Kansas and Nebraska pioneers under the devoted zeal of Henry Grattan Guinness; and above all the universal interest in the explorations of Stanley and Emin Pasha, providentially preserved and delivered from the devouring wastes and forests of the African interior, make just such a map as this a necessity, to gain an intelligent view of these great movements. The sheet is 27 by 34 inches in size, and contains (1) a large map of Central Africa, 17 by 22 inches; (2) a map of Africa entire, 8 by 11; (3) a map of Liberia, 8 by 11; with enlarged sections of the Nile delta, of South Africa, the Congo mission, and Angola; also the Radial Key, engraved by George May Powell, showing distances and directions from Kimpoko and Leopoldville on Stanley Pool. The last named we became familiar with in the letters of Bro. Edward Mathews some months ago. This map, beautifully engraved and colored, is published at the African News office, Vineland, N. J., at $1.00 per copy, which is cheap enough. It is given to subscribers of the News and to donors to the William Taylor fund. By an arrangement with Dr. Welch every Cynosure subscriber can have a copy of this valuable map free, by paying $2.00 for our paper. This excellent offer is only for those who pay in advance. Secure one of these maps immediately.

Vick's Illustrated Monthly Magazine lends its aid to make winter days attractive by the memories of flowers. "Country Homes," "Garden Spoils from Autumn Woods," "The Vegetable Garden," "Our Native Tree Fruits," and "Premiums at State Fairs" are among the topics of the number.

The Converted Catholic completes its sixth volume, and we must regard the work of reformation it represents as becoming well established. Rev. James O'Connor, the editor, is raising a fund to provide a priest's home, and a hall for his mission in New York. Among the important articles in this number are "Religious Liberty in Maryland," the priest Connellan's reasons for leaving the papal church in Ireland, "The Tactics of the Roman Catholic Church," by Miss M. F. Cusack, the Nun of Kenmare.

The Evangelical Repository for the month contains articles on "Evangelistic Work," "Religious Life in the British Navy and Army," "The Trial of Christ," "The Nation's Hope," "Arresting Abuses," comments of the S. S. lessons, etc. In the index for the year we fail to see any titles that show that the lodge has been once noticed in this influential United Presbyterian magazine, and that when the secular press has been full of it in connection with the Cronin and Mormon trials.

The African News closes its first volume with the satisfaction of knowing that the Christian readers of this country will sustain its efforts, William Taylor, who is editor and proprietor, is by this publication putting the church under renewed obligation to him. No other publication in this country gives so much and so varied information respecting the work of missions in Africa. The reports of Bishop Taylor have a fascinating interest. The veteran George Thompson, of Oberlin, who was associated with Rev. H. H. Hinman in the Mendi Mission, Africa, when first established by the American Missionary Association, gives some practical advice about health and instructing the natives. Published by T. B. Welch, Vineland, N. J. $1.25 a year.

CATARRH CURED.

A clergyman, after years of suffering from that loathsome disease, Catarrh, and vainly trying every known remedy, at last found a prescription which completely cured and saved him from death. CATARRHAL DEAFNESS

A NEW TREATMENT.
Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is that a simple remedy has been discovered which permanently cures the most aggravated cases of these distressing diseases by a few simple applications made (two weeks apart) by the patient at home. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent free by A. H. Dixon & Son, 337 and 339 West King Street, Toronto, Canada.

THE N. C. A. FUNDS.

The General Fund is that from which the running expenses of the Association are paid. From it the agents on the field are supported.

The Foreign Fund is that from which the foreign demand for literature against the lodge is supplied to missionaries.

The Free Tract Fund clearly states by its name the object for which contributions are solicited. Millions of pages have been distributed by means of this fund.

The Cynosure Ministers' Fund. The donations to this fund have enabled the Association to send many copies of the Cynosure to the ministers of the South, especially to pastors of colored churches. The result has been a blessing to them and their churches.

Contributions to any or all these funds are urgently solicited.

FORM OF BEQUEST.—I give and bequeath to the National Christian Association, incorporated and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, the sum of — dollars for the purposes of said Association, and for which the receipt of its Treasurer for the time being shall be sufficient discharge.

The Christian Cynosure.

J. BLANCHARD, EDITOR.

HENRY L. KELLOGG, ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 19, 1889.

"God's Word prohibits the believer from forming alliances with the ungodly in society. Whenever the Christian surrenders himself to the society of the unbelieving world, his heart will be led away from God. This is especially true of thousands of Christian men who have deliberately yoked themselves up with unbelievers in all manner of secret societies. This course of false alliance is doing more mischief to individual Christian men by turning their hearts away from God and his service, and to the church by depleting and robbing her of her male membership, THAN ANY OTHER ONE ENEMY OF CHRIST. There never was a time when the cry, 'Come out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord,' was more needed than now."—George F. Pentecost in Bible Studies, 1889, p. 389.

A STEP FORWARD.

The Boston meeting was a long step forward. It proved that a city which first received us with mobs can be changed from ferocity to respect and courtesy. It showed that as many people may be interested in the discussion of secret societies as in the important debates of the Evangelical Alliance. It proved, moreover, that the time is at hand when our ablest pastors can speak freely their convictions on this topic, and when it shall cease to be avoided as pestilential in all gatherings met to consider whatever concerns the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ in the world.

The attendance was not large, but it was fair. In proportion to the attendance on the Evangelical Alliance, meeting in the same hall the week before, and to that of the national convention of the American Sabbath Union in Rev. Wm. Taylor's Broadway Tabernacle in New York at the same time, it was excellent. New England outside of Boston was well represented. From the city itself the hall should have been filled to the doors. But public attention was divided by other meetings. The Christian Alliance, gathered for the discussion of topics related to the second coming of Christ, was held at the same time in Beverly Temple. Dr. Gordon was one of the speakers. The national meeting of the Associated Trades Unions was also in session, and received wide attention from the press of the country as well as the city. A meeting of the Merchant's Association of Boston, with a banquet in honor of distinguished guests, and speeches by ex-President Cleveland and editor Grady, of Atlanta, Georgia, was held Wednesday evening, and the speeches filled the papers. This may be some apology for the attitude of the press of Boston, the Herald only publishing a fair report of the congress. Some of the papers sent girls to report, whose apparent ability for their work was measured by the indifference of their employers.

The grand feature of the meeting was the ability and fearlessness of the city pastors, especially the Baptist brethren, in taking their place on the platform and sharing the discussions of the conference. If we are not mistaken, Drs. Gordon and Gifford, H. L. Hastings and Revs. Grant, Cunningham and Hughes have never before addressed a convention gathered to discuss the lodge. Six maiden speeches of such ability, power and influence have probably never been given before in any of our conventions. This single fact is an event in our reform.

There are other pastors in Boston for whom we are not yet able to frame a reasonable excuse for their absence from such a meeting. There are five Lutheran churches in the city, which are committed against the lodge by book. There are two Reformed and several United Presbyterian churches in Boston and vicinity. Of all these pastors only one, Dr. Robert A. McAyeal, of Lawrence, was present. David McFall, the beloved pastor of the Chambers street church, lay so ill at his home that his life was despaired of. But these brethren should hear the call of God to come to his help and stand for his truth, though it be under the frown of men. If they propose to maintain the discipline of their churches, they need the help of such a meeting, and the profit is mutual.

Tradition and history are all on the side of reform in Boston. The Abolitionists, the once hated and despised of earth, are not forgotten, and the old church on Joy street, and Fanueil Hall, will always be associated with the names of Garrison, Phillips and Lydia Maria Child. State street has been rebuilt since Samuel D. Greene issued his Anti-masonic paper there, and printed Garrison's Liberator on the same press. But about the old cemeteries on Tremont street and on the Common we are reminded of the testimonies of Samuel Adams and John Hancock against the lodge. And much more, under the gilded dome of the State House, do the words of Webster, Horace Mann, Sumner and Adams, seem to reverberate in perpetual protest against this evil, as we stand before their statues.

The great full-length portrait of Nathaniel Colver, in the Meionaon, honored as the first pastor of Tremont Temple from 1839 to 1852, was full of eloquent memories of that great man's hatred of the lodge. Such associations are inspiring; and as in this cause great meetings have been held and success achieved in their presence, so we may confidently hope and fervently pray that these may be but the beginnings of a great work for Christ and his kingdom in Boston.

THE W. C. T. U., ROME AND THE KNIGHTS OF LABOR.

It is not possible that the good women of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, whose patronage of T. V. Powderly and his Knights of Labor has justly excited attention and alarm, realize the full purport of their action. The Cynosure has from time to time pointed out the inconsistency of this action from our point of view. If secret societies are neither according to the example of Jesus Christ, the instructions of Paul, nor the principles of the American fathers—neither Christian or republican—our mothers, wives and sisters take upon themselves unwarranted responsibility,—nay, they err greatly in giving, as they do, an unqualified endorsement to the lodge called Knights of Labor.

But this is not all, though, as we believe, it is the worst feature of the case. Rev. James O'Connor, the head of the reformed Catholic movement in America, a man well qualified by piety, intelligence and observation to speak, gives in the last number of the Converted Catholic a view of the alliance of Mr. Powderly's order with Romanism, which should incline the W. C. T. U., and every other Christian society, to pause before adding another resolution of endorsement to their record. Says Mr. O'Connor:

"The decline in the membership and influence of this organization, dates from the hour when Mr. Powderly, the master workman, went on his knees to Cardinal Gibbons for 'the church's' blessing. This was two years ago, when there were 750,000 men in the order. Now it does not number 200,000. If Powderly were not the fanatical Romanist he is he would know that the 'blessing' of the church of Rome has been a curse to nations, corporations and individuals, and that the blessing of Almighty God brings grace, peace and righteousness upon the earth."

"At the Roman Catholic congress in Baltimore, Nov. 11, ex-Governor Carroll, who presided, said: 'When the question arose in our country whether the church should condemn as a body certain organizations of the laboring class, our own Cardinal Archbishop satisfied the Holy See that the American laborer was still within the influence of the ministers of religion.'

"This reference to the control of the Knights of Labor by the Roman Catholic church evoked tremendous applause. Let American workingmen take notice and, if they value their manhood and citizenship, keep aloof from organizations which the Roman Catholic church controls. The priests are not 'ministers of religion,' as ex-Governor Carroll would have the world believe; they are ministers of the papacy, which is much more a political than a religious organization. In European countries, where the church of Rome had absolute power over the people, it kept them in ignorance and degradation. It would do the same here if it had the same power."

—It was a singular idea of religion which the managers of the 1892 fair in this city had when they nominated, as a committee to organize the "secret, benevolent, and religious societies," the following: the Grand Master of Masons, the H. C. R. of the Independent Order of Foresters, the Grand Director of the Knights of Honor, and a number of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

—In the Visitation Convent at St. Louis the other day, the Misses Lay, of Chicago, and Miss Kelley, of St. Louis, took the vows which bind them forever to confinement within the walls of the establishment. What a religious system that must be which fosters and teaches such inhumanity!

—Rev. S. F. Porter, the college N. C. A. agent, has been compelled to make a short stay in Arkansas, and retreat hastily from malarial regions to the higher lands of Alabama. He found his health likely to be seriously affected unless he made the change. He wrote Thursday from Talladega, Ala., where he was kindly received and was invited to preach on the Sabbath.

—In New York last October the Baptist State anniversaries were held at Hornellsville. They were appointed October 22, but learning that the Knight Templar Masons were to possess the city at the same time the Baptist brethren postponed their meeting for a week. We presume this was done to avoid the appearance of fellowshiping the works of darkness; but the lodge may have supposed it was out of deference to their powerful order.

—Near Frankfort, Kentucky, there is a Military Institute, where young lads are trained to admire the military spirit and in the practice of military drill. As a suitable accompaniment to this warlike character, we find the following in the circular of the institution: "The formation of literary societies, and of the so-called 'Greek-letter' societies, is encouraged. The latter are judged by their fruits. Not only the best students at college, but the leading men of our country in all the cultured and useful walks of life, are members of these 'secret' societies. They are believed to be beneficial to the cadet, and not prejudicial to the good order and military discipline of the Institute."

—The note respecting the good fortune of Bro. Hazenberg in South Africa was barely written last week when the good letter of Mrs. Hazenberg came in, which appears on another page. We heartily commend it to the prayerful reading of all to whom the Cynosure shall come this week. The new city of Johannesburg is in the gold region of the South African Republic. A phenomenal future is predicted for it, and it is attracting wide attention. Some promise that in five years it will have a million inhabitants, an output of gold large enough to gild the whole world, a commercial importance threatening the established trade centers of the old nations, and a political and social position second to no city in Africa, north or south.

—A Good Templar paper sings the praises of that secret order which uses the same prayers and passwords all over the world. The latter are changed every three months, but, rain or shine, summer or winter, the same prayers are performed. This paper extols the order also because five million people have joined it during the forty years of its existence. How honorable, really, is this fact? There are now between 500,000 and 600,000 Good Templars, since John B. Finch formed the hypocritical union in Saratoga. Now, at the ordinary death rate of such abstainers as the order proposes, there should now be from four to four and one-half million members. There must be at least 3,500,000 seceded Good Templars living. The figures reported in Illinois last year confirm this estimate. There were 109 lodges given up during the year, and nearly 9,000 members lost to the order, leaving 9,446 yet officiating.

—The Church of England societies have given to foreign missions during the past year £460,000; joint societies of Churchmen and Nonconformists, £187,000; the English and Welsh Nonconformists, £377,000; and Presbyterians in Scotland and Ireland £202,806. The total of these contributions is £1,226,806, or more than six million dollars.

—Says Dr. A. T. Pierson: "As we study missions we are more convinced that the defect in our methods is radical. There is something wrong, and it reaches down to the very foundation of our system. We deliberately say, after much thought and prayer over this matter, that something is radically wrong in this matter of the financial support of missions. Our methods are either unscriptural and unspiritual, or else they are defective in their application."

THE BOSTON CONGRESS.

THE REPORT OF PROCEEDINGS.

OPENING ADDRESS OF DR. GORDON—LETTER FROM JOSEPH COOK.

The assembling of another convention in Boston to voice the sentiment of an awakening Christian church against the secret lodge system, is an event of unusual interest and importance to those who were present in the memorable Music Hall convention in 1880. The present assembly had another reception altogether. No mob of cabbage-throwers prepared the way for it in the Chambers Street church. No array of policemen stood in force about the hall. Instead of a single Boston pastor, the brave McFall, to breast the turbulence and hatred of the lodges as the rocks in the harbor withstand the tides, now a number of prominent pastors give their names to endorse the discussion of secretism, and three of them occupied the platform on the first evening and assisted nobly and eloquently in the exercises.

The contrast was the thought of many minds, and was equally a matter for thanksgiving to God. This discussion has gone beyond the day of mobs in Boston, let us hope, forever.

But there is opposition enough still. Pastor David McFall, though sick, sent his people in strong delegation, but the Christian people of Boston were sparingly represented in the opening meeting. Indifference is the greatest enemy of a reform. It was with amazement, also, that it was learned that Mr. Bradbury, a leading spirit in the anti-Catholic movement, took occasion to denounce the conference in the name of Masonry, to the 3,000 gathered Sabbath afternoon to hear Dr. Fulton in Music Hall. This was a sad blunder, the result of ignorance; for it is not possible that so firm a friend of Davis, Lansing, Kellaway and Fulton should, with a fair understanding of the Masonic and Jesuit systems, speak so unadvisedly. Nevertheless, the people who heard Mr. Bradbury's objection reached eagerly for the printed notices which were distributed at the door, and thousands were handed to them.

Wednesday forenoon the rain drizzled and splashed, and the streets of Boston ran little rills. But the clouds broke in the afternoon, and the sky was clear and the streets dried at night. All felt that God was with us in this matter. Some five or six hundred people were gathered in Tremont Temple, the Baptist headquarters for New England, the historic spot where Nathaniel Colver stood fifty years ago in the face of the enraged Freemasons of Boston, with the Mayor by his side and scores of policemen to hold down the mob. As the people were gathering Rev. Frank O. Cunningham, son of the pastor of Shawmut Ave. Baptist church, and himself pastor of the Baptist church in the Somerville suburb, contributed greatly to the enjoyment of those waiting by an excellent improvisation on the great organ of the hall. Rev. Dr. A. J. Gordon of the Clarendon Street Baptist church, known wherever there are Christian readers by his published works on eschatology and practical Christian life, presided.

After calling to order he introduced Rev. James M. Gray, D.D., of the Reformed Episcopal church, to conduct the opening devotional services. Dr. Gray read several passages of Scripture appropriate to the occasion, closing with the well-known verses of the 6th of 2nd Corinthians, from the 14th to the end of the chapter, and led in a fervent petition for the blessing of God upon the deliberations of the meeting.

In opening the conference, Dr. Gordon said:

Ladies and gentlemen: We are gathered together in response to a call issued some time since, which I will read in order that you may clearly understand the purport of this assembly. [He then read the call for the assembly and the signatures, which contained the following names, most of whom are well-known pastors of Boston:

O. P. Gifford, James M. Gray, A. J. Gordon, Wm. Elliot Griggs, H. L. Hastings, A. A. Miner, N. Boynton, E. Edmunds, J. W. Hamilton, F. W. Ryder, D. McFall, J. W. Brigham, T. P. Briggs, N. Bailey, Wm. O. Ayer, Roland D. Grant, L. G. Barrett, Wm. A. Mandell, Darius B. Scott, Prof. L. F. Townsend, Oliver S. Dean, Geo. Merriam.]

I will also take this occasion to read the following letter addressed to this congress, from the office of Our Day, 28 Beacon street:

DEC. 9, 1889.

DEAR SIR:—I am called away to lecture at Toronto, Dec. 10. I cannot possibly attend your convention at Tremont Temple. Please express my regret to the management of your meeting.

Now that the Cronin case is occupying public attention, I can but hope that you will secure a full and fair hearing for your brilliant list of speakers, from whose published words I shall expect much instruction.

Yours very respectfully,

JOSEPH COOK.

Rev. Mr. Stoddard.

I am sure it is with no spirit of personal antagonism toward anybody that we are met here to discuss these important questions. I am not so well informed in respect to the associations under investigation as many of the others who will participate; but on general principles I see much that is undesirable in these secret organizations. In one feature in particular there is a most serious objection. Man's free will is the highest endowment of God to the human race. God has given this power, and he will not interfere with man's choice. Even in the great work of salvation he says, "Choose ye." We have the right to say no or yes to all God's proposals in our behalf. Now it is a very serious matter to bind myself so that this power of choosing is taken away, destroyed, under the solemn form of an oath; to take a vow that shall bind me to other men whom I may not know, to do that of which I can at the time have no knowledge. Herod so bound himself, and for his oath's sake committed an atrocious crime. I don't want to bind myself by any oath that shall control my future responsibility of determining between right and wrong. Need I say I have again and again encountered secret societies in connection with this principle in practical life, and have found what an obstacle they can be. Not once or twice in church councils I have found there were connections involving parties in the case which could not be broken, and which interfered and made nugatory every effort. But these questions will be discussed at large during this conference, and you will understand their importance.

Secretaries were then elected, Henry L. Kellogg of Chicago and Miss E. E. Flagg of Wellesley, Mass., being chosen. On the nomination of General Secretary Stoddard, Rev. Henry T. Cheever of Worcester, H. L. Kellogg, and Elder S. C. Kimball of New Hampshire were made a committee on resolutions; and John A. Conant of Willimantic, Conn., A. M. Paul of Providence, and Joseph Perry of Connecticut, committee on finance.

The addresses of the evening were by Rev. David McAllister, editor of the Christian Statesman and pastor of the Reformed Presbyterian church of Pittsburgh, and by Rev. O. P. Gifford, pastor of the Warren Ave. Baptist church, Boston. They frequently called out hearty applause, and the latter aroused the special enthusiasm of the conference when it was remembered that he was making his maiden speech upon this subject.

Following them a collection was taken, and Dr. Gordon announced that Pres. C. A. Blanchard was unexpectedly present from Illinois this first evening. It had been understood that he could not be in attendance until later, and Dr. Gifford had taken his place the first evening. All would wish to hear from one who has deliberated so much upon the subject of secret societies, if it were only a few words.

President Blanchard said there are two things in religion: what Christ has done for us, and what we can do for him. Our work divides itself between doing and enjoying. There are more people willing to do a kind act than rebuke an evil. Men will not rebuke you if you praise the good. But there is great need in the Christian church to follow Christ's example in rebuking evil. It is a period of the greatest activity in respect to secret organizations. These organizations all propose some good end, and some of them seem for a time to fulfill their promises. In the time of our war the Union League performed, as we believe, a wonderful work for our nation. But how is it now? The whole nation resounds with the stories of corruption in our officials, until there seems to be more need of a party to secure the enforcement of such laws as we have, than to make any more for us to have broken or neglected. What use is it to establish missions to save a few wretched men, when at the same time our lax administration of law is manufacturing these wretched men five times as fast as we can save them. It is like one who saved a man from drowning, only to find another man floating by, and then another and another, until he reflected, There must be somebody throwing men into the river. I'll leave this work here, if a few are lost, and go up and stop them from being thrown in. There are millions of Christians in this country, who could, if they would, have our laws enforced. They are kind and helpful to the poor and distressed, but they do not insist on those things which prevent poverty and distress. We need a change in this regard, and it will, we trust, be one object of this meeting to help Christian people to a better understanding of the ways in which this can be done.

THURSDAY MORNING

the meeting of the New England Christian Association was held in the Meionaon hall (the smaller hall of Tremont Temple building). The report of this interesting meeting is given in our New England letter. Miss Flagg, the Cynosure correspondent, was re-elected secretary, and there was no change in the management.

At noon the congress reassembled in the large hall, Rev. Dr. McAllister presiding. The address of the hour was by Rev. I. J. Lansing, pastor of Salem Street Congregational church, Worcester, Mass., and author of "Romanism and the Republic," one of the ablest works on that subject in print. Dr. Lansing has lectured often in Music Hall, Boston, on Romanism, and his reputation as a popular speaker was well maintained in the eloquent address on "Jesuit Policy."

At 2:30 the congress reassembled, Rev. H. T. Cheever of Worcester presiding. This session was in the Meionaon, and a very fair audience attended. After prayer by Rev. J. M. Brown of Marlboro, N. H., brief addresses were made by Rev. R. N. Countee of Memphis, Tenn., who was unexpectedly present; by Rev. S. C. Kimball of New Market, N. H.; William F. Davis, the Boston Common evangelist; Henry L. Kellogg of Chicago; Rev. Roland D. Grant, Baptist pastor of Beverly, Mass.; Rev. Frank O. Cunningham, Baptist pastor of Somerville, Mass.; and Rev. J. H. Hughes of Boston. The variety of these brief addresses made this one of the most entertaining of the sessions.

Space will at present permit only a partial report of these addresses; in a future number others will be given.

Rev. R. N. Countee spoke of the measure of success given him under God in building up a reform church of 325 members, all free from the lodge and whisky, and only four of whom use tobacco. It is the work of the Christian church to combat the devil, and in this warfare the lodge was found on the devil's side, aiding his conquest by subverting the churches and turning their members aside to false worship.

Elder S. C. Kimball, New Hampshire State Agent, followed, speaking of the difficulties under which Christian people labor in opposing secret societies. Editors and preachers are subjected to especial temptations. They are made by the secret lodges to fear loss of patronage, influence, denominational fellowship and social courtesy. It is a great work of our associations to help create public sentiment on this question; and year by year men are taking a stand for Christ. One can make but a small fight alone. Two or three score can rouse a State to an apprehension of the truth. He was willing to stand alone for Christ, if God called on him to do so. But the work of each individual was increased as more join the ranks of truth. God had heard prayer in New England, and opened the way to success to his cause. It is not always necessary to go into a demonstration of the wickedness of Freemasonry and other secret orders. That is now often confessed, but this conference is supplying a want long neglected by the press of the country, in bringing these facts before the people, and helping many who would be weak alone, to stand more nobly for Christ. He told of a Congregational pastor of his acquaintance who testified for Christ against the secret societies who was boycotted and was hounded to the grave by the lodge.

During the afternoon a member of the Royal Arcanum got the floor to make a defence of that order which honored the name of God, had prayers provided by rule, and did much good. He was reminded by Rev. Mr. Grant that the prayers of

THE HOME.

THE COMFORTER.

BY JULIA C. R. DORR.

How dost thou come, O Comforter?
In heavenly glory dressed,
Down floating from the far-off skies,
With lilies on thy breast?
With silver lilies on thy breast,
And in thy falling hair,
Bringing the bloom and balm of heaven
To this dim, earthly air?

How dost thou come, O Comforter?
With strange, unearthly light,
And mystic splendor aureoled,
In trances of the night? •
In lone, mysterious silences, •
In visions rapt and high,
And holy dreams, like pathways set
Betwixt the earth and sky?

Not thus alone, O Comforter!
Not thus, thou Guest Divine,
Whose presence turns our stones to bread,
Our water into wine!
Not always thus—for thou dost stoop
To our poor, common clay,
Too faint for saintly ecstasy,
Too impotent to pray.

How does God send the Comforter?
Oftimes through byways dim;
Not always by the beaten path
Of sacrament and hymn;
Not always through the gates of prayer,
Or penitential psalm,
Or sacred rite, or holy day,
Or incense, breathing balm.

How does God send the Comforter?
Perchance through faith intense;
Perchance through humblest avenues
Of sight, or sound, or sense.
Haply in childhood's laughing voice
Shall breathe the voice divine,
And tender hands of earthly love
Pour forth the heavenly wine!

How will God send the Comforter?
Thou knowest not, nor I!
His ways are countless as the stars
His hand hath hung on high.
His roses bring their fragrant balm,
High twilight hush its peace,
Morning its splendor, night its calm,
To give the pain surcease!

THE ABIDING PRESENCE OF THE HOLY SPIRIT.

BY REV. H. M. PARSONS, TORONTO, IN THE NIAGARA CONFERENCE.

The work of the Holy Spirit in this dispensation is often misunderstood by believers, through their confusion of thought concerning his Person and office. From often speaking of his influence, his presence by many is resolved into an atmosphere. And so dependence on him is dismissed with an —“of course we depend on him”—just as we cannot breathe without the air. Others deny his personality altogether, and declare that he is only an emanation from God affecting the conscience and influencing our acts through that organ. In these cases, all effort in Christian service is the mere purpose of the human will to do as well as it can. And we fear that multitudes of professed believers are resting all their hopes for the future upon their good intentions and moral acts. The Word of God, however, allows no such perversion of his most blessed gift. The promise of the Spirit is clear and plain—and the fulfillment of the promise equally explicit.

In Ezek. 36: 26, 27, Jehovah speaks to his ancient people concerning the new covenant, and declares two things: (1) “a new Spirit will I put within you;” (2) “I will put my Spirit within you.” While this is future, and to be witnessed when Israel and Judah have national restoration—and acceptance of their Messiah—it is also repeated in promise to the church in the New Testament. Thus in John 14: 16, 17, another Comforter is promised, who “dwelleth with you, and shall be in you.” And in John 3: 6, we read that “that which is born of the Spirit is spirit.” Here we have the fulfilling of the first promise in Ezekiel. The “new spirit” in every believer is the creation of the Holy Spirit. In another place this new creation is called the temple of the Holy Spirit. We call this regeneration. The act of the Spirit, imparting and producing a new nature, with new dispositions and desires in the sinner, this very sinner has the moment he believes on Jesus Christ as Son of God.

In addition to this, every believer has the promise, “I will put my Spirit within you,” fulfilled. This Spirit in Christ had dwelt with the disciples three years, when Christ promised that he should dwell in them. This fulfillment is recorded in John 20:21, 22. The evening of his resurrection day, Jesus stood among them and called them to service. He made them messengers to reveal him to the nations. “As my Father hath sent me, so send I you. Then he breathed upon them, saying, “Receive ye the Holy Ghost.” This was something more than regeneration. It was, and it is the indwelling of the Holy Spirit—the Comforter. This also interprets the promise of Jesus, “Lo, I am with you every day to the end of the age.” This indwelling Comforter also dwells in the glorified Christ—in his human body at the right hand of the Majesty on high. So he is the author of our prayers, and of all things pertaining to our direction as children of God. The fact that so many lack peace and joy as abiding habits, is because they do not cherish this Holy Ghost. They “quench” his inward suggestions, or “grieve” his patient love, or “resist” him in the reading and hearing of the Word.

The indwelling of the Holy Spirit when received imparts peace and joy and increasing obedience. This word itself implies a quick and ready listening to the voice of the Spirit through the Word, and in the heart. He may dwell in a believer and be silenced for a time, through ignorance, or disobedience, or unfaithfulness. For the gift sent from the Father and the Son must be something worthy of the most grateful reception, recognition and acknowledgment.

The disciples were in-dwelt by the Spirit from the resurrection of Christ to the day of Pentecost. At the ascension of our Lord to the throne of the Father he gave another promise, adapted to the work he assigned to his disciples in the last command, and at the communication of the indwelling Spirit. This is variously termed the baptism of the Spirit and of fire, according to the testimony of John the Baptist; the endowment of power, recorded in the promise, Acts 1: 8; or the anointing, as described in 1 John 2: 27.

This promise was fulfilled many times in the primitive church, and the search of these recorded instances will well reward the faithful student of the Word. In Acts 2: 3, 4, we have the first gracious fulfillment. In the upper room, the gathered company, already regenerated, already having the Holy Spirit in each new spirit, were faithfully obedient to the order of their ascended Lord, when the promise poured forth upon them, each having the lambent tongue of fire on his head—the shekinah stamp of the dispensation. And then the first effort of the equipped church was upon the foreigners in Jerusalem. Beginning at Jerusalem, they first preached the Gospel to every creature, according to the Lord's command. And after that the church at Jerusalem was formed and home missions began. To the Jew first—who was scattered abroad—and then to the Gentiles by the mouth of Peter and Paul.

This endowment of power was repeated. Regeneration and indwelling are permanent. But in Acts 4: 8, after the cure of the impotent man in the name of Jesus, Peter, “filled with the Holy Ghost,” began his sermon to the rulers of the people and the elders. And being forbidden to speak or to teach in the name of Jesus, he still persisted with holy boldness and said, “We cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard.” In this same connection, while relating to the assembled company the account of this wonderful power of God, they were led to speak of the resurrection of Jesus as evincing similar power; and immediately, according to Acts 4: 31, 32, 33, another anointing filled them, and expelled all selfishness, so that every one was disposed to yield all his substance to God's requirements.

So again in Acts 4: 3, when from the growth of the church organization was required, this baptism of the Spirit indicated the men to be appointed for the work. And when Stephen entered on this office in obedient faith, still further illumination is manifested when he discovered the risen Christ on high bending with loving sympathy over his martyred servant, and revealing his presence in the closing prayer of his life. Nor has this work in this orderly manifestation ever ceased. In the history of the church, all through this age, similar testimonies are recorded. The Lord never fails in his promises. Every believer may be filled with the Spirit. It is not a question of his power, or love, or willingness. It is simply whether we will yield ourselves to his possession.

This endowment of power is in various forms. It may be in the increasing knowledge of the believer, or in a more ardent faith, or in enlarged and delightful emotions. The filling of the Holy Spirit—to every one desiring—is for the right and acceptable discharge of every duty and obligation of life. In humble waiting God's servants often experience overwhelming blessing.

Recently an humble missionary paused to pray over the wicked fishing village on the Ayrshire coast of Scotland. His heart was held in struggling prayer by an invisible presence for three hours. He went on to his service, and under the Bible-reading the Holy Spirit fell on all present, and in a short time the whole village was led to believe and confess the Lord.

Something similar occurred in this room this last year, when from similar manifestation many were constrained to yield individual offerings to the Lord; so that to-day the results of that meeting are seen in the presence of a choice company of brothers and sisters preaching the glad tidings under Pentecostal conditions in many provinces of China. This baptism we need to-day, my brethren—it is waiting for us. And the way is the same as at the first—testimony of the risen Christ, Acts 2: 32, 33, “This Jesus hath God raised up, whereof we all are witnesses.” Oh! may we testify in truth and in this experience, that we also may add, “Therefore, being by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, he hath shed forth this which ye now see and hear.” Truth.

HOW TO BE HAPPY.

Are you almost disgusted
With life, little man?
I will tell you a wonderful trick
That will bring you contentment
If anything can—
Do something for somebody, quick;
Do something for somebody, quick!

Are you awfully tired
With play, little girl?
Weary, discouraged, and sick?
I'll tell you the loveliest
Game in the world—
Do something for somebody, quick;
Do something for somebody, quick!

Though it rains like the rain
Of the flood, little man,
And the clouds are forbidding and thick,
You can make the sun shine
In your soul, little man—
Do something for somebody, quick;
Do something for somebody, quick!

Though the skies are like brass
Overhead, little girl,
And the walk like a well-heated brick,
And are earthly affairs
In a terrible whirl?
Do something for somebody, quick;
Do something for somebody, quick!

JAMIE'S SITUATION.

“If I could only go there first,” Jamie said.
“But that wouldn't do, you know,” his mother answered, quietly.

“No,” said Jamie, “I know it wouldn't, because she said she must have the berries the first thing in the morning—the earlier the better—and I promised her, you know.”

“Of course,” the mother said, as though that quite settled the matter.

“But how will I look to go in search of a place, after I have been picking berries all the morning?”

“Why, you will look like a boy who has been at work doing the best he could for himself and his mother. You can wash your hands in the brook, you know, and have them clean.”

“I don't suppose I could wear my other jacket?” said Jamie, in a reflective, rather than an inquiring tone.

"Oh, no!" his mother answered, "that wouldn't do, of course."

"There won't be much use in going at all, so late. Lots of the other boys will have been there, and the place will be gone, I dare say."

Mrs. Walker seemed to have no answer to make to this, nor did Jamie seem to expect any. After a moment's thoughtful silence he said, in a brisk tone, "Well, never mind, there's nothing for it but to do the best I can."

"That's my sensible boy," mother said, as she kissed and watched him away.

They were poor, as you have found out before this; and Jamie, small for his years and not very strong, found it hard to get work which would help his mother much. In the berry season he did very well, but the season was nearly over in the region where they lived.

Only the day before Jamie had seen a notice in a shop window of "Boy Wanted," with directions to call to-morrow, between the hours of 8 and 10, and he made up his mind to try for the place. If it had not been for those berries promised early in the morning to a customer, he would have been on hand as soon as the clock struck. But there was no help for it; according to Jamie's idea of honesty, the berries must come first.

Four other boys, to my certain knowledge, had their hearts set on securing the same place, and were on hand, one of them quite early.

Having been asked the usual questions, Joseph Smith, who was the first one, had been shown into a room to wait for a few minutes. Being quite alone he roved about the room in search of amusement; picked up a bottle, smelled of its contents, dropped the glass stopper, broke a little bit from it, picked it up in a frightened way, and put it back in the bottle in haste. He congratulated himself that it did not show it was broken. After that, being frightened, he touched nothing more. He had but a few minutes to wait. The grave-looking colored man, who answered all the rings of the bell, opened the door and told him his master had decided "that the boy would not suit him."

"Much he knew about it," said Joseph to himself in great indignation. "He didn't ask me a single question that would show whether I could do his work or not! I'm glad I didn't get the place, anyhow; I didn't like him."

Boy number two was Emory Haines; neatly dressed, very respectful in his manners. He was shown into the same room to wait, and finding himself quite alone, helped himself first to a bunch of grapes from the full dish on the sideboard, then took some candy mottoes from the glass dish near it, and was astonished in a few minutes to be told that he "wouldn't do."

Following him came Frank Dennis, who entertained himself by scribbling with his pencil on the margins of several magazines which lay on the table, then curled himself, shoes and all, into the easiest chair in the room, which was a delicate, light-colored plush, and saw how far he could tip it back against the wall without going over. He barely escaped tumbling backward twice before he was interrupted, to be told that Mr. Dorrance said he need not wait longer; he had decided to look further.

After that there was a lull. Presently our Jamie—rather the worse as to hair and clothes for his scramble among the berry bushes—appeared, and was asked questions, among them this: "How is it that you are so late in appearing? It is not far from 10 o'clock!"

"I know it, sir," said Jamie, "and I was afraid I would be too late; but Mrs. Butterfield was depending on me for berries this morning. I had promised her, and I had to go to the Beach Farm to find the best berries, and it is a long walk, sir. Then I had to take them to her first, of course, because she was waiting."

"Just so," said Mr. Dorrance. "Very well; you may step into the next room and wait a minute. I will let you know my decision soon."

That same room which had received visits from the boys you have heard of, among some others.

Jamie looked about him with admiring eyes, but made no attempt to touch either books or bottles. A magazine which Frank Dennis had dropped on the floor he stooped and carefully restored to its place. He picked up a stray bit of paper, and looking about him for the waste-basket, stepped lightly toward it and dropped in the paper. Next he espied the glass fruit dish dangerously near the edge of the table, drawn there by Emory

Haines. After apparently reflecting for a minute and measuring with his eye the probability that a jar from the opening door might send the dish to the floor, Jamie stepped to it and with most careful hand set it back in the middle of the table where it belonged. Then turned away and gave his attention to some little children whom he could see from the window.

"I've got the place, mother!" this same Jamie shouted gleefully, half an hour afterwards. "Don't you think, I got the place! I was awful late, and I didn't expect it at all; for I met Joe Smith, and he said he and lots of other boys had been there, and that Mr. Dorrance was a particular old foggy, and he didn't believe he wanted any boy at all. But I thought he was nice and pleasant. He said he felt sure I was an honest, careful boy, who would take care of his property and do the best I could. But I'm sure I don't know what made him think so, mother; I wasn't there but a few minutes, and he didn't ask me many questions. I don't think he knows anything about me."

But Jamie was mistaken; and so were the others.

The fact was, there was a tall-tale mirror in the room where all the boys had waited. It was so arranged that although the boys supposed themselves out of sight of everybody, each movement that they made could be distinctly seen by Mr. Dorrance himself from the back parlor, where he went to watch the effect of his experiment.

"For," said he to himself, "if a boy can't be trusted alone in a strange house for five minutes, I don't want him in my employ."

The thought that stays with me is, would not those boys have acted very differently if they had known that the eyes of the master of the house were on them?—Pansy.

TEMPERANCE.

WHISKY AND UNCLE SAM'S REVENUE.

Commissioner of Internal Revenue Mason, in reporting the operations of the internal revenue service for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1889, says: The aggregate receipts for the last fiscal year were $130,894,434, or $6,567,958 more than the receipts for the previous year. The only object of taxation showing a decrease during the first quarter of the present year is oleomargarine, which dropped from $148,623 in 1888, to $124,730 in 1889. The total cost of collection during the past fiscal year was $4,185,729, a fraction less than 3.2 per cent of the amount collected.

The Commissioner says that, owing to the great number of distilleries in operation during the last fiscal year, and the increased quantity of spirits produced, resulting in an increase of the taxes collected from that source, as compared with the receipts of the previous year, of more than $5,000,000, the expenditures for salaries exceeded the amount estimated by the appropriation. The Commissioner regards the general condition of the service throughout the country as very satisfactory. One thousand two hundred and fifty-three violations of the internal revenue law have been reported by revenue agents during the year; 659 persons have been arrested on their information; property to the value of $137,404 has been reported by them for seizure, and $94,606 for assessments for unpaid taxes and penalties. The number of stills was 456, resulting in the arrest of 236 persons, and the death of one and the wounding of two officers of the service.

The increase in the quantity of tobacco and snuff, and in the number of cigars and cigarettes for the last fiscal year over those taxed during the previous fiscal year was: Manufactured tobacco, 11,535,636 pounds; snuff, 626,631 pounds; cigars, 22,658,990; cigarettes, 288,789,260. The export account shows an increase in manufactured tobacco of 118,183 pounds, an increase in the number of cigars exported of 266,700 and an increase in the number of cigarettes exported of 65,909,950. The number of cigars imported during the year was 90,087,407. The value of the manufactured tobacco imported was $70,353.

The total number of special tax-payers is given as 830,134, of whom 590,013 are dealers in manufactured tobacco. The whole number of grain distilleries registered during the year was 1,440, of which number 1,267 were operated, an increase of 140 in the number registered, and 238 in the number operated, as compared with the previous year. In the class of larger distilleries there was an increase of two in the number registered, but there was an increase of sixty-eight in the number operated. There were 3,126 fruit distilleries registered, and 3,072 operated, an increase of 442 in the number registered and of 465 in the number operated during the fiscal year. The total number of grain, molasses and fruit distilleries registered and operated during the year are 4,576 and 4,349, respectively. The number of gallons of spirits produced from grain during the year (87,887,456 gallons) shows an increase of 19,499,296 gallons over the product (68,388,160 gallons) of the previous year, and is 4,161,150 gallons more than the average produced (83,726,306 gallons) for the last ten years. The quantity of rum distilled from molasses during the year (1,471,054 gallons) shows a decrease of 420,192 gallons from the product of the previous year (1,891,246 gallons) and is 416,510 gallons less than the average product (1,887,564 gallons) for the last ten years.

The increase in the production of Bourbon whisky is 14,497,175 gallons; rye whisky, 2,870,078; gin, 156,978; highwines, 13,059; pure, neutral, or cologne spirits, 963,441; miscellaneous, 1,135,069; total increase, 19,635,800.

The quantity of fruit brandy of all kinds withdrawn from distilleries during the year, to be deposited in special bonded warehouses, was 991,832 gallons.

The quantity of distilled spirits in the United States, except what may be in custom bonded warehouses, on the first day of October, 1889, was 102,650,982 gallons.

A BOY KILLED BY WHISKY.

John Mahoney, a 12-year-old boy living with his widowed mother at 1438 Indiana avenue, Chicago, and several boys of about his age went into a saloon at 1544 Wabash avenue and stole six bottles of whisky. The youngsters carried their poison into the alley in the rear of the saloon and drank of it until all became beastly intoxicated. Mahoney was carried home in an unconscious condition, and in an hour was dead.

The police were notified, and on investigation found that several of Mahoney's companions were very low, and probably would not recover. Wick-er Alexander of 1527 State street and Hugh Hopkins and Thomas Powell were found at their homes in an unconscious condition, and it is thought they will die. Nicholas Busch, Charles Daly and James Murphy, three of Mahoney's companions, were arrested in an intoxicated condition, and will be held to give whatever information they can to the police that will lead to getting at the bottom of the facts in the case, as the 22d street police, with their accustomed lack of common sense, were unable after six hours' work to learn anything definite regarding the unfortunate matter.

In Glasgow recently an attempt was made to open a public place where liquor should be sold directly opposite a school-house; at this school 1,500 pupils attended in the day-time, and at night two or three hundred more. When the matter came up for final decision before the "Confirmation Court" there was a large attendance of liquor men, temperance advocates and others; before this a public meeting had been held, where a resolution had been adopted condemning the granting of the license mentioned. The school board, too, was aroused, and had its representatives there to oppose the locating near the school. The advocate of the new license intimated that the school board was "meddling" and protested strongly against presentation of the resolution passed at the public meeting. The result of the interest aroused was the refusal of the license. It appears that the anti-saloon sentiment in Glasgow is much strengthened of late.

Sir Edward Guinness, the millionaire brewer of Dublin, has placed in responsible hands the sum of £250,000 to be used to erect "clean and healthy homes" for the very poor; this to be used partly in London and partly in Dublin. Commenting on this a Scotch paper says: "Making all due allowance for the philanthropic feeling of the donor, his action affords a somewhat grim illustration of knocking down with one hand and trying to build up with the other."

Satan recruits his ranks from the vagrants. Christ's twelve chosen men were working men.

the order were not Christian, because they were, according to the lodge rule, as good from the mouth of a blasphemer as from any other. Another brother said that Dr. Darius Wilson, the head of the Egyptian Masonic rite, concocted the Royal Arcanum, and a stream cannot rise higher than its source.

THE LAST SESSION

was held in Tremont Temple, Rev. H. T. Cheever presiding. Rev. A. A. Hoyt led in prayer, and the chairman read a brief address as follows:

I am aware that the main duty of your chairman, the presiding officer this evening, is to introduce the speakers. But I deem it proper also to gather up the different lines of thought pursued hitherto in this Congress of Christians and to formulate them, or the conclusions derived from them, into one broad affirmation to be reported and put on record as the deliberate judgment of this Convention, perhaps to serve as a text for one or more of the speakers this evening. That affirmation is this, viz: That the inception and establishment of a National Christian party of reform on the basal principles of righteousness and humanity, with confessed allegiance to Christ, the King, has become a necessary step in the providential march of events, and in the foreordained progress of a great Christian people struggling to get free from the chronic thralldom of intemperance through the culpably tolerated liquor traffic, from the depraving control of oath-bound and Jesuit orders of secrecy, and from all Old World or New World usages or abuses incompatible with a true Christian civilization.

Dr. Howard Crosby is reported to have said, for substance, at the late Evangelical Alliance meeting in this city, that in America alone of all lands Christian men could make themselves felt with any fullness of force in legislation. The attitude, or, I should say, lack of positive attitude of Christian men in politics is one of the dangerous menaces to our country. Low-minded and corrupt ring-men, getting their places through agencies of secrecy, are often left undisturbed in office and position through the apathy and timidity of Christian people who ought to be a power in politics of themselves, both by their loyal co-working together, and their courageous Christian leadership. Avoidance of public trust and duty is not true Christianity. To allow politics to become a cesspool and then to avoid politics because they are a cesspool, is a double crime against Christ, and what should be our Christian institutions.

It is evident that the moral and political atmosphere in this country is now so charged with electricity, generated by the friction of counter principles and parties, that it needs but a jar to cause an explosion. And the question is fairly asked, Is an explosion to take place? or are the diverse elements so to conform to their environment, and to the manifest trend of the Divine Spirit, that the process of unification will go on in peace, while the influences of evil will be thrown off from the body politic like scales, or like particles of effete matter from the human system in a Turkish bath. Christianity alone can answer this question, and that Mr. Hastings may perhaps answer in his expected address to-night on "The Remedy."

The addresses of the evening, by Pres. C. A. Blanchard and H. L. Hastings, the well-known Boston lecturer and evangelist, were heartily appreciated and applauded by the audience. At their close the following resolutions were adopted:

1. As a body of Christians representing the Christian churches and ministry of the land, it is the deliberate judgment of this congress that the various orders bound to secrecy in all their multitudinous forms and names, Mormonism, Masonry, Jesuitism, the Clan-na-Gael, etc., etc., are incompatible with true Christianity, with the obligations of American citizenship, and with the free institutions of America, and they should be met and overthrown in the name of republican government and of true religion.

2. We recognize the overruling providence of God in the U. S. courts at Salt Lake City, in bringing to light the secret oaths of the Endowment House, and in securing a judicial decision that they are contrary to good citizenship, and that aliens who take them are thereby unfitted to be citizens of the United States. We also rejoice at the universal popular condemnation of the Clan-na-Gael as a system which should never be allowed to exist in America. We hail these judgments of court and people as premonitions of the final overthrow of the secret lodge system.

3. As a conference we approve the efforts of the National Christian Association to arouse our own people and extend this reform to foreign lands. The lodge is ubiquitous, and its pestilential influence is world-wide. We recommend to the Association that every effort be made at the proposed World's Fair of 1892, to reach the multitudes which will be gathered from every land under the sun. And if this Universal Exhibition shall be held in Chicago, the headquarters of our reform, as we hope it may be, we recommend that an International Conference be held during its progress, that shall adequately represent the reform against the secret lodges, and which shall enlighten the world by the vigor and power of its discussions.

4. We desire as a body to express our sincere appreciation of the kindness of our Boston friends with thanks for their hospitality. And in this connection we would speak our particular gratitude to the pastors of this city and vicinity who have so ably assisted in this conference at the organ and on the platform.

There was no dissent to these resolutions, and the congress closed with the benediction by the chairman.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

A peculiar plan.—The lodge room as an adjunct to the church.—Report of the meeting of the N. E. C. A.

If any anti-secretist needs to be convinced that our Congress of Churches was not held too soon, a lengthy communication in one of the leading city dailies entitled, "How to elevate humanity, and make religion attractive to the young," ought to do it. The writer in evident sincerity and soberness makes the remarkable suggestion that whereas out of the 7,000,000 of young men in the United States only five per cent are church members, and 5,000,000 never enter a place of worship from one year's end to the other, a counter attraction to the dram-shop and other objectionable places of resort should be provided in the shape of a lodge-room attached to each church. This auxiliary society, it is further suggested, should take pattern after such societies as the Masons, Odd-fellows, Y. M. C. A. and the Y. P. S. C. E., "combining the good qualities of each and designed to embrace the whole world within its jurisdiction." Life and accident insurance, sick benefits, entertainments, etc., should be among its important features. And commenting on the fact that new benefit orders are springing up every day, the writer asks: "Cannot the Protestant Evangelical churches start an organization of greater power, popularity and lasting benefit than anything that has yet existed, and thus create a stampede towards our churches?" He concludes with an expression from a prominent Freemason and Sabbath-school superintendent "that if the evangelical churches of this country would unite upon this proposed plan of establishing auxiliary societies for prosecuting the work described, there would be no necessity for the existence of such societies as the Freemasons, Odd-fellows, etc., and that it would strengthen the church three-fold in ten years."

God grant that the congress just held may help to break the spell of terror which has hitherto sealed the lips of so many godly pastors who hate the lodge serpent, yet almost fear to speak his name save with bated breath.

The meeting of the New England branch of the N. C. A. at the Meionaon on Thursday, showed that the enthusiastic interest of its members in the work has steadily increased in the year that has passed since our organization at Worcester.

It began with devotional exercises and the reading of the Agent's and Secretary's report. Committees were then appointed on nominations, finances, resolutions and enrollment.

Pres. J. A. Conant made a stirring appeal for funds, which was ably seconded by Bro. George Buck of Putnam, Conn.

Pres. Charles A. Blanchard then made a few interesting remarks on this point, and voiced the unanimous feeling when he said: "Our churches are only open a few hours in the week. All the rest of the time they stand like great coffins. What we want is a man to go from house to house and gather the people together to speak for Christ." He added the lamentable truth that there are tens of thousands in the city of Boston who sympathize in our work against the lodge, but are kept in ignorance by their pastors.

J. S. Perry spoke of the necessity of advertising our meetings wherever held by large posters, which could not fail to strike the eye and irresistibly arrest attention.

The report of the committee on nominations was then adopted, and the old board of officers re-elected for the ensuing year.

Rev. J. H. Brown then made a brief address on the anti-Christian character of the lodge, which had the effect of stirring up a Freemason in the audience, who entered the lists quite boldly, stating that he was both a Freemason and a Christian, and that there was nothing in the teachings of the order which was opposed to the New Testament, adding the usual stock laudations of Masonry, as the grandest institution in the world and many centuries older than Christianity.

Pres. C. A. Blanchard then rose and put the question to him, "When you were initiated, did you swear to have your throat cut?" The suddenness with which the would-be defender of "the ancient handmaid" collapsed, and "declined to answer" this simple inquiry, made him the best witness Bro. Brown could have possibly desired to the truth of his statements.

Elder S. C. Kimball then followed, stating how in New Hampshire fifteen years ago they had to pay fifty dollars to get a reformed Freemason from New York to tell the truth about Masonry, and how not being able to afford such an expense they went to praying that God would raise up a witness nearer home, which prayer had been fulfilled in Rev. J. H. Brown, who, from the time when he was asked to attend the State meeting at Dover and witness against the lodge, has never failed to answer every such summons until the hearts of all the anti-secretists of New England have turned towards him as a chosen instrument especially raised up of God.

Rev. T. E. Leyden, the reformed Catholic evangelist, said that Rome, if she had the power, would not permit such a gathering as this. The boasts made at Baltimore were not idle boasts; she means to control this country. Though he had never been a Mason, he could testify to the great similarity between Masonry and Catholicism. The ban laid on the former by the Romish church he asserted would very soon be taken off. He knew Odd-fellows to-day who were good Catholics. Masonry will be wedded to Romanism as a means to help the latter gain the supreme power in our country.

The meeting then adjourned, but came together again in the afternoon, when Rev. A. A. Hoyt spoke in behalf of mission work and the need of giving more importance to it in the plans and methods of the Association.

A committee of three, consisting of Rev. H. T. Cheever, A. A. Hoyt and A. Lewis, was then nominated by the chair to consult on changing the constitution so as to incorporate in it this especial phase of the work, and report at a future meeting, after which the deliberations were closed, thus ending the second annual gathering of the N. E. C. A. ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Rev. Mr. Davis, of Jersey City, N. J., in an address, said the Fiji Islands were a great improvement over Jersey City, and called earnestly to the former cannibals to come over and help in mission work in America.

—The Moravians, though small in numbers and wealth, have sent out, during the last century, 25,000 missionaries, and expended $300,000 yearly. They have nine mission ships.

—The United Presbyterians have recently sent out thirteen missionaries to foreign fields. Grand farewell meetings were held in New York on the eve of their departure. The whole party sailed on the "City of Rome."

—The Methodist Episcopal Mission in Brazil has 346 members, 7 ordained ministers, 6 candidates for ordination, 3 local preachers, 20 preaching places, 2 schools, and 4 foreign missionary lady teachers. Bishop Taylor has four laborers in Peru, Pernambuco, and Maranhao.

—Rev. D. C. Greene, who has been at work in Spain for twenty years, says it may be questioned whether in all its history Christianity has ever gained, in so short a time, a stronger hold upon the upper classes than in Japan during the last sixteen years.

—Three Chinamen were recently baptized into the Chico, Cal., Baptist church. Some members were strongly opposed, and others, not so bitter, were willing on condition that they were baptized in the creek and not in the baptistry! But they were received without condition.

—Dr. Daniel Dorchester, the statistician, tells us, in the same line, the Christians of the United States in 1850 gave to home and foreign missions one mill in each dollar of their property. In 1860 it had fallen to nine-tenths of a mill, in 1870 to eight-tenths, and in 1880 to six-tenths. Thus the increase of elaborate method, and the decrease of proportionate giving, keep pace together.

—The Brahmins of India, says the Missionary Herald, are familiar with the Scriptures, if for no other reason than that they may oppose their teachings. In the course of a conversation on Christianity a missionary asked a well-known Brahmin in Calcutta whether he had ever read our Bible. The man looked at him and calmly and slowly answered: "I have read the New Testament eighty-three times, and the Old Testament twenty-seven."

—Sam. Small, the well-known evangelist of Atlanta, Ga., has applied to the Protestant Episcopal for ordination as a regular minister of that denomination.

IN BRIEF.

When the vessels now in course of construction are completed the United States will have ten armored vessels, thirteen single-turreted monitors, twenty-one steel cruisers, two dynamite cruisers, an armored ram, one first-class torpedo-boat, and seven iron steamers.

Sam Jones rather took the breath away from Kentuckians while preaching in one of the fashionable churches on "the proper method of raising children." An old blue-grass fellow said: "We raise horses and bring up children." "Yes," retorted Sam, "you raise horses worth $50,000 apiece and bring up children worth about $3 a head."

Speaking of George Washington always reminds me of that good story of how Mr. Evarts told Lord Coleridge, when they were at Mount Vernon, the legend of Washington throwing a dollar across the Rappahannock. "But," objected Coleridge, "the Rappahannock's a broad stream." "Yes," retorted Mr. Evarts, "but you must remember that a dollar went further in those days." At a dinner party, not long ago, Mr. Evarts was chaffed a little about the many stories attributed to him by the newspapers, and incidentally this one was praised as his best. "Oh," said Mr. Evarts, modestly, "I don't say all the good things that are credited to me. Every now and then some anonymous newspaper paragraph says a wittier thing than any of us. Now, what I might have said to Lord Coleridge was that it was not so strange that George Washington threw a dollar across a river since he threw a sovereign across the sea." —Philadelphia Record.

Frederick H. Chapin and Charles P. Howard, of Hartford, Conn., have recently returned from Southern Colorado. In Mancos Canon and its tributary gorges the explored extensive ruins of cliff dwellings, very recently discovered, many of them their own discovery. Among them was one palace or fortress under an overhanging cliff and above a steep incline, almost inaccessible. This palace is 425 feet long, and on the ground floor 124 rooms are traceable. It is eighty feet high and would hold over a thousand people. The structure is not stucco, but mason work with mortar. No metal was found about the buildings. There is no evidence whatsoever of people having lived there or when they left, though the explorers estimate that the ruins are 600 years old or more. They brought home many photographs. The first person to discover any of these ruins in that locality was Richard Wetherill, a ranchman of Mancos, who came upon them last December.

The National Educational Association and Council of Education have decided to hold their next Annual Conventions at St. Paul, Minnesota, July 4 to 11, 1890. Hon. James H. Canfield, of Lawrence, Kansas, is president of the Association. It is expected that there will be twenty thousand teachers present from all points of the Union. The Western Railroads have already agreed to give half rates, plus $2.00 membership fee, to all persons who attend, and Eastern and Southern Roads will make low rates which will be announced at an early date. St. Paul has organized a Local Executive Committee and the most complete arrangements are being made to give the teachers a splendid welcome to the Northwest, and to make the meeting a great success. There will be ample hotel accommodation at reasonable rates. Local excursions are being planned to all important points of interest in the Northwest and on the Pacific coast, which will furnish teachers with the finest summer holiday trips that they ever enjoyed.

The States out of debt are Illinois, Wisconsin, Delaware, West Virginia and Colorado. West Virginia is prohibited by her constitution from going into debt. California and Iowa have no debt to settle, though paying interest on a school fund. Kentucky is nearly free from debt. New York owes $7,000,000; Ohio and Minnesota less than $4,000,000; New Jersey and Kansas less than $2,000,000. Virginia is the most heavily burdened, having a funded debt of over $23,000,-

Take Hood's Sarsaparilla 100 Doses One Dollar

The Chief Reason for the marvellous success of Hood's Sarsaparilla is found in the fact that this medicine actually accomplishes all that is claimed for it. Its real merit has won for Hood's Sarsaparilla a popularity and sale greater than that of any other blood purifier. It cures Scrofula, all Humors, Dyspepsia, etc. Prepared only by C. L. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

000 and an unfunded debt of over $8,000,000. Massachusetts carries the next heaviest debt, over $31,000,000. Next comes Tennessee, $17,000,000; Pennsylvania, $15,000,000; North Carolina, $13,000,000; Louisiana, $12,000,000, and Maryland, $11,000,000. Total indebtedness of all the States is $220,000,000, which is less than one per cent. of their aggregate taxable property. The rate of taxation is heaviest in Nevada, Nebraska and Louisiana. And, though Massachusetts stands second in the size of her debt, she has the lowest rate of taxation in the Union—less than twelve cents per $100.—Chicago News.

RECEIPTS.

FOR ILLINOIS STATE WORK.

Illinois State Agent Hawley acknowledges the receipt of $5.00 each from Pres. C. A. Blanchard, Prof. H. A. Fischer and Prof. Elliott Whipple; and the Treasurer acknowledges the receipt of $10.00 from Isaac Bancroft; $7.13 collected at Elgin convention; $1.00 from Bro. H. B. Owen, and $5.00 from H. L. THE NEW PHOTOGRAPHY.

Photography is certainly a most interesting and delightful study, and the results obtained by means of the improved system of film photography are so beautiful, and the apparatus employed so simple, it is no wonder thousands of our most cultured people are becoming enthusiastic amateurs. The most ingenious, and it seems by far the most popular camera in use among experts and amateurs alike, is the Kodak. It is a complete photographic outfit, with material for making one hundred negatives, and so compact and neat in appearance, that any lady can carry it without making herself in the least conspicuous. The Eastman Dry Plate & Film Co., of Rochester, N. Y., are the makers, to whose advertisement we call attention in another column.

HAVE YOU READ IT?

It will create a sensation and "open" the eyes of every true American to see the "Danger Ahead," and expose the secret of Rome's attack upon our Public Schools. This wonderful book is none other than

THE SECRET INSTRUCTIONS OF THE JESUITS.

Published by an ex-Romanist.

This work is a translation from the Latin of the "Secret Instructions of the Jesuit Society." Its revelations are startling, showing to what depths of deceit the Jesuit priest and all connected with this Order of "Spies" and "Traitors" will descend to accomplish their unholy aims. It is printed in the original Latin with the English translation parallel, thus doing away with the anticipated charge of forgery by those who set a premium on murder and treason.

A history of the Order of Jesuits and their expulsion from every Catholic country is given; also, the reason why the Public Schools must go.

Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by

REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D., (Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and help as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors a gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

ODD-FELLOWSHIP:

ITS HISTORY AND ITS WORK,

by President J. Blanchard. A neat pamphlet with cover. Price, postpaid, five cents. This address, as published in the Cynosure last fall, met with so much approval that the N. C. A. decided to issue it in convenient form for circulation. Until Feb. 1, 1889, any one sending 25 cents and a year's subscription for the Cynosure, may order twelve of the above pamphlets.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Ganadua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freeman to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his name to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT TO IT.

In closing his letter he writes: "I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a consciousness of having been governed through the 'Anti-Masonic excitement' by a sincere desire first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of 'secret societies'."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. (Chicago, National Christian Association, single copy, 5 cents)

Past Master of Keystone Lodge No. 681 Chicago.

Explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the Lodge, thus showing the principles on which the order is founded. By a careful perusal of this work, a more thorough knowledge of the principles of the order can be obtained than by attending the Lodge for years. Every Mason, every person contemplating becoming a member, and even those who are indifferent on the subject, should procure and carefully read this work. An appendix is added of 32 pages, embodying which gives every sign, grip and ceremony of the Lodge together with a brief explanation of each. The work contains 425 pages and is substantially and elegantly bound in cloth. Price, 75 cents.

Freemasonry at a Glance,

HOME AND HEALTH.

WINTER BUTTER.

Careful, experienced housewives, who make the finest of butter during the warm season, signally failed to produce a gilt-edged article through the winter. What is the cause of so many failures, and where lies the remedy? The whole matter is, that amateur butter-makers make no allowance for the weather and changing seasons. They have one way of setting milk, of treating cream, and manipulating butter, and they apply that way to the domestic dairy without alteration in June, in September, and in January. This is a grave error, and it must be rectified in every household before fancy or even fairly good butter can be expected. Cream must be separated from milk, and afterward mature, before it is churned. The time given for attaining that maturity should not be less than twenty-four hours, or more than thirty-six. In summer, the normal atmospheric warmth will ripen cream sufficiently within that time, and, without knowing it, many amateurs have their cream just right at churning-time. As the weather becomes cooler, of course the acid develops more slowly, and artificial heat should be supplied to ripen it within a moderate length of time. This is where most of the domestic butter-makers fail. They make not the least allowance for the cold weather, and keep their cream around in a cool atmosphere until it actually becomes bitter instead of sour. To make fine winter butter, skim as in summer, and then mature the cream by artificial warmth. Put the cream-jar in a room heated to a temperature of 75 deg., and keep it there twenty-four hours. If such a temperature ripens it too quickly, reduce the heat, say 60 deg. or 65 deg. Try in every way to make the condition of the milk, cream and separating butter similar to what its condition would have been in the summer. The science of fine butter-making is not a subtle art that few can comprehend, but it possesses salient points, that all must observe as essential, if they desire to be counted among the successful. Mature cream, churned at the proper temperature (about 60 deg. in summer and 64 in winter), will grain butter hard and firm, and work into a product of the proper consistency and texture. Use no color but such as is known to be reliable, and do not use an excessive quantity of that.—Geo. E. Newell, in American Agriculturist.

HOME-MADE RUGS.

Somebody asked not long ago for directions for making rugs. One pretty style, but which requires a great deal of work, is made by cutting woolen rags into small bits and stringing them on stout linen thread or cord. When enough is prepared, the rag-carpet weaver will weave them into a rug which will be thick, heavy, durable, serviceable and good-looking, and which will resemble somewhat in texture the Smyrna rugs of the stores. Very nearly the same effect is obtained by cutting flannel or woolen rags in strips three-quarters of an inch wide—bias if possible. Then, with a coarse needle and stout linen thread, gather the strips lengthwise through the center, pushing them up close on the thread. The rags are not sewed. These are woven as above. The work is not quite so slow as where the rags are cut in bits before stringing, and the rug looks equally as well. The easiest way to arrange a pattern is to have a border of black a quarter of a yard wide at each end, and the center hit or miss, with as much bright color as possible. The ends can be finished with a fringe as described below, and it will be found an improvement.

Another method is to cut woolen rags into strips three-quarters of an inch wide, keeping light and dark separate, and sew like carpet rags. Knit on wooden needles or pins, in garter stitch, in sections. The center section is of dark rags, three-quarters of a yard long and a quarter of a yard wide. Then knit twelve blocks, six light and six dark, each a quarter of a yard square. Arrange them by placing a light block at each end of the center strip; this will bring a dark block at each corner, and alternate the blocks to fill in the sides. Sew the sections together firmly on the wrong side, line it, and border with a plain strip in garter stitch, or with a fringe an eighth of a yard wide made of inch wide strips of heavy woolen cloth sewed on firmly between the linen and rug. To make such a rug is rather hard on the hands, but when done it is very serviceable; it is a good way to use up the pieces of men's clothing one does not want to put in her carpet.

"SEEING IS BELIEVING."

Our readers must have noticed the advertisement in another column of the Gladstone Lamp. It promises a good deal, and we confess we at first thought its claims extravagant; but we were tempted to buy one of the lamps and we now cheerfully concede the claims made for it. In short for a fine, brilliant, yet elegant light, it surpasses anything we ever saw in the lamp line.

Miss Frances E. Willard says she does not see how a better lamp could be made than "The Gladstone." Mr. Paige, the busy editor of Hall's Journal of Health, says of it:

"The Gladstone' is by far the best reading lamp of which the writer has any practical knowledge. Being often obliged to consume the greater part of the night in editorial work, he is able to state that for ease and comfort in his work, he has found no light equal to it; nor did he find in all Europe its equal as an illuminating instrument."

The Gladstone Lamp Co., 10 East 14th street, New York, are the manufacturers of these justly famous lamps. They make a specialty of filling mail orders to all sections of the country. Illustrated catalogues of styles, etc., may be had by applying to them.

IN THE

Christian Church.

A pamphlet of 52 pages, by Chas. A. S. Temple.

The following from Rev. H. H. Hinman shows his estimate of its contents:

"I have read with great interest 'Pagan Counterfeits in the Christian Church' by Chas. A. S. Temple. I regard the subject discussed as important, and its presentation both able and timely. There is a most manifest drift in all our Protestant denominations towards unauthorized ritualism and the substitution of human inventions in place of the simplicity of the Gospel, as given by Christ and his apostles. In calling attention to this tidal wave of formalism, the author has conferred a lasting benefit on the church; as of Protestantism."

FARM NOTES.

WHAT IS FARMING?

It is something more than staying on a farm. It is something more than skinning the soil. It is more than selling hay or potatoes, and bulky crops unanimalized. Farming is a business, a profession, a practical and scientific operation whereby the soil is used for profit, and improved under the operation. The processes of nature must be understood and worked in harmony, with the chemistry of the earth and air. The processes of the elements must be understood, if not in their technical terms and language, in that sensible understanding, that common-sense way, that their own advantage and capabilities may be turned to best accounts. The lawyer works by law and precedent, the physician works by symptoms and indications, the merchant by rules and observation, the mechanic by measure and capacities. The farmer must work by all rules, observation and experiment. He must be a practical lawyer, doctor, merchant and mechanic of the vegetable, the animal and the trade world about him. He must be a skilled workman in the productive, operative and commercial circles in which his business lies and his sphere of circulation extends.

There is a quiet about the life of a farmer, and a hope of a serene old age, that no other business or profession can promise. A professional man is doomed sometimes to feel that his powers are waning. He is doomed to see younger and stronger men pass him in the race of life. He looks forward to an old age of intellectual mediocrity, but the farmer goes, as it were, into partnership with trees and flowers—he breathes the sweet air of fields. There is no constant and frightful strain upon his mind. His nights are filled with sleep and rest. He watches his flocks and herds as they feed upon the green hilly slopes. He hears the pleasant rain fall upon the waving corn, and the trees he planted in his south field rustle about him as he plants others for the children yet to be.

TEACH THE BOYS TO USE TOOLS.

Last year a friend of mine, who has three boys, selected a chest of tools as a premium for collecting clubs for an agricultural paper, and surprised and delighted the lads with it. They went to work and fitted themselves up a workshop in the loft over the wagon-shed, and there they contrive to spend many an hour pleasantly and profitably. My friend said to me, "I am surprised to see how proficient the boys are becoming in the use of their tools. Why, they have made us many little articles for use about the house and barn, to more than pay for the cost of the tools, if I had bought them for cash, and if they keep on thus, a carpenter will be unnecessary here." This experience can be repeated in any family where there are boys, to the satisfaction and benefit of all concerned. Give the boys a chance to show what they can do. A set of tools will keep them busy on rainy days and odd spells, and out of mischief. Every success will encourage them in larger undertakings, and quite unconsciously they will develop a knowledge of mechanics which will be practical and useful to themselves and others all their lives, and almost every day, the year round, on the farm, about the house, anywhere, and everywhere. The cost of a set of tools good enough for them to experiment with, is small, and cannot be invested to better account. If you cannot spare the money, encourage them to get up a club for a paper giving premium chests of tools. If they do not quite succeed, help by contributing a little cash for the difference. The investment will come back before you know it. Most farmers having more expensive tools, do not like to have boys use them for fear of possible damages, and they grow up almost entirely ignorant of saw, and plane, and chisel. Let them have tools of their own, and show them how to take proper care of them. Teach them all you know about them, and set them at little easy jobs. When they do these well, let them know their work is appreciated, and they will become ambitious to do still better

WHY COUGH,

WHEN a few doses of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral will relieve you? Try it. Keep it in the house. You are liable to have a cough at any time, and no other remedy is so effective as this world-renowned preparation. No household, with young children, should be without it. Scores of lives are saved every year by its timely use.

Amanda B. Jenner, Northampton, Mass., writes: "Common gratitude impels me to acknowledge the great benefits I have derived for my children from the use of Ayer's most excellent Cherry Pectoral. I had lost two dear children from croup and consumption, and had the greatest fear of losing my only remaining daughter and son, as they were delicate. Happily, I find that by giving them Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, on the first symptoms of throat or lung trouble, they are relieved from danger, and are becoming robust, healthy children."

"In the winter of 1885 I took a bad cold which, in spite of every known remedy, grew worse, so that the family physician considered me incurable, supposing me to be in consumption. As a last resort I tried Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and, in a short time, the cure was complete. Since then I have never been without this medicine. I am fifty years of age, weigh over 180 pounds, and attribute my good health to the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral."—G. W. Youker, Salem, N. J.

"Last winter I contracted a severe cold, which by repeated exposure, became quite obstinate. I was much troubled with hoarseness and bronchial irritation. After trying various medicines, without relief, I at last purchased a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. On taking this medicine, my cough ceased almost immediately, and I have been well ever since."—Rev. Thos. B. Russell, Secretary Holston Conference and P. E. of the Greenville District, M. E. C., Jonesboro, Tenn.

work, and take pride in it; so will you, when you come to see that they are able to do what you have heretofore depended on outside labor for. One of the most convenient things about the house or farm, is a man who can use tools.—Eben E. Rexford in American Agriculturist.

Secretary Rusk has received a report from the Agricultural Experiment Station in southwest Kansas, near Garden City, announcing that it has been demonstrated that the arid lands of the West can be made productive without the aid of irrigation. Experiments at the station named proved that the desert land unirrigated will produce plentiful supplies of grasses and forage plants, including sorghum, and it is believed that wheat, corn and potatoes will grow equally as well. Only two things were necessary to accomplish these results—first, the ground was pulverized deeply to make a bed for holding the water that falls in rain; and, second, the planted surface was covered after the sowing of the first crop with matted straw to keep the loam from blowing away and with it the seed. Subsequent crops will require no straw, for the reason that the matted roots will keep the dry earth from being blown away by the high winds.

It is estimated that the number of horses in the United States is 12,000,000. Illinois is said to contain one-tenth of that number.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Pres. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents. Paper cover, 35 cents.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; OR FREEMASONRY SELF-CONVICTED. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. 207 pages. Postpaid, 40 cents each.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. 15 cents each.

Judge Whitney's Defense before THE GRAND LODGE OF ILLINOIS. Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. H. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each.

History of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. 25 cents each.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' LETTERS on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Price, cloth, $1.00. Paper, 35 cents.

Hon. Thurlow Weed on the Morgan ABDUCTION. This is the legally attested statement of this eminent Christian journalist and statesman concerning the unlawful seizure and confinement of Capt. Morgan in Canandaigua jail, his removal to Fort Niagara and subsequent drowning in Lake Ontario. 5 cents each.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene. In cloth, 75 cents. Paper covers, 40 cents.

Grand Lodge Masonry, its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Pres't J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion. A clear, cutting argument against the lodge, from a Christian standpoint. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. W. P. McNary, pastor United Presbyterian Church, Bloomington, Ind. This is a very clear, thorough, candid and remarkably concise Scriptural argument on the character of Freemasonry. Five cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Stearns' Inquiry into the Nature and Tendency of FREEMASONRY. With an Appendix treating on the truth of Morgan's Exposition and containing remarks on various points in the character of Masonry, and a Dialogue on the necessity of exposing the lodge. 338 pages; cloth, 60 cents each; per dozen, $5.00. Paper covers, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.00.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

The funeral of Mrs. Scott-Lord, sister-in-law of President Harrison, was held Thursday in the Church of the Incarnation at Washington, and the interment took place at Rock Creek Cemetery. President Harrison, Vice President Morton, members of the Cabinet, and many prominent persons attended the services.

COUNTRY.

Passengers on the Canadian through express had a narrow escape from death Saturday. While crossing the mountains two coaches left the track and fell over the bank. The coupling held, and the balance of the train kept the cars from falling several hundred feet. All of the passengers were rescued.

Joseph G. Ditman, the paper manufacturer of Philadelphia, and also President of the Quaker City National Bank, is missing. Wednesday night his carriage was found wrecked on the bank of the river in Fairmount Park, and it is feared that a runaway occurred and that Mr. Ditman has been drowned.

E. N. Dickerson, the noted patent lawyer, who had been leading counsel for the Bell Telephone Company, died Wednesday night in his residence at New York.

Wednesday afternoon David Dillon, an employe of the firm of Funch, Edye & Co., of New York, went down the bay with a companion to board the incoming bark Marie. His companion, Transgaard, boarded the bark, and the sail-boat in which Dillon remained was taken in tow. The line parted, and Dillon's boat was driven out to sea before a gale which was blowing off shore at the time. Nothing has been seen of him since.

Receiver Dyer made a demand last week on the Mormon church attorneys for the church property as follows: Thirty thousand sheep, valued at $2 per head; $75,000 worth of cattle; $27,000 in notes for stock in a theater; $27,000 Deseret Telegraph Company stock; $100,000 worth of coal lands. These were surrendered, making his recovery of church property in excess of land as follows: In addition to the above, gas stock $75,000, tithing yard $50,000, Gardo house $50,000, historian's office $20,000, Temple Square, not valued; gas stock dividends $4,000. Settlement of Monday, $157,666; church farm $150,000; a total of $790,666.

The remains of Jefferson Davis lay in state in the council chamber at the City Hall, New Orleans, La., Dec. 7. It is a significant fact that Confederate flags formed a part of the ornaments which graced his coffin.

The Masonic press has of late been claiming Hon. William E. Gladstone as a member of the lodge of which the Prince of Wales is the head. But the English papers are honoring the old statesman, for having written but three letters during the many years of his public life with the purpose that they should be secret, and then only for the time being. No ordinary Mason can show such a record, even in ordinary life, and our Masonic politicians—but enough.

The good citizens who are urging the organization of a new party whose main plank shall be the enforcement of the laws we have, will not read with equanimity the report from Congress last Wednesday. On that day the House opened the floodgates, and every man with a bill started it through. In all, 1,064 bills were presented. They are said to cover almost every subject of legislation. Over a dozen are based on the Blair education bill, and twenty are for the free coinage of silver. Nearly every member of the tobacco-growing States had a measure for the repeal of the tobacco tax. The tariff was touched on all sides; while nearly two hundred asked for the erection of federal buildings in different cities. Truly the efforts of our legislators to earn their salaries is most discouraging to tax-payers.

A very appropriate topic for discussion at Forefather's Day celebration last week at Dr. Goodwin's church in this city. Dr. J. L. Withrow of the Third Presbyterian church spoke on the "Puritan Sabbath; How to save it or get something better." He said he did not want the Puritan Sabbath as it existed in the imagination of its enemies, but desired it as it actually existed. "The Puritan Sabbath meant decency, quiet, rest, and religious observance, and nothing better is possible." Dr. Lawrence of the Second Baptist church followed. Then Mr. Bartlett, a business man, spoke, and Judge Grinnell, of anarchist trial celebrity, closed, saying that the laws could be enforced in Chicago. Since 1845 the law had ordered saloons shut up, and if a fair opportunity was given to the voters of the city three-fourths of the ballots would sustain the law. Let us pray then for some Moses to lead us out of our Egyptian bondage to these infamies.

An Alabama representative introduced a bill last week to incorporate a new lodge by national authority. It is to be called the "Military Order of America." By its means the proposer hopes to bring about a fraternal association between those who were engaged in the war of the Rebellion "to care for him who shall have borne the battle, and for his widow and orphans, especially to aid sick and distressed companions, and the widows and orphans of deceased companions, and strengthen the ties of reunion, sympathy, valor, and patriotism between those who were enemies in war and are friends in peace." The order is to be non-sectarian and non-political, of course. Nothing is said in the dispatches about its lodge character, and we hope we may be mistaken in this respect. But the fact that every such affair, for which there is absolutely no use under the sun, gets as quickly as possible under a lodge shell, justifies the opinion. Years ago the Odd-fellows re-united the severed country. The Knight Templars have done it over and over again; and how many other "fraternities" have tried "their prentice hand" on the job we know not. Their success has been adequate to the hollow deception of their pretenses.

The body of Franklin B. Gowen was found dead in Wormley's hotel, Washington, a few days since. It was hastily removed, and the verdict of suicide generally accepted. Mr. Gowen was one of the leading lawyers of the country. He was president of the Reading railroad a dozen years ago and broke up the Mollie Maguires, personally appearing in court to plead against them. He was in good health and circumstances, and no cause for suicide can be proved. Mr. Anistett of the Treasury department was some years ago District Attorney for the eastern district of Pennsylvania. He says: "I myself believe that Mr. Gowen was murdered. I was a prosecuting officer at the time the Molly Maguires were tried. Twenty of these men were hanged. Many others were sentenced to terms of imprisonment ranging from ten to fifteen years. Some have been released within the last two years. That oaths have been registered by some of these men to kill Gowen many people believe. He knew this. He was as brave as a lion. Even if he did buy a pistol, he did not buy it to defend himself. Mr. Gowen's whole life gives emphatic denial to the assertion that there was anything in his nature which would lead him to perish by his own hand." It is moreover reported that an ex-body master of a Mollie lodge holds to the same opinion.

The city of Washington has been called one of the best Sabbath-keeping cities in the country; but there is no law relating to the observance of the day in the District of Columbia. The city commissioners have asked Congress for such a law, President Harrison has approved the request, and active efforts will be made to secure the passage of a bill to this end. Among measures for Sabbath legislation that will be soon introduced in the House of Representatives is one prepared by the Sabbath Union, entitled "A bill to secure to all persons their right to a day of rest." It provides that it shall be unlawful for any person, corporation, agent, servant or employee of any person or corporation, or in the service of the United States, District of Columbia or Territories, to perform any secular labor or business, or to cause the same to be performed by any person in their employment on the Sabbath day, except works of necessity and mercy. Nor shall it be lawful for any person or corporation to receive any pay for labor performed in violation of this act. The punishment for violation of the proposed law is fixed at not less than ten nor more than one hundred dollars. To any person, however, who conscientiously observes any other day of the week than the first as a day of rest, the provisions of the act will not apply.

GOD BLESS THE HAND THAT LABORS.

BY VICTORIA ALEXANDRA BUCK.

God bless the hand that labors!
The hand that's brave and strong;
That's browned and scarred by honest toil,
Yet scorns to do a wrong;
That smites the anvil till it rings;
That wields the sword and pen;
And yet does not disdain to clasp
The hands of fellow men!

God bless the hand that labors!
The hand that will not yield.
Though tempted every day and hour,
On life's dark battle field.
The hand that lifts God's banner high
Where bullets fall like rain,
Where dead and dying thickest lie
Upon the battle plain.

God bless the hand that labors!
The kind and gentle hand,
That smooths the thorns that strew the way
That leads to Canaan's land;
That guides our feeble steps along
To paths that lead above;
The hand that's clasped in yours or mine
In friendship, or in love!

God bless the hand that labors!
That, tireless, through the day,
Toils ceaselessly and bravely on Till falls the shadows grey;
That toils until the stars come out
To glimmer in the west,
And then is clasped in blissful dreams
Upon a peaceful breast.

God bless the hand that labors!
The hand that grasps the sword,
And girds the armor on to fight
The battles of the Lord.
The hand that's often clasped in prayer,
That's free from stain of blood;
The hand that's lifted high, to point
The pilgrim to his God!

CATHOLIC MOVEMENT IN THE SOUTH.

The readers of the Cynosure have doubtless seen notice of the efforts of the Roman Catholics to diffuse their doctrines among the colored people of the South. Schools have been opened in various sections; even Arkansas—so long neglected by all denominations—is now blessed (?), it is said, with five colored Catholic schools at points where colored people predominate. They scruple not to take every advantage. Protestants seem to fear, Providence appears to favor, their efforts.

A review of the movement in Pine Bluff, Ark., will no doubt give an idea of the methods employed at other points in the South. Here Presbyterians established a school, "Richard Allen Institute." This school enrolled over two hundred pupils last year, and the prospects for this year are equally bright. In speaking of this the Catholic priest said, "Their success was an inspiration to me and to those with me." So they organized a board with men chosen for their influence. The county judge, the city mayor, a prominent lawyer, a noted planter, and two colored men, the most influential in this section, one a prominent politician, the other the wealthiest colored man in the State, and both are liquor dealers. These with the priest form the board.

To give this movement impetus a catch name is given to it, "Industrial Colored Institute."

To give it a non-sectarian tone they declare that "no religion shall be taught."

To make it forever Catholic, "the school shall be conducted by the Sisters of Charity of Nazareth."

The secretary lacks the chief qualification of a scribe, ability to read and write. The priest is the treasurer.

The school opened with less than a half dozen and its friends rallied to its support. The colored men, urged on by determination to succeed, canvassed in its favor; the priest was nigh ubiquitous; the fare on the street cars was reduced for pupils attending it; the influence of the press was secured; articles in its favor appeared from editors in heart opposed to the movement. Thus political influence, the power of the press and a great portion of the liquor element were and are seemingly on their side. Providence seemed to favor their efforts. Charges were made against some of the public school teachers of a serious nature. Early in the school year one of the public school houses was burnt down, the act of an incendiary. The public school board displayed commendable energy and another building was secured. The 2nd of December, 1889, the public school house, erected by the American Association, yielded to devouring flames and is ashes. Shall children take to the streets, or other than public schools? Thus Providence seems to favor them, and their school roll has reached ninety-six the close of the third month.

It is needless to say what effect their school has on the children—non-sectarian as it is claimed—a number attend the church or Sabbath-school, and are learning prayers, creed and catechism; they grow warm to their ways, attached to their customs; even the little ones call the teachers "sister," and the priest "father." Boasts and threats have emanated from their color-partisans who are confident of the future supremacy of the Roman Catholic church. "Woe worth the day" when colored people turn Roman Catholics. They will follow designing leaders with a "zeal not according to knowledge," whithersoever they list. "More attention to the colored people of the South," is their intention blazoned by the Catholic Congress at Baltimore.

Protestants of the North are not ignorant of their devices, and are fully aware of the intentions of this movement. The Protestants of the South are equally wise, yet both seem to stand with arms unnerved and weak; no trumpet blast arouses to action. Will they, dare they, lacking neither bows nor arrows, turn faintly back in this day of battle? If words are uttered they lack power and fervor, but voices are hushed, and they act like one afraid to speak. If attention is yet turned to these points so strongly assailed in Arkansas, the State could yet be saved to Protestantism. A few years and the opportunity is lost forever. What shall we do? What should we do, "but strengthen the weak hands and confirm the feeble knees." "Make strong those places already established and establish more." "Be wise to-day; 'tis madness to defer." "Come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty."

NO VALUE NO RIGHTS.

BY ELDER NATHAN CALLENDER.

With this self-evident proposition, I start out against certain false claims. We are justly jealous of any interference with "inalienable rights." What are they? They are something in which value inheres. We could formulate thus:

1. Where there is no value there can be no human right.
2. There is no value in alcohol, as a beverage.
3. Therefore, there can be no right vested in alcohol as a beverage.

Now which of these propositions shall I assail? The major proposition is self-evident. How about the minor? Can it be confronted with any hope of success? Who of any reliability among all the physicians will say that alcohol is needed in any form as a drink? Who that is at all versed in physiology will say it? Not one. No man of reputation of any profession will say any such thing. Would any man of any reputation for intelligence honestly testify to the utility of alcoholic beverages on a witness stand? Such a man does not exist. Then by the universal sense of mankind there is no value in alcohol as a drink, in any form whatever. Take any man, when not maddened by drink, alone, and he will concede the truth of our second term at once. Again and again we have done this with but one result.

It is totally unnecessary to go to the proof of the diabolical effects of the use of alcoholic beverages. The proof is everywhere in a most alarming degree. They light the fires of hell wherever they go. We cannot see how Satan could crave a more genuine hell, or a hotter one, than the saloon can make by the ten thousand. He needs no brimstone, nor fire, outside the saloon beverages.

Then what of the conclusion? No human right inheres in alcoholic beverages. Have we not gained the case? Should we plead our inalienable right to cholera, yellow fever, or small-pox, our plea would be better founded, or as well at least. Such a right would be quarantined, not licensed, but for reasons far less cogent. Does any law license men to rights known to be inalienable? License men to think their own thoughts, with a thousand-dollar license fee!—to hear and to see, to breathe and to eat!—why not? These things are quite necessary and valuable. How about a Vice President taking out license to sell alcohol at the seat of government? Oh, that is all right. He is a representative man of the temperance party. But, hold! we must not "speak evil of the rulers" of our people. Are we going back to the days of Belshazzar? He drank wine with a thousand of his lords in the sacred vessels of the Temple; not in Jerusalem, but in Babylon. If our rulers, who want to foster riotous and drunken customs, would get out of our Jerusalem down to Babylon, or to Louisville, we would contribute to their change of quarters. Shall we not concede to the rulers the sacred (?) right to help debauch our capital? Certainly, if it be a right, then let our best men have it.

THE THURSDAY LECTURES IN OBERLIN.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

From the time when the memory of man "runneth not to the contrary," it has been the custom here to observe the old New England practice of a Thursday afternoon lecture. Originally, and among the Puritans, the lecture was a preparation for the Sabbath; then it came to be preparatory to the Lord's Supper, but now is devoted to almost any topic of science or morals. The lecture of Dec. 12 was duplicated, one from 4:30 to 5:30, the other from 8:15 to 9:30, leaving room for the usual church prayer meetings from 7 to 8.

The first lecture was by Professor Jewett, who ably fills the chair of chemistry. He is the son of the distinguished temperance lecturer and writer, Dr. Charles Jewett, and inherits his father's abhorrence to the maddening drink. He taught in the government school in Japan. His subject was "The Adulteration of Liquors," including wine and beer. It was replete with scientific and statistical information, and rich in the hidden lore of the men whose fortunes are made by mingling strong drink. He described how the poison of alcohol was supplemented by other poisons in the manufacture of whiskies, so that more than twice as much is made from the same amount of grain as was possible forty years ago. He told us of the nux vomica, prussic acid, strychnine, belladonna, stramonium, tobacco, fusil oil, and divers other poisons which go into their composition, so that much that is made becomes terribly destructive. He traced the origin of hog-cholera to the time when distillers began to use strychnine in the manufacture of whisky, and gave numerous instances where both beasts and men had been speedily killed. He told us how a single gallon of wine from the valleys of Portugal became two gallons of "pure old Port" before it left Oporto. The importer made it into five gallons, the wholesale dealer into ten, and before it finally reached the consumer, it became eighty gallons, composed of water, drugs and whisky. He reprobated the practice of physicians recommending "wine," when the slightest attention would show that it had scarcely a trace of the juice of the grape. He told us of his analysis of whisky bought in Elyria, our county seat, which was full of other poisons besides the alcohol; and he showed that the great bulk of the "California wine" used in the States had never been so far West as the Missouri river. The lecture, though statistical, was far from being dry, and was received with great applause.

The second lecture was by Hon. J. G. Wooley, the distinguished Minnesota Prohibitionist. His subject was "The Moral Chemistry of Alcohol." He spoke briefly of its chemical characteristics, and then described its moral influences. In power of illustration and burning eloquence I have rarely or never heard him surpassed. No sketch of his lecture would be just. Even his Scriptural reading was wonderfully impressive.

I need not say that both of these lecturers are earnest Prohibitionists. It was the logical and necessary deduction from both lectures, and when the last speaker called on the great congregation to join him in a war of extermination on the drink traffic, almost the entire audience arose. The people of Oberlin, however they may differ as to methods, are the unchanging friends of prohibition. For nearly sixty years they have proved its beneficent influence here, and they would be false to every philanthropic principle if they did not seek its adoption throughout the world.

REFORMERS AND SPECIALISTS.

BY M. N. BUTLER.

Southern Baptist:—"When one ought to speak and yet remains silent, silence is absolutely sinful. When one might speak to advantage, and yet refrains from doing so, silence is culpable, and sometimes it is even cruel."

Chicago Interior:—"It has been remarked for the encouragement of reformers that when one is swimming against the tide of public opinion he is certainly not a dead fish, such a fish floats with it."

President John Quincy Adams said: "No vote can be lost or thrown away when it is cast against corrupt political parties, or to express desire for a reform in government. Always vote for a principle though you have to vote alone, and you can cherish the sweet reflection that your vote is never lost."

Church Advocate:—"John Brown, at Harper's Ferry, was the prince of fanatics only to be canonized afterward. William Lloyd Garrison, John G. Whittier and Wendell Phillips, a half century ago were the crazed and erratic spokesmen of the dispensation of fool-hardiness, and now their fanaticism is part of the national Constitution. Time has shown that they were wise while the public was crazy."

But we pass to notice a sentence from the Religious Telescope, to-wit: "Men who give themselves to hobbies rarely become influential for good." That is just about as "clear as mud." What a grand intellect must have framed the thought! To push a given theme or subject, however important, is to call forth the thread-bare cry of "hobbyist." The term "hobby-rider," as now used, is the one who sticks to his theme or subject. The jack-at-all-trades regards the specialist as a hobby-rider. Thus some men make a hobby of politics. They talk, speak and write politics. Some men pray morning, noon and night, and obtrude the Scriptures, their sermons, their particular theological creed upon a gainsaying and unbelieving world. They thrust their teachings and doctrines upon the people from the pulpit and through their religious journals. Doctors of divinity are paid by the year to maintain certain doctrines and creeds. To fire a column and a third at Catholicism is all proper, but to turn the gun on oath-bound lodgers, the pagan despotic enemy of Christianity and good government, is to mount a hobby. Call for active, efficient workers for Christ, and when able men cope with the giant evil that is rending the United Brethren church, and devote their whole energy and attention to the work in hand, the great doctor of divinity points them out as "hobby-riders" to all the idlers and drones, and hurrahs for the evil that patriots loathe and abhor. Reformers are hobby-riders. The editor of the Telescope is not a reformer; but he has his hobby just as regular. It is to surrender the U. B. church to the lodge. That one thing is his hobby.

J. Weaver in the same paper, Dec. 4, says: "The matter as it now stands before the church, the world and the courts, is whittled down to a few little technicalities. There is not a fundamental doctrine or a fundamental principle in church polity at stake,—nothing but a few little technicalities."

That is, it is nothing to go back on the records of nearly half a century. To repudiate the teachings, the discipline, the ringing resolutions, the prayers and the sermons of all these years is a mere insignificant trifle. It is bad enough in politics to see a man eat crow, and traitorize to right principles, but to see a church and its bishops and deluded following lost to all sense of manhood and honor is a spectacle to make angels weep. Before God and patriots and true United Brethren it is more than a mere technicality to fellowship and commune with lodge idolatry and despotism. Men who can thus condone and compromise with the worst elements in society and government, deserve the hearty pity and even contempt of all sincere people. No true American should send his children to be educated in liberal U. B. schools. Send your boys and girls to school where un-American, anti-republican elements are not allowed; where the monarchy-aping, oath-bound orders are shown up in their wickedness and evil tendencies. There are Wheaton, College Springs, Hartsville, Philomath, and hundreds of other points where the youth will be taught Americanism and warned against organized deception, double-dealing, conspiracy and treason. Loyal United Brethren who do not style their principles on this line "mere little technicalities," should redouble their efforts to overthrow the lodge that has closed in its mortgage on those leaders, and now owns them, soul and body.

We are glad to see the renewed activity among the "old guard" in the church; and the true church, by standing as one man against lodgery, may yet become a grand power for Christianity and good government. Lodgery has the liberal branch by the throat, leaders, deluded followers, schools, Telescope, and all. Their testimony is silenced. "Cry aloud, spare not, lift up thy voice like a trumpet, and show my people their transgressions, and the house of Jacob their sins."

A CALL FOR RECRUITS FOR CHRISTIAN RESCUE WORK.

BY J. F. AVERY, PASTOR MARINERS' TEMPLE, NEW YORK.

Recruits are wanted for voluntary service in connection with mission work. Lukewarm, pampered Christians need not apply. We fear they would not enjoy our drill ground. But whole-souled, wise-headed, large-hearted Christians could find that spiritual exercise which profiteth much. They could join our band of outside and inside singers, or unite with our band ready to do anything, and all and always for Christ. The company is at present very small, and specially needs recruits. The compeller division is far from full. Their duty is not to complain that their first invitation did not avail. They have commandment, while there is ample room and Gospel provision, to go and "compel them to come in," to bring just such a class of persons as are very plentiful, but who need a little active persuasion before they will believe that salvation is free.

Let the intending-to-be Christian workers ponder over the following words from an old sun-dial. They are words we do well to ever keep in mind:

"Ere many days some other one
Will in my place be found.
Another's eye, instead of mine,
God's glory view around;
Another's ear will listen
To human wail and song;
Another's heart will joy in right,
And hate abounding wrong;
Another's feet will walk that path,
Which specially is mine;
Another's lips will guide men's thought,
Their future course define;
Another's hands will do the work
I have to do to-day;
O may I fill my station well,
Ere God call me away!"

We have no room for vain boasters, and find no needs be to special recruiting for one-thing-to-day and another-thing-to-morrow professors. When found out they are always gladly, if not hastily, dismissed from active temple service. We give them as a future motto, "No man can serve two masters." Christ and Satan have no fellowship. But ever remember we most earnestly desire to do good unto all men. Sinners as well as saints are invited not only to always come to Jesus, but also to the helps and spiritual home life he enables us to offer at the Mariners' Temple, Chatham Square.

THE BRAZILIAN REVOLUTION.

[From the Chicago Daily News.]

The more the Brazilian revolution is studied—or rather the news thereof which is permitted to filter through a rigid censorship of the press—the more one is convinced that it is a purely military affair.

It is true that a few dilettante political agitators seized upon the opportunity of the military revolt in order to proclaim a so-called republic. Yet even in this they were finally overslaughed by the military under the lead of Gen. Da Fonseca, commonly called Deodora.

The inspirer of the proclamation of the republic was Jose de Patrocino, a popular agitator and journalist. He called a meeting at the city hall. At this a resolution declaring a republic was adopted by acclamation. On this, however, a self-constituted military junta, under the lead of Gen. Deodora, stepped in, and henceforth took the direction of affairs.

It is significant that the bravest man in the opposition to the movement—indeed, the only brave man—is the late minister of marine, Barac de Ladario, who served for several years in the United States Navy. He fell with five bullet wounds, but it is thought will not die of them. His name is even now mentioned in Rio de Janeiro with universal admiration.

A most ominously significant fact in determining the hollowness of a republic dictated by purely military revolutionists is that one of the regiments which led it—the 1st cavalry—had long enjoyed the distinction of furnishing the emperor's escort. Three or four years ago the officers of this regiment became involved in a personal quarrel with the editor of a notorious sheet called the Corsario, and eventually had the man assassinated by a party of cut-throats under the windows of the central police station, where he had fled for protection. Is not the appearance of such a regiment in the foremost ranks of the proclaimers of the republic but a poor promise of its future?

An intelligent correspondent of the New York Tribune says that the common people are undecided and unprepared for popular suffrage. They mistake its meaning. A republic is almost wholly associated in their minds with socialism.

If those who have seized the reins of power have the confidence of the people they have a mighty queer way of exhibiting it. The new regime permits no word of adverse criticism by press or people, allows no telegraphic messages to be sent abroad, and altogether acts as if it were the Czar of Russia who had seized the helm of state and run the ship without reference to any other than his own supreme will. The latest reports from Brazil are to the effect that the new government is holding itself in power by the use of strong repressive measures. Apparently it is not at all certain of the support of the people. It has also become apparent that the revolt was due more to the unpopularity of the Princess Izabel, the regent, than to any other cause.

Roman Catholic newspapers of this country express the opinion that the imperial family was overthrown because it was too much under the influence of the church of Rome to please the people, and that the Freemasons led the revolt. This seems to be a very reasonable explanation. The Princess Izabel, who was the real ruler of the country, and who was expected to become the empress soon through the abdication of her father, is known to have relied on Jesuit counselors to an extent which caused great dissatisfaction among the people. It is not unnatural that the Freemasons, and others who dreaded Jesuit influence in the temporal affairs of the nation, should organize a revolt against the imperial family. While it is not likely that Dom Pedro or Izabel will ever rule Brazil again, there may be wars of factions in the new republic which will cause great distraction.

John Randolph, of Roanoke, once said: "The only men I ever knew well, ever approached closely, whom I did not discover to be happy, are sincere believers of the Gospel, and conform their lives, as far as the nature of man can permit, to its precepts."

Flatter not thyself in thy faith to God, if thou wantest charity for thy neighbor; and think not thou hast charity for thy neighbor, if thou wantest faith in God—when they are both wanting: they are both dead, if once divided.

JESUIT POLICY.

ADDRESS OF REV. J. J. LANSING, OF SALEM SQUARE CHURCH, WORCESTER, AT THE BOSTON CONGRESS.

In the year 1534 Ignatius Loyola formed a society with sixteen other men for the purpose of extending the power of the papacy. In 1540 the Pope of Rome gave the new order his patronage by which means the society had a recognized life in the Romish church. This Society of Jesus had many principles in its formation which are commendable, notwithstanding in a very short time its practices were such that it came to be detested, and governments were compelled to banish it from their borders. Portugal, first of all, expelled the society in 1759; others have followed from time to time, even down to 1880, and among the rest the Pope himself was obliged to declare an edict against them. But they have regained their power and influence until now they completely rule in the councils of the Romish church. The name Jesuit reminds us of the sweetest name that was ever sung. But the principles and practices of this society are, on the whole, the very opposite of the character and teachings of the Lord Jesus.

It is a small society, less now in number even than when the Pope abolished the order in 1773. There are, as near as we can determine, about 8,500 members. Of this number 3,500 are priests, 2,500 lay brothers, and 2,500 educators. This comparatively small body of men, though widely distributed, yet have such power by means of their secret organization that their influence in Europe, and especially in America, is exciting the gravest fears of every Christian and patriot who takes the trouble to learn of their operations.

The General of the Jesuits, or, as he is sometimes called, the Black Pope, is the head of the order. All its members are subject to him, and must yield absolute obedience. Among the few things Loyola wrote, was a letter on obedience, in which he says the obedience of members of the order should be so absolutely passive that one should be like a dead body moved only by the will of another, or like a staff in the hands of an old man, or like a crucifix in the hands of a worshiper. This obedience comprises the most absolute mental compliance. The members must not think a thought even contrary to the will of the head of their order.

In Steinmetz is described the method of instructing a novice. He teaches that a Jesuit is not to inquire, only obey. The superior takes all moral responsibility in regard to results. He really takes the place of God to those under him in the order. A man thus obligated becomes a moral monster! He has no conscience, for all responsibility is referred to those above him. The lowest Jesuit is only a machine, a being without moral restraint. The structure of the society is such that all, from the lowest to the highest, are under the most careful scrutiny by the central power at Rome. The spy system is inculcated as one of the duties of members of the order. They are enjoined to have espionage upon one another, and report any negligence or disobedience. It may easily be imagined what absolute control the superior must have when the most rigid vows of obedience and secrecy are supplemented by this system of espionage.

How does a man become a member of this society? Under the regulations of the order a novice cannot become a Jesuit until 14 years of age. When he signifies his desire to take the vow he is first instructed to spend one month in solitude, when he must devote himself entirely to meditation upon the spiritual exercises prepared by Loyola. These he is taught are very holy. The Roman Catholics say that a soul is saved for every word of these exercises. If it be so, more a thousand times have been damned by them.

The second month is devoted to the hospital. The novice must be willing to perform the most menial service in some institution of this character. Loyola, it is said, served in this capacity, and showed his zeal and devotion by sucking the ulcers of the inmates.

The third month must be spent in menial service; the fourth in begging; the fifth in giving instruction; the sixth in receiving confessions; After two years in this severe drill the candidate becomes a scholastic, and he must serve in this capacity for seventeen or eighteen years. He is first a student for five years, then six years must be spent in teaching, and finally five years he is a theological student. The time of this part of his preparation varies somewhat. Having passed through it he is made a spiritual coadjutor.

One gentleman spoke to me the other day about my address to this meeting, and said he was a Sublime Prince of something or other, I cannot now remember what. I do not know whether the steps by which he reached so exalted a position are similar to those taken by the Jesuit or not, but his title seems to suggest a course of training or preparation which may be compared with it.

There is a large class of Jesuits who are indifferentes, or outside workers. They do not appear in the garb of priests, but mingle in the business affairs of ordinary life.

Having passed through these years of training the candidate is now eligible to the final vow of poverty, chastity and obedience. This obedience is absolute, and the vow is as strong as it possibly can be made. Thus at the age of from 40 to 45 years a man becomes a full-fledged Jesuit. This most rigorous and strenuous discipline through which he has now passed prepares him to face any danger, to disdain any suffering in carrying out the will of his superior.

There is another class of Jesuits of whom we know very little. The General of the order can make members secretly, and the fact of their membership is kept in absolute secrecy. These are called Jesuits of the Short Road. They do not appear to be Jesuits, are not known to be, and their identity being thus absolutely concealed, they form the most dangerous branch of the order, and are by all means most to be feared.

The Roman Catholic church is now under the control of this order. It is under the leadership of 8,000 picked men, who have been drilled in such a school, and are all obedient, under most strenuous oaths, to their head at Rome. This church therefore becomes a terrible danger to our free institutions. How many Jesuits of the Short Road are there on the bench? How many controlling the enormous power of the press? How many shaping our political affairs?

Their extraordinary code of morals makes this order insensible to those motives that affect mankind. Their history is full of remarkable contradictions. They swear to poverty. By this vow they deny themselves all worldly possessions. Yet in 1773 [or 1772 as often given], when suppressed by Clement XIV., they had $200,000,000 of property. They also held, in a large number of instances, the place of princes in the church, and other offices of the higher grade. Although this was contrary to their vows, the fact seemed to make no difference. Their vow of chastity does not preclude a licentious life. Absolute obedience is one of their chief virtues, but a Jesuit has never been known to yield to the Pope, who is the head of their church. From Loyola to this day they have never been known to yield to civil or ecclesiastical power, except when compelled to do so by actual force. In their system of casuistry they relax every command of the Decalogue. A reference to Dr. Gury's instructions for the Jesuits readily confirms this. They tolerate, permit and practice most abominable violations of the Word of God.

The vow of absolute obedience is, however, fully enforced with respect to the superiors of the order. A friend of mine, traveling on the Mediterranean, found a company of Jesuits on board the ship in which he was sailing. They were missionaries, going under orders. In response to his inquiries they said, "Wherever we are, in the garden, in the street, if the command comes to us to go to any part of the earth, to Asia, Africa, America, on any service, we go immediately. We do not wait to enter into the house for money, or for clothing. We go without saying Good-bye to friends; but simply and at once start from the place where we are and go to the place appointed."

The one central idea of the internal polity of the Jesuits is to subjugate the individual to his superior. Their external policy, while nominally to promote the welfare of the Romish church, is really to exterminate Protestantism. This is the first and most manifest design of the order. The other is secondary altogether. They have been so successful in their great purpose, that for 250 years Protestantism has made no progress in Europe. In the other was included their purpose to diminish the power of the bishops in favor of the supremacy, the absolutism, of the Pope, and then gain control of the Pope. They therefore exalted the Pope to such a supremacy that all the power of papal law was centered in him. We had believed that councils were to be obeyed; that their decrees were the law of the church. It seemed the height of absurdity and blasphemy when the Pope was declared to be infallible at the instigation of the Jesuits. By this decree there is now no Romish church except the Pope, and absolute authority is vested in him, over individuals and over nations. The late Baltimore Catholic convention affirmed its loyalty to American principles, but at the same time declared its allegiance to the Pope. But it is impossible to be loyal to the Pope and to any other power. This doctrine of infallibility is the most monstrous blasphemy, if there be such a thing as blasphemy.

Another principle of the Jesuits is to extend the power of the Pope as a temporal prince. They insist on his right to rule as monarch over all civil governors, princes, kings, rulers, and legislators. They have urged him on and defended him in deposing monarchs, absolving Romanists from obedience to laws, and other treasonable acts. I was in Rome in 1883-4 when the Italians celebrated the anniversary of united Italy. While the whole kingdom was rejoicing because of the blessing of liberty, the Vatican was grumbling and fuming because the Pope had no longer a kingdom over which he could rule with despotic power. It was stated in the Baltimore convention that the Pope could not be a subject. If he should come to America he could not be arraigned at any bar of justice, or called to account by any power, according to the Jesuit policy. I have asked why President Harrison had to sit at the second place under the American flag entwined with the papal. That was no place for an American flag. I am not willing to have one inch of its glorious colors obscured by a papal rag which represents only despotism.

The Jesuits have always made a specialty of the confessional box. They have always endeavored to be the confessors of princes. By this means they have information of the most intricate affairs of government, and every item of importance is posted off to Rome without delay. Rome cannot tolerate a rival. She must be sole arbiter of the individual conscience. If a man joins a secret society and will not tell its secrets to his confessor, he is made to feel her power. It is true that such secrets are never betrayed to the public, but every one is transmitted to Rome, to be used in extending the power of the Jesuits. As to whether the Jesuit order is a secret society or not, you may judge from these facts, that all secrets are extracted from the penitent in the confessional box, but they are safe so far as he is concerned in the bosom of the Jesuit father. The Jesuits are sworn also to keep the secrets of the papal power. They are not held by any other oaths but their own. They deny all other oaths of courts or governments.

The Jesuit is extremely active in education. He is called the school-master of Europe. Among the first duties to which he devotes his life is the teaching of the young. But with all their pretended skill as instructors, the lands over which they have had long control, are the most illiterate. Witness Italy where 73 per cent of the people are illiterate, or Spain with 80 per cent, or Mexico with 93 per cent of her population who cannot read or write. But wherever they come in competition with Protestants they are compelled to make good in some degree their assumptions. This explains their extraordinary efforts to establish a university at Washington. They oppose our public schools and try to throttle our system of education. They stand over the sources of public information through the press also, and their relation to the American newspaper press is a matter that deserves our gravest consideration. I should like to know why the uprising in Boston, against the Roman Catholic domination of our public schools, has never received decent notice from the press of the city. It is almost impossible to get in a word of criticism of the management of the priests; but these papers are always at the service of the Romanists. This Jesuit espionage and control explains also why we have such partisan reports of the Home Rule movement in Ireland. Would you like to know how this oath-bound, iron-bound order has enchained the free press of America? America has been grasping for the dollar. But Rome is grasping America.

The Jesuit is ubiquitous. He can join any of your churches by avowing himself a Protestant. He has no conscience to trouble him. He can swear an oath of fealty to America. He can go into any court and either refuse to speak, or swear that such and such a thing is true, while holding all the while a mental reservation that it is not. He is not condemned by his church for such perjury if it is done in her service.

It is high time for conventions of Christian patriots like this, for societies that love liberty, truth and justice, to come to the front and say that with God's help, Jesuitism shall never do for us what it has done for other nations.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

The Late Municipal Election—Woman as a Political Factor Therein—A Comparison between the Masonic Lodge and the New England Woman's Club—How to Solve the Social Problem—"Less Faith in the Devil and More in God"—Lodge Notes—Miss I. D. Haines at Wheatogue, Conn.

Harriet Beecher Stowe's grand words on her seventieth birthday, "My friends, let us never doubt; everything that ought to happen is going to happen," should be graven on the heart of every Christian reformer. If a wrong ought to be swept away it will be. If a righteous cause ought to prevail, the time will come for it to take the throne. There are a few—I am afraid very few—temperance workers whose faith is so broad that it can take in Boston. Such must have been encouraged at the late municipal election which showed a majority for license of only 8,173. Worcester's great prohibition victory is very cheering, and altogether the prospect is calculated to offset any temporary depression resulting from the late defeats on the Amendment question.

It is reported that the Democrats in Maine are going to work for re-submission. If so, it is to be hoped that such a rebuke will be administered at the polls as shall cover with shame and confusion the man or the party who would sell the noble Pine Tree State into the clutches of the rum-devil, and smirch her glorious record by repeating Rhode Island's miserable and pitiable story.

A very significant fact, showing that woman is not altogether destitute of some power in politics, is the fact that no one was chosen on the Boston School Board who had not received the endorsement of some organization which included women. Two who were nominees of both parties, were defeated simply because they did not receive such endorsement.

Mrs. Kate Gannet Wells says that whereas in 1880 there were but 82 women engaged in newspaper work in Massachusetts, there are to-day 1,112 women in Boston and vicinity so employed.

Masons sometimes assure us that the lodge is nothing but a gentleman's club, devoted to harmless social enjoyment, and the practice of Masonic benevolence; but even taken at their own word, compare the record of this organization, which one of its members in Tremont Temple last week claimed to be the grandest on the earth and many centuries older than Christianity, with that of the New England Woman's Club, which has just attained its majority, having been in being only 21 years. Among other good works it has established a domestic service registry, a woman's agricultural school, a woman's loan fund, homes for ill and needy children, a needle-woman's lodging house, co-operative kitchens, labor schools, and a girls' friendly society. It has also provided money to bring Polish exiles to America, has assisted the New England hospital for women and children, Gen. Armstrong's Hampton school, the school of the Pundita Ramabai, and established a scholarship in Boston University. And all this without any tyled doors, or swearing fearful oaths ever to conceal and never to reveal their good deeds!

Cambridge has a Working Girls' Club, which numbers about 150 members, chiefly girls from the factories and the stores. Their rooms are open every evening in the week, except Saturday and Sunday, for instruction in branches of education and household art; not, with one or two exceptions, under hired teachers, but Cambridge women who freely give of their wealth, and leisure, and culture, to serve their less fortunate sisters.

Here is certainly one way to solve the social problem.

The heroine of that classic of our childhood,

"Mary had a little lamb," has just died in Somerville, Mass., at the ripe age of 83. Her name was Mrs. Mary E. Tyler. She was known as "Aunt Mary," and was a veritable Sister of Mercy to the sick and afflicted. There is a very deep and profound philosophy, by the way, underlying these childish rhymes. It matters very little what we do to improve the condition of the toiling masses if there is no love behind it. If we want the multitude to follow us to the school of Christ, we must use that divine magnet or they will still continue to enter the lodges instead of the churches.

A remark of Mrs. H. J. Pierson at the late meeting of the Christian Alliance, "I wish we had a little less faith in the devil and more faith in God," touches the keynote in reform work. If we want to help humanity, we must turn a deaf ear to the devil. If every Christian would clasp this truth to his heart with a living belief, "Every tree which my heavenly Father hath not planted shall be rooted up," lodge and saloon would vanish like a bad dream of the night. It is believing Satan's falsehood that they have always existed and always will, that weakens the hands of too many in the war against evil.

"And still they come." Every day brings forward a new secret society to compete for the popular favor, with some well-known name on its roll of membership to draw in "the simple ones." The American Protective League, for instance, rejoices in the names of Masonic Governor-elect Brackett, and Rev. J. W. Hamilton.

On Saturday of this week the corner-stone of Boston's new State House, or rather an extension of the old building, is to be laid with appropriate Masonic ceremonies. The public has got so used to seeing the Masonic lodge step forward on all such occasions, and assume a duty which belongs properly only to the State officials, that they are perfectly blind to the absurdity of the thing. If any of the numerous charitable organizations of the country should ask to lay the corner-stone of the building where our laws are to be made, they would probably meet with a rebuff. If any religious denomination should seek such an honor, imagine the furore of indignation it would create!

Miss I. D. Haines, the female evangelist of Maine, who has suffered much for the truth's sake, being locked out of her own church by lodgemen, has been holding Gospel meetings at Bro. Philip Bacon's home in Wheatogue, Conn., which have been attended with blessed results. Not with fire can we fight fire, but with the pure, living waters of Gospel truth. ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

REFORM NEWS.

A NEW CAMPAIGN IN ILLINOIS.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—It cost me a struggle of soul to withdraw from the Iowa State work to take the agency of the Illinois Christian Association. The friends of reform in Iowa have become endeared to me, and I leave them, at least for a season, with regret.

My first work in Illinois was to arrange, at Sycamore, for a meeting of the same length as our annual meetings. The Swedish Lutheran church was freely tendered us for this meeting. The pastor, Rev. Frykman, heartily concurred, and one of his council of deacons said, when consulted, "We thank you for bringing this meeting to us."

The original plan was to have two nights, and the afternoon of the intervening day, devoted to addresses on the evils of the secret lodge system. I had engaged Rev. Cesander, pastor of the Swedish Lutheran churches at Geneva and St. Charles, and President C. A. Blanchard, of Wheaton College, to deliver addresses; and hoped also to secure the services of Rev. L. A. Johnson, of Rockford. But his time was pre-occupied, so that he could not come; though he indicated a willingness to co-operate with me at some future time.

Failing in the last-named speaker, we limited our program to the two evenings. On the first evening, Dec. 3d, there was an address by the State Agent; subject, "Can a man intelligently adhere to Freemasonry and be a Christian?" Also an address by Rev. Cesander; subject, "Odd-fellowship."

Second night, the State Agent's address continued; address by Pres. C. A. Blanchard; subject, "The relation of the secret society system to church and state."

The house was well filled both evenings, notwithstanding it rained the second night. Rev. Cesander's address on Odd-fellowship, was a clear and strong argument against that order. Pres. Blanchard fully sustained his reputation as an orator, while he showed the contrast between the church and the lodge, and clearly demonstrated that if the one was right, the other must be wrong. The State Agent endeavored to show that Masonry and Christianity are such opposites that intelligent adherence to both systems is an impossibility. The pastor of the Lutheran church said that the incompatibility of the two systems was clearly shown.

The Masons and Odd-fellows have built a temple at Sycamore, and some who profess faith in our Lord Jesus Christ have been beguiled, as was King Solomon, into joining in their false worship. This is to be deplored, as God requires the false worshiper to forsake his evil way, just as truly as he requires those guilty of profanity or adultery, to forsake their evil way.

While working up the Sycamore meeting I visited Wheaton, Geneva, De Kalb, Brush Point and the adjacent country around Sycamore. I had an encouraging interview with the pastor of the M. E. church of Sycamore, and with the pastor of the Free Methodist church; also with Deacon West, and Roswell Dow, a trustee of Wheaton College, and with Hon. Henry Wood. I also called on Rev. Whettington, district chairman of the F. M. church, who attended and conducted the devotional exercises of the first meeting. I made other calls, too numerous to mention. Generous hospitality was extended to me by the friends.

Sycamore is the county seat of De Kalb county, and a stronghold of the lodge, therefore it was fitting that we should open the campaign with a "big meeting" there. C. F. HAWLEY.

PHILADELPHIA ABLAZE.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 18, 1889.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The week past has to me been filled with labors and successes abundant. Dr. David McAllister gave us a happy surprise by stopping over one train on his return from the Boston Congress and reporting the same to those gathered to hear your agent in Dr. Stevenson's church. It cheered us much to know that men of eminence in the East were sounding the alarm, and that new voices were being raised against many popular evils. Five ministers were present at this meeting.

Sabbath morning I spent a pleasant and profitable hour in worship with Free Methodist friends. Rev. Beers, accompanied by his wife, en route for their Southern home to engage in mission work, were present. Bro. B. preached a very profitable sermon, after which I accepted an invitation to speak.

In the afternoon, by invitation of Rev. C. W. Holm, I addressed some 200 friends who gathered in the Independent Swedish Mission. The best of attention was given, and I am assured many will attend the lecture I am to give in Zion's Augustana Lutheran church to-morrow evening. Rev. Cornell, the pastor, kindly arranges for this lecture. In the evening I found an audience of nearly 300 waiting in the Third Reformed Presbyterian church, Rev. Montgomery, pastor. A collection amounting to $6.59 was kindly given by these friends, and many kind words were added.

The meeting of last evening at Chester, Pa., for extreme interest exceeded any I have attended for some time. To say the devil displayed himself, is to express the facts very mild. Probably half the audience of not less than 300 were secretists or sympathizers. The Lord wonderfully blessed me in the presentation of truth. That it hit where it hurt was soon evident. One man interrupted by wishing to ask a question. This was of course granted. No sooner had his question been answered than one and another followed with questions and statements, which were listened to with much interest. One belonged to the Patriotic Sons of America, and he did not believe they did any harm. Another thought the lodges better than the churches and tried to prove it. Another tried to disprove my statement that "A man could not be an intelligent Mason and an intelligent Christian," by stating that his father was a Mason, a Christian and an intelligent man.

I explained that a man might be intelligent, a Mason, and not an intelligent Mason, etc. In short, we were forced to spend some time in talk without profit, which was of intense interest to those blinded by the god of this world. Many of their minds were so darkened they could not comprehend a point when made. Many evidently came under conviction, and I have great hopes that Christ will open their blind eyes.

The man whom I reported last week as belonging to the "Red Men," and seeing nothing wrong in them, has read his Bible and prayed about it, and is now a free man in Christ. He made a thorough confession and renounced the lodge publicly on last Sabbath evening.

Rev. J. Trumbauer, who is now a reader and agent for the Cynosure, is the pastor here. I found him to be a true man of God who does not mean to compromise with sin or sinners, cost what it may. That the Lord may richly bless and reward him is my prayer.

John Hall, D.D., on the introduction to his work "The Beacon Lights of the Reformation," says: "The students of pharmacy attach much importance to the purity of the drugs given the sick; and with good reason, for it is easy to see how another element, unnoticed by the ordinary patient, may destroy the healing properties of the remedy prescribed. And so the mixture of error, unnoticed by the average man, or possibly deemed harmless if not even agreeable, may mar the efficacy of the truth, and so far hinder the work the truth was meant to accomplish." As I am brought in contact with lodge men, more and more the conviction deepens that the lies mixed with the truths of the lodge are the impure drugs, so stupefying and so befogging them that many do not know "what is truth." The counterfeit nearest like the genuine is the most dangerous. The lie nearest to or mixed with the truth deceives the most. So I am not astonished that many men in the minor orders do not realize by their presence that they are crucifying Christ afresh. Nothing but the awakening, convicting Spirit of Christ can bring them to the truth. Pray, dear friends, that the workers for reform may be so anointed with the Spirit of the Master, that in love they may lead their fellows to the truth. W. B. STODDARD.

CORRESPONDENCE.

BASIS OF SABBATH REFORM.

MOBERLY, Mo., Dec. 9, 1889.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I have been trying to snatch a moment to write you a few impressions of our Iowa State Sabbath Convention at Des Moines. The unpopularity of the higher-law idea surprised me. Being chairman of the committee on resolutions, I had a good opportunity of seeing which way the wind blew. We were warned again and again that if we wished to defeat our object it was only necessary to plead as authority for Sabbath observance the Fourth Commandment. If we identified God with the movement it would kill it. God was very unpopular in Des Moines, and especially in Iowa. J. Ellen Foster's idea that moral questions are outside the province of political parties, which is only another form of the devil's plea for Christ to yield his supremacy to him by falling down and worshipping him, is popular at Des Moines. We were told that many of the most popular ministers of the State stayed away from the convention because it was composed so largely of higher-law men.

Dr. Fowler, of Cedar Rapids, Dr. Wishart, of Des Moines, and Pres. Gates, of Grinnell College, argued strongly for the secular theory, that in civil government we must not appeal to divine authority for the Sabbath; while those who argued on the Christian theory were Dr. H. M. Robinson and Dr. C. T. McCaughan, of Winterset, and Rev. W. L. Ferris, of Cherokee.

The resolution that called out the warmest discussion was one declaring that to reach the citizens' conscience it was necessary for the state to own God's authority behind the law. We were sorry Pres. C. A. Blanchard could not remain for this discussion. His resolution that apart from the ordinance of God all civil institutions have only the sanction of a mob, had the ring of God's truth, but it did not even pass the committee. His address on the wage-workers and the Sabbath was a strong plea for the laboring man. The advanced ground taken by prominent railroad men in regard to the advisability of stopping all trains on the Sabbath, seemed as though railroad men would yet lead ministers in this reform.

THE SALOON AND LODGE BROTHERHOOD.

MILLVILLE AYLESFORD, Nova Scotia, }
Dec. 9, 1889. }

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—This is what I call a secret lodge and saloon-cursed country. A large percentage of all the liquor dealers, and many of the drunkards, are either Freemasons or are members of some kindred secret oathbound fraternity; and to have such a class of persons bound together by the most solemn oaths, under the most horrible penalties, to protect each other and to keep each other's secrets, whether right or wrong, is surely bad enough.

But if those societies were composed of only such material they could not long exist. Their own corruption would soon work their ruin. But it is known that a host of professed ministers of the Gospel and a large percentage of (so-called) Christian church members and persons of otherwise good moral character are connected with the drunkard and the drunkard-makers, together with persons of every shade of evil character, in those secret fraternities, and are bound by the same fearful oaths and penalties to keep their secrets, to espouse their cause, and if in their power to shield them under all circumstances, murder and treason only excepted, and that at their own option. It is no marvel that the liquor dealers and the secret orders of the present time have become insolent and daring in their contempt of both civil and ecclesiastical law! And I think it is not going far astray to charge the very existence of the secret empire and of the licensed liquor saloon in this Christian country to the patronage they receive from (so-called) temperance people and the professedly Christian churches.

I am aware that this "charge" will be questioned and condemned by many good-meaning persons. Nevertheless, I believe it will bear investigation. Let all so-called temperance people, and all professors of Christianity, renounce and denounce the secret lodge system, and it cannot stand; and without the support of the secret empire the licensed liquor saloon could not long exist.

Thank God, the eyes of many are being opened to see the connection of the SECRET LODGE WITH THE SALOON!

And when the real facts come to be understood by the people generally, all true Christians and all persons of genuine temperance principles will turn and face those combined powers of evil; and, in the name and strength of Jehovah, will crush them to death or compel them to disappear from public view. I am amazed that persons of apparent good common sense, and pious persons, ministers of the Gospel, etc., can allow themselves to enter a secret lodge, be stripped, hoodwinked, cable-towed, and kneel at a Christless altar, and there swear away their own liberty, and voluntarily bind themselves to obey they know not what!—which, however, proves to be the most tyrannical ruler the earth bears up. I would here warn the readers of this article to beware as to how they tamper with such a monster as the secret lodge. May God hasten the time when "Satan shall be bound, that he shall deceive the nations no more."

R. S. MORTON.

THE UNITED BRETHREN IN KANSAS.

Northeast of Topeka some ten miles is a U. B. circuit. Before the attempted change in the church there was not a secretist known to belong to the church on that circuit; but since liberal ministers have been holding forth it is full of them. The Farmers' Alliance, which one of its members said is more of a secret society than the Grange, has made sad inroads there. South of Topeka the United Brethren and Odd-fellows have been sliming each other for two or three years, and are now swallowing each other. "Behold how good and pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity."

At Leavenworth City six secretists tried to swallow sixty radicals, who objected. Then the liberal elder went up, and mustering the lodge force of six and some "jacks," proceeded to chastise the radicals with the law. The liberals have preached majority rule so much that it would seem they ought not to forget all their majority sermons so soon. But they have been in the majority manufacturing business so vigorously that perhaps they think of working the radical majority over and turning out full-fledged liberals by legal process. The class there is poor, which is perhaps the reason of the legal attack, as it seems to be their fort to attack and crush the weak. The U. B.s used to have an organization in Topeka, but they were unfortunate in church location and management and it went down. They have recently reorganized on the old basis, a class of thirty or forty members, and rented a hall. The G. A. R. president of the college at Leocompton is reported to have said we would not succeed in Topeka on that basis. By the way, it seems that there are at least three Freemasons, two G. A. R.s and one K. of P. connected with the Leocompton College. No wonder that all the public places of worship are closed against the radicals, the school-house included.

The lodge portion of this lock-out fraternity, for the most part, claim to be non-affiliating. Why is it that such are almost universally against the radicals, if they are no longer interested in or influenced by the lodge? Did they demit and join the U. B. church for this occasion? It is a curious fact that the "stronger" secrecy rule under the new than under the old constitution has not produced an instance yet of a lodge member being kept out or turned out of the U. B. church on account of his lodgery. Indeed, many secretists were taken in during the last quadrennium to vote for the change, and yet they lacked some of having a vote of one-fourth of the church for their measures.

Now it is evident that lodgery is working liberalism for all it is worth, or else liberalism is working lodgery for all it is worth. And it is likely they are swallowing each other for mutual benefit and extermination of anti-secrecy. More than half the people in the United States, exclusive of Catholicism, are opposed to secret societies.

PIONEER.

A CHURCH VOTES FOR THE LODGE.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Dec. 16, 1889.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—The First Baptist church of this city has now voted to keep the Masonic jewel. The resolution to this effect was passed Oct. 30, 1889. Their prayer-meetings seem to be run on the mutual admiration plan; the pastor praises the people, and they in turn praise his sermons. The Masonic jewel is "silence and secrecy" in the concealment of crime under sworn penalty of murder.

A public request was made of the pastor or one of the deacons or any other Mason in the congregation to deny, if untrue, that Masons are sworn to have their throats cut, their tongues torn out, their hearts plucked out and their bowels burned to ashes, should they fail to conceal all secrets Masonically communicated to them, murder and treason only excepted, and the concealment of these two crimes in the seventh degree of Masonry left to their own choice. The pastor arose and received the request as an insult, and there and then publicly stated that he was insulted; that he could neither affirm nor deny the statement made about Masonry; that it was so long since he had attended a lodge, that he had forgotten whether it was true or false. He also said that he could not allow that subject to be mentioned again so long as he remained pastor of that church; and that he said it "with all respect for Mr. Fenton, our brother."

One of the members of the church says that previous to this occasion he had spoken of calling on the police to suppress testimony in their meetings against Masonry. The mover of the resolution, to keep the Masonic jewel, declared that their pastor was insulted; also that it was a pity to have their good prayer meetings spoiled by bringing up the subject of Masonry. The resolution is to the effect that no member of that church, nor any visitor to that church, shall be allowed to mention Masonry in any of their meetings. The pastor put it to vote and it was passed. And therefore it is now the law of that church, in the face of God's commandment to "show his people their transgressions," to conceal the crime of Masonry. Its position in regard to sin is thus well defined. If every church would be thus explicit in its defense of Masonry, God's people would soon find their way out, and come into a clean place, so far as the loathsome lodge sorcerers are concerned.

Christians, do not be afraid to publicly challenge your pastors, deacons and fellow church members in regard to their lodge sorcery. If they have no fear of God before their eyes, they do fear the people; hence to be saved they must be unmasked and rebuked before all the people to the glory of God. "Them that sin rebuke before all, that others also may fear," 1 Tim. 5: 20. "Thou shalt in any wise rebuke thy neighbor, and not suffer sin upon him," Lev. 19: 17. See also Luke 17: 3; Titus 1: 13; 2: 15; Prov. 28: 23, etc.

BOOKS IN SOUTHERN COLLEGES.

Your books donated to our library have just been received, for which accept many thanks. I found much personal gain myself in reading them. They are calculated to do much good. God bless your efforts to save the youth of the land from the evils of useless and vicious secretism.—GEO. A. LEWELLEN, Pres. W. Tenn. Christian College.

TRAIN UP A CHILD IN THE WAY HE SHOULD GO.

Rev. Cyrus Smith, sending the subscriptions of two brothers in Iowa, says of their father: "This dear brother and his excellent wife have brought up their children 'in the way they should go,' and now their boys are men in age and character, and 'will not (by grace) depart from it,' especially on the secrecy question, since they favor the Cynosure with their substance, and honor those principles in their daily life. May God bless them."

LITERATURE.

INTERLINEAR GREEK-ENGLISH GOSPEL OF LUKE, with emphatic translation, copious notes and references. Price, paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents. Albert & Scott, Chicago.

Many Sabbath-school teachers and scholars who desire to make a critical study of their lessons, are hindered by ignorance of the Greek tongue. It is a happy suggestion to provide for them the Gospel of Luke, which supplies the lessons for 1890, printed in the original Greek, with a literal translation underneath each line, and a new emphatic translation at the side. Thus, though unable to read Greek, the teacher has all the practical work of Greek scholarship before him, so prepared as to make it immediately available. For a critical study of the lessons for the year, this pocket volume is of first importance, and the low price will give immediately an extensive sale. It is just the book for a live Sabbath-school teacher.

THE ROMAN CATHOLIC PRACTICE of auricular or secret confession to a priest. Published by a converted Roman Catholic, 49 Cornhill, Boston, Mass. Price 25 cents in paper.

In this modest compilation the evangelist, Thomas E. Leyden, gives to the public a summary of larger and expensive volumes. For a popular exposition of the confessional it will be of excellent service. Those who are unable to secure the larger works of Chiniquy and Gury will find in this all they will need, or probably care to know. It explains from Romish writings what the confessional is, quotes at some length the questions to be asked by the priest, and contrasts them with the Word of God. Portions of the catechism taught young Catholics are also given. This is a convenient hand-book for those who work to turn Catholics to the only Light of Life.

Dr. George F. Pentecost's Bible Studies for 1890 are now ready, from the publishing house of A. S. Barnes and Co., New York. They cover the International Sunday School Lessons, and are now in their fourth year. He has adhered to the same plan upon which the previous volumes were prepared, endeavoring to maintain a proper balance between exegesis and exposition.

Miss Amelia B. Edwards will publish a very striking article in the January Century, in which is given the first popular description of the recent extraordinary discoveries in Bubastis, Egypt. It is stated that all the monuments produced in this number are now published for the first time. One of the stones of these ruins is almost sixty-one centuries old. Bubastis, as old as the world itself, was considered as passing away when Olympia rose.

The Dec. 12 number of the Chicago America contained a most interesting article on American cartoonists, accompanied by capital examples of our leading satirical artists. Thomas Nast, C. Gray-Parker, F. G. Attwood, Frank P. W. Bellew (Chip), H. G. Taylor and "Junius," were represented by cartoons expressly drawn for America, while Joseph Keppler and Bernard Gillam's work was illustrated by reproductions from Puck. One of the examples by Keppler was the title page of the first number of that paper, and the specimen of Gillam's work was his famous "Tattooed Man," from Puck of May 7, 1884. According to America, the distinctly great American cartoonists can be counted on the fingers of one hand, with two fingers to spare.

Wonderful advance has been made in calendar making of late years, and the enterprising proprietors of Hood's Sarsaparilla seem to have completely mastered the business. For their calendar for 1890 is so beautiful in conception and general effect as to be almost beyond improvement. Fourteen colors were used by the lithographer in producing the beautiful head, the flesh tints being simply exquisite. To be appreciated this calendar must be seen. Druggists keep it.

Messrs. A. S. Barnes and Co. have just received, through the United States Government, two medals from the Adelaide Jubilee International Exposition of Australia of 1887, one for educational text-books and the other for pens and inks. They are also recipients of two medals from the Paris Exposition, a gold medal for educational text-books and a silver medal for pens and inks.

A very convenient, valuable, and unique business table or desk calendar, for 1890, is the Columbia Bicycle Calendar and Stand, issued by the Pope Mfg. Co. of Boston, Mass. The calendar proper is in the form of a pad of 366 leaves, one for each day of the year. A good portion of each leaf is blank for memoranda.

OBITUARY.

REV. D. S. CALDWELL was for several years lecturer of the Ohio State Association, and will be remembered by many friends in that State. He died Sept. 6th last, and the following particulars respecting his life are from the Christian World of Dayton, Ohio:

He was born in Washington county, Md., December 22, 1820. He was reared to manhood and educated in Hagerstown, Md. He was first married August 8, 1843, to Sarah Creager, and four children, one boy and three girls, were the fruit of this union. In 1848 he moved to Seneca county, Ohio, and entered the ministry of the United Brethren church, with which he was connected from 1851 to 1883. Since the latter date he has been connected with the Tiffin Classis of the Reformed church, and was for some time pastor of the congregation at Berwick, Seneca county, Ohio, and Zion's Bloom, Hancock county, O.

Bro. Caldwell, in obedience to his country's call in the time of her peril, was mustered into the military service and commissioned as first lieutenant, Sept. 24, 1862. He recruited Company H, 123d O. V. I., and was promoted to captain in February, 1864. His regiment was immediately sent to the front, and in a three days' engagement with the rebel forces of General Ewell's corps, at Winchester, W. Va., Captain Caldwell became a prisoner June 15, 1865. He was immediately taken to Richmond and placed in Libby Prison, where he remained eight months. The horrors of those eight months prison life, with the wonderful escape through a tunnel with over one hundred other men, is fully described by him in a small book of his own publication entitled, "Incidents of War and Southern Prison Life." Over one hundred escaped through this tunnel, but only fifty-seven succeeded in reaching the Union lines—the others were recaptured and re-imprisoned. Captain Caldwell was one of the lucky ones. After his return from the army he again entered the regular work of the ministry in the U. B. church. He labored three years (1865, 1866 and 1867), in Upper Sandusky, and four years as presiding elder. At the close of this term in 1882 he took up his residence in Nevada. His first wife died June 1, 1859, and he was remarried Sept. 20, 1860, to Sarah J.

Doyle, who with four children, the fruit of this union, mourn his departure.

Mr. Caldwell was a man of more than ordinary ability. As a preacher and as a debater he had few equals. He held several public discussions with prominent Adventists and others, and was always considered by the unprejudiced as the victor. A few months ago he became editor of the Weekly Monitor in Nevada, and, although with discouraging surroundings, every number bore evidence of his marked intellectual ability in this new department of labor.

He was a man of very positive convictions. He was what might be termed a radical man, though by no means a fanatic. Every proposition with him was carried to its logical sequence, and there was no comparison with error or false doctrine. It may be said that he was radical in all political as well as religious questions involving principles of right and wrong. He believed that the Gospel which he so long preached to others was a radical Gospel, and its ministers in order to be consistent must be radical men. This led him politically to break connection with old parties and join the Prohibition party, because he could not in any form compromise with the rum traffic. The world needs more of just such radical men.

As a husband he was affectionate and trustful, and as a father he was kind and indulgent. Those two little daughters, as well as the older children, will never forget the love of that father and his kind admonitions. He died in the firm belief and fullest confidence of the orthodox faith of the Christian religion.

CATARRH.

Catarrhal Deafness—Hay Fever.

A NEW HOME TREATMENT.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness, and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N.B.—This treatment is not a snuff or an ointment; both have been discarded by reputable physicians as injurious. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent free by A. H. Dixon & Son, 337 and 339 West King Street, Toronto, Canada.—Scientific American.

Sufferers from Catarrhal troubles should carefully read the above.

THE N. C. A. FUNDS.

The General Fund is that from which the running expenses of the Association are paid. From it the agents on the field are supported.

The Foreign Fund is that from which the foreign demand for literature against the lodge is supplied to missionaries.

The Free Tract Fund clearly states by its name the object for which contributions are solicited. Millions of pages have been distributed by means of this fund.

The Cynosure Ministers' Fund. The donations to this fund have enabled the Association to send many copies of the Cynosure to the ministers of the South, especially to pastors of colored churches. The result has been a blessing to them and their churches.

Contributions to any or all these funds are urgently solicited.

FORM OF BEQUEST.—I give and bequeath to the National Christian Association, incorporated and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, the sum of — dollars for the purposes of said Association, and for which the receipt of its Treasurer for the time being shall be sufficient discharge.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 26, 1889.

WASHINGTON NEVER MUCH OF A MASON.—The "Universal Masonic Library" is a republication, in thirty volumes, of all the standard publications in Masonry, and is "designed for the libraries of Masonic bodies," etc. Volume 14 of this Library contains "The Lights and Shadows of Freemasonry," by Robert Morris, the late Masonic poet-laureate. This book is published in other forms, but we note the above to show the standing of this work in lodge literature. On page 135 of this volume Morris says: "It is known that George Washington himself never rose to distinguished Masonic honors, and for the good reason that he never attained to what is technically styled THE WORK of Masonry." On page 154 of same book we read: "Benedict Arnold was a Freemason, while several of the other American generals were not."

CHICAGO THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.—In the senior editor's remarks at chapel exercise of this institution last week, the following succinct statement to the noble company of students was omitted: The present moral condition of the United States exactly corresponds with that of Judea after Solomon had admitted seven hundred strange altars with his political wives. Some three hundred secret orders are now at work, and almost every one has its altar in the center of its hall, to administer religious obligations to its members. Even the order of railroad conductors has its altar, of course having no reference to Christ. These oaths and obligations are breaking down conscience and "destroying the sanctity of the oath." When Solomon's reign ended there was no law left, and the United States of Palestine went to pieces. Each false altar in Palestine had its lodge oath and worship. (See Bishop Warburton quoted by Macknight.) Will the students please investigate this grave matter?

THE Daily News of this city, Dec. 18, gathers that the revolution in Brazil was brought about by Freemasons. They feared the Princess Isabel, who is guided by the Jesuits, would soon be empress by the death of her father, Dom Pedro. The fight between popery and Freemasonry is a fight between two snakes. Both systems are absolute despotism, sworn subordination and subjugation of men to priests. Both promise salvation by ceremonies. Both are systems of intensest secrecy which prove them opposed to Christ. (See John 18: 20); and both will unite at last against Christianity. Both admit the name of Christ, the papist in his creed and the Mason in Knight Templarism; but both "in works deny him." The papist puts the Pope in place of Christ; but the lodge turns from Christ altogether and worships a "Grand Architect," or "god of this world." A careful study of "The Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite," which rules the Masonic world at present, will give the candid inquirer abundant proof of the above, and other facts from standard Masonic writers.

DID THE LODGE WIN?

That is, in the Cronin case. We answer unqualifiedly, No. The victory of the state is not yet complete, but God is against the secret cabal. L. L. Mills, the able lawyer who was prevented by sickness from making the final plea to the jury, had prepared a review of the wonderful interpositions of Divine Providence in discovering the facts of the murder and the conspiracy. God will yet reveal other facts in this dark case.

The decision of the jury convicts three members of Camp 20 of the United Brotherhood, or Clan-na-Gael, of murder. That they did not get the death sentence is simply due to the pig-headedness of one juror, who permitted his Scotch tenacity to get the better of his common sense. John Culver, who stood out so long against the other eleven, we do not think to be either a fool or the receiver of bribes, as openly and generally charged. He is more probably a man who lets a whim, a notion, or a prejudice run away with him so fast that he can neither get off his unruly horse or turn back to the safer path which every one but himself can see. He is reaping a severe harvest of popular condemnation. But for this one perversity three of the secret murder gang would probably pay the full penalty. It is no thanks to the lodge that they do not, although every possible effort has been put forth by the order to save them.

But neither has the Clan escaped in the verdict of popular opinion, although upheld by the United States Government. President Harrison may retain Pat. Egan, the "tri-angler," as long as he dares as minister to Chili. The people have long since put their mark upon this administration because of this appointment. They have with one voice demanded that the Clan-na-Gael must go. The report of the coroner's jury that "all secret societies whose objects are such as the evidence shows the United Brotherhood to be, are not in harmony with, and are injurious to American institutions," struck the popular chord, and it does not cease to vibrate. The Clan tried to reorganize its better half in Philadelphia the other day. They cast out the Sullivan gang with its five thousand adherents. But this whale cannot save itself by getting rid of its Jonah. The best-informed Irishmen understand that the day for secret organizations to raise money for Ireland are over. They must be further informed that if they would be American citizens, one country is enough for one man.

The decision has also reached the head of our corrupt city government, and a large number of Clan-na-Gael policemen were discharged last week. Mayor Cregier sees in the defeat of the old party gangs in the drainage-trustee election, a cloud somewhat larger than the hand of man which will overwhelm him a year hence at the next city election. He is beginning to attend to his official duties, and the Clan policemen must go. The lodge does not win for them, although they have have used every effort of false-swearing and bullying to make it.

But Beggs is free, and Sullivan is not among the condemned men. The victory is not complete, but the same Power that revealed the secrets of the sewers, can finish this work and bring to light all these hidden things of darkness.

THE LODGERY OF MORMONISM.

This writing will not anticipate the able address of Rev. Dr. McAllister at the Boston Congress, which we promise ourselves the pleasure of publishing in the next number of the Cynosure. The full report of the examination into the character of the Endowment House oaths by Judge Anderson is given in the Deseret News, the organ of the Mormon church, whose editor, Penrose, was imprisoned by the court for refusing to answer in the cross-examination by Gentile lawyers. This report contains so much that is new and valuable to a full understanding of Mormonism as related to the Masonic system that it is highly important to preserve it for our readers.

In continuation of the testimonies to this effect in our issue of Dec. 5, there must be added first that of Wilford Woodruff, now president of the Mormon church, which has before appeared in these columns, but is worth reprinting because of its endorsement by the Mormon editor. He says:

"Mormons, when on the stand, decline to disclose the formula of the endowments because secret religious rites and ceremonies are the property of the individual citizen, and do not belong to the state. You might as well ask why a Mason, if he were placed on the witness-stand, should refuse to reveal the rites and signs of that order. I myself am a Master Mason, and have been informed that many Masons, as well as people not connected with that fraternity, have been indignant at the attempt that has been made during the last few days to extort personal information from Mormons. Members of other benevolent societies can see that their rites and organizations would be endangered should such proceedings carry."

If Woodruff speaks the truth, he must be under peculiar relations to the Gentile Masons of Salt Lake; and if the people are like their high priest, it would be an interesting inquiry how many Mormons belong to the lodge, and to what degree Masonic influence has retarded legislation at Washington, and corrupted courts and public officials in Utah. If there could be a doubt in respect to the remark of Dr. R. G. McNiece, of the Presbyterian church in Salt Lake, to the writer three years ago, that the Mormons were all Masons, this word of President Woodruff's would dissipate it.

Numerous witnesses during the trial testified to the penalties of throat-cutting, disemboweling, etc., which the Mormons, having borrowed from the Masonic lodge, continue to use in the Endowment House. But a more direct evidence is that of Vincent Shurtliff, an old man of 78, born in Massachusetts, made a Mormon in 1842, and sworn in the Endowment House in 1850. He was asked by the prosecuting lawyer if there were any penalties attached to the obligations of the Endowment ceremony, and replied, "Yes, I concluded there would be—I am, of course, a Mason." He was questioned again: "You say you were once a Mason; in the course of the Masonic covenants, did you enter into any particular agreement not to disclose the secrets of the order?"

Answer: "I did not go so far as that; I only attended one meeting; I don't know anything about their covenants; I have talked with my brother-in-law about it, and what he told me was in substance what I witnessed in the Endowment House." Here we have a Mason and a Mormon comparing notes and finding the two systems alike; and the latter, having taken one degree in Masonry, expects some blood-curdling penalties in the Endowment ceremonies.

Judge E. G. Woolley, a Mormon 44 years of age, and James H. Anderson, a reporter for the Deseret News, as well as other Mormons, in response to questions on their Mormon oaths, firmly and repeatedly replied, "I decline to answer." Apostle A. H. Lund, refusing to divulge the Endowment rites, said they were not to be made public; "in this they were like the Masonic ceremonies." E. L. T. Harrison, an architect, who left the Mormons in 1869 with Godbe and Lawrence, swore that "there was a penalty attached for revealing certain mysteries of the Endowment House. . . . The penalty of death was attached to these Masonic ceremonies. . . . The penalties were applied to the signs, passwords, etc." Thomas G. Webber, superintendent of Zion's Co-operative Mercantile Institution (the great "Co-op" store), said under oath, "I think I am in duty bound to keep religious ceremonies secret, as the Freemasons are. . . . The government has no interest in or right to these ceremonies."

But a more important witness was Mrs. Bathsheba W. Smith, aged 67, who joined the Mormons in 1837, and whose husband before his death had been apostle and First Counselor to Brigham Young. She testifies: "I had my endowments in Nauvoo in 1843; Joseph Smith presided at the meeting then; I officiated in the temple at Nauvoo subsequently; my own endowments were received in the Masonic Hall, Nauvoo. I became quite familiar with the ceremony as priestess; there have been no changes in the ceremony up to the present time; they are the same to-day as in the lifetime of the Prophet Joseph Smith."

It will be remembered that Grand Secretary Munn, of Illinois, writes that the Grand Lodge of Masons in this State twice gave a dispensation for a Masonic lodge in Nauvoo, when only Mormons lived there; and that the last dispensation was revoked in October, 1843. Now Mrs. Smith testifies in a U. S. court that she was sworn into Mormonism in the Masonic lodge-room in Nauvoo in this same year. The Grand Secretary has, therefore, a remarkable corroboration of the Grand Lodge records, for which we hope he will thank the Cynosure for bringing to his notice.

But a few other particulars demand notice. Again and again the Mormons swore before Judge Anderson that there was nothing in their system which antagonized the United States government. Says Wilford Woodruff: "As a people the Mormons have the highest veneration for the institutions of the Republic." Says editor Penrose: "There is no element of antagonism to the institutions of this government and the principles on which it is founded, in the religion of the Latter-day Saints." Yet the popular verdict of the American people, after a long and forbearing study of Mormonism, and the decision of the United States courts, from lowest to highest, flatly contradicts this assumption. In like manner we have long insisted that the Masonic dogma, thrust grimly at the blindfolded and half-naked candidate, that there is nothing in Masonic oaths to interfere with obligations to God, family or country, is nothing but a deception and a farce.

We need hardly refer to the numerous orders of Mormonism, corresponding to the various rites of the lodge. The Brothers of Gideon, Order of Cloistered Saints, Nauvoo Legion, Order Lodge and Order of Enoch are some of the ramifications of Mormonism which increase its likeness to Masonry.

But a final consideration will be a surprise to many readers. The Book of Mormon, which witnesses before Judge Anderson swore was with the Bible a "standard of doctrine to the church," denounces secret societies. The old Presbyterian, Solomon Spaulding, from whom Jo Smith stole the manuscript, lived in the Morgan times and was thoroughly imbued with the Anti-masonry of western New York. He wrote the following Anti-masonic paragraphs, which Smith was not shrewd enough to cut out:

"And Akish did administer unto them the oaths which were given by them of old, who also sought power, which had been handed down even from Cane, who was a murderer from the beginning. And they were kept up by the power of the devil to administer these oaths unto the people, to keep them in the darkness, to help such as sought power to gain power, and to murder, and to plunder, and to lie and commit all manner of wickedness and whoredoms....

"And it came to pass that they formed a secret combination, even as they of old; which combination is most abominable and wicked, above all, in the sight of God; for the Lord worketh not in secret combinations, neither doth he will that man should shed blood, but in all things hath forbidden it from the beginning of man."

"And now I, Mormon, do not write the manner of their oaths and combinations, for it hath been made known unto me that they are had among all people, and they are had among the Lamanites, and they have caused the destruction of this people of whom I am now speaking, and also the destruction of the people of Nephi; and whatsoever nation shall uphold such secret combinations, to get power and gain, until they shall spread over the nation, behold, they shall be destroyed." Pp. 530-1 (N. Ed. 587-8).

"But, behold, Satan did stir up the hearts of the more parts of the Nephites, inasmuch that they did unite with those bands of robbers and did enter into their covenants and their oaths, that they would protect and preserve one another, in whatsoever difficult circumstances they should be placed, that they should not suffer for their murders and their plunderings and their stealings.

"And it came to pass that they did have signs, yea, their secret signs, and their secret words; and this that they might distinguish a brother who had entered into the covenant, that whatsoever wickedness his brother should do he should not be injured by his brother, nor by those who did belong to his band, who had taken this covenant; and thus they might murder, and plunder and steal, and commit whoredom, and all manner of wickedness, contrary to the laws of their country and also the laws of their God; and whosoever of those who belonged to their band should reveal unto the world, of their wickedness and their abominations, should be tried, not according to the laws of their country, but according to the laws of their wickedness, which have been given by Gadanton and Kishkumen."

Mormons in the Salt Lake publishing house told the writer that the church had two or three times been destroyed by secret societies. Why, then, the evident affection of Mormons for Freemasonry, betrayed in the late trial? This can be explained only as a like deception is found in all false religions. Jo Smith "universally, in all his letters, revelations and speeches, denounced adultery and fornication." But he instituted the most infamous system ever conceived by man to legalize lust. Dr. Lansing's address on the Jesuits, to be read on another page, shows exactly the same nature in that detestable system. It is of the nature of false worship to be like their author, counterfeit, deceptive, lying.

We have then the lodgery of Mormonism declared by the following facts:

1. Its various orders.
2. Its oaths of secrecy.
3. Its savage penalties.
4. Its murders.
5. Its domination by priestcraft.
6. Its deception.
7. Its intimidation.
8. Its abetting lust.
9. Its resistance to popular government.
10. Its destruction of the home and marriage relation.
11. Its usurpation of individual conscience.
12. Its former actual connection with the Grand Lodge of Illinois.
13. Its present connection with Masonry in the person of Woodruff, its head.

—The Evangelical Alliance, which sends out the list of topics for the week of prayer, informs us that this program, conveniently printed, can be had from the central office of the Alliance, 42 Bible House, New York city, at the rate of $1.00 per hundred.

—A meeting at Fredericksburg, O., in the United Presbyterian church, was addressed by Bro. Hinman on Friday evening. On Sabbath he had appointments at Gann and Buckeye City and at Cedarville.

—The faculty of the Chicago Theological Seminary at Union Park are intending soon to distribute a hundred copies of the Carpenter booklet to the students, who meet for prayers in Carpenter hall where they look daily upon the large bust of Philo Carpenter, to whom both they and we are so much indebted.

—The students of Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill., have requested the faculty by petition to allow the use of a hall, and Mr. C. S. Bullock, of the State College Contest at Elgin, to speak on the subject of college secret societies. All parties have consented, and a meeting is preparing, which both the students at Evanston and the Cynosure anticipates with the deepest interest.

—Several friends have requested that the time for returning the petition to Congress against un-American secret societies be extended. The request of the committee was that January 1, 1890, be the limit of time. Congress will probably be in session until May or June, and on consultation it is thought best to give three months more to the securing of signatures. So work up this petition faithfully until April, 1890.

—Bro. I. R. B. Arnold has now two hundred and fifty dollars in the bank for his floating mission chapel; fifteen dollars of which was received during the last week from friends of the Cynosure. Bro. Arnold is to donate an equal amount to the Cynosure fund for colored preachers during the year, and will increase his donations to five hundred dollars or more, provided that amount is contributed by friends of the cause for the mission chapel. He will set the ship-builders at work as soon as two hundred and fifty dollars more is raised.

PERSONAL NOTES.

—Secretary Stoddard returned to this city last Friday. He preached in the College church, Wheaton, Sabbath morning, when the annual collection of the church was taken up.

—Pres. C. A. Blanchard is tarrying a short time in the East to find friends and funds for Wheaton College, an errand in which all pray he may have success.

—Rev. David McFall, of the Chambers Street church, Boston, has rallied from the critical state in which he was lying at the time of the Tremont Temple meeting, but is still in very precarious health. His brother-in-law, Rev. A. M. Milligan, has gone to Boston to assist in his pastoral duties.

—Rev. C. R. Hunt, pastor of the Presbyterian church in Colfax, Iowa, and secretary of the State Sabbath Association, was welcomed at our office on his way to the paternal roof in Indiana. His report of the interest in Sabbath reformation, and in our anti-lodge cause also, is very encouraging.

—Our peace societies have seldom issued so powerful an argument against war, as has the great Russian artist, Vassili Verestchagin, in his wonderful paintings depicting various scenes in the Russo-Turkish war. Verestchagin is called a leader of the realistic school of art. His work is a most fearful realism that lingers an awful memory to condemn everything that has relation to horrid war. This collection was on exhibition in Chicago last winter, and attracted thousands. But not alone for this realistic representation of war is this collection noted. There are few painters who can compare with Verestchagin in sketches of Oriental scenery and character. The mountains that rise like inaccessible barriers along the north of India, the temples, the bazaars, the armies of the East, appear in all their natural grandeur, beauty or repulsiveness. Next to Munkaczy's painting of "Christ Before Pilate," no modern works of art representing scenes in the life of Christ have been so widely discussed as those of the Russian artist. Verestchagin is a writer as well as artist, and his essays on art are original, forcible and entertaining. The Verestchagin collection of paintings, sketches, rugs, jewelry and other articles of domestic and religious use in the East and bric-a-brac have been placed on exhibition in the art rooms of the Interstate Exposition Building on the Lake Front, Chicago, under the supervision of the American Art Association, of New York, and the Interstate Industrial Exposition. No visitor to the city should fail to see this collection.

FOR THE RIVER MISSION.

A package of fifty-two ounces of papers just sent us was prepaid with forty-eight cents in stamps. Thirteen cents would have paid the postage. Packages of papers require only one cent for four ounces. We can use thousands of Cynosures to good advantage. Tracts and S. S. papers are also needed. I. R. B. ARNOLD. Wheeling, W. Va.

THE JESUITS AND THE PRESS.

In connection with Dr. Lansing's powerful address on the Jesuit order, which our report but imperfectly reproduces, we give herewith from the Boston Watchman an abstract of an address of Prof. Townsend on the same subject. Prof. Townsend's name appears among the signatures to the call for the Boston Congress. The Watchman says:

"At a well-attended meeting on Sabbath afternoon, March 31, in Music Hall, Boston, Prof. Luther T. Townsend, D.D., of the Boston University, spoke on the Jesuits and the Press. He said that the press called agitators by hard names, among which 'bigoted' and 'intolerant' were conspicuous, and then they let the objects of their maledictions completely alone. He claimed that there was a tendency on the part of the new agencies to keep all publications in the hands of Roman Catholics. The committee of one hundred sent out their papers regularly, but a number of them were not put on some stands. He declared that the Associated Press was under almost exclusive control of the Roman Catholic church. He also said that it was manifest that the Jesuits had bought up the press of Boston. Reporters were on hand at these meetings, but the press was gagged. Of the meeting held on July 11, mention was made in only two afternoon papers; of the meeting of July 22, in Tremont Temple, no mention was made. The morning papers, he said, not only refused to make mention of these meetings, but cast odium upon them. He declared that there was not a morning paper in Boston that was not working against the interest of Protestantism, and that this fact was a reproach to the city. The speaker declared that he knew of fifty priests guilty of vile behaviour, but not a paper has mentioned any of them. He said there was not a paper in Boston but had one or more Roman Catholics on its reportorial staff and one or more in the editorial rooms. 'A Jesuit sits at every man's elbow,' he declared, 'if not inside the office, then outside of it.'

"The speaker said he despised the priest less than the editor. In this connection attention is naturally directed to the course of the daily press of Boston as to the Constitutional Prohibitory Amendment. By some means, with a single exception, the batteries of the dailies are open in opposition thereto, or silence is maintained, though the Amendment is heartily favored by nearly all of three prominent Christian denominations—Baptist, Congregationalist, Methodist, and also by that large and noble body, the Women's Christian Temperance Union. Surely the Amendment has a respectable advocacy, to say the least, and it is noteworthy that nothing else has evoked such hostility as it has called forth from several of these dailies. Why is this so? is an unavoidable inquiry. It is to be hoped that Prof. Townsend's statements concerning the subserviency of the press to papacy do not afford a solution of an otherwise perplexing problem as to the treatment of the Amendment by the daily newspapers of Boston. Without contradiction, the statement is continually made that the liquor interest has contributed one million dollars in Massachusetts to defeat the adoption of the Amendment, and the question naturally arises, what is done with such a large amount of money? If what Prof. Townsend says about the Jesuits and the Press is not incredible, then the assertions which are freely made concerning the liquor interest and the press may not be unworthy of serious consideration.

THE HOME.

BETWEEN TWO YEARS.

What wonder that, as I sit alone,
 Counting the steps of the departing year,
 Waiting the slow and solemn chime to hear,
 That tolls the requiem of the Old Year gone,
 A solemn awe should o'er my spirit spread,—
 A strange, still sense of mystery and dread?

What wonder, when I know that at my door,
 Unseen, unknown, the waiting New Year stands,
 Grasping a sealed scroll with his hands,
 With strange, dim characters inscribed o'er,
 Wherein lies hid, in awful mystery,
 All that the coming year shall bring to me?

Perchance that sealed scroll may hold withal
 Some sad death warrant for the friends I prize;
 Or my own name amongst them haply lies;
 Or sorrows worse than death yet to befall.
 Or there be writ, in characters of gold,
 Some joy to crown my life with bliss untold.

I watched the old moon in its slow decline;
 So pass, Old Year, beyond life's stormy sea.
 Whate'er the waiting New Year brings to me,
 I know 'tis ordered by a Hand divine,
 So, fearless, 'mid the wild bells' mingled din,
 I ope the door and let the New Year in!

WHAT IS IT TO BE A CHRISTIAN?

A few weeks ago the editor of Zion's Herald requested a number of representative men and women in the religious world to furnish for publication brief and adequate answers to the question, "What is it to be a Christian?" The following responses will be read with interest and profit:

Charles Parkhurst, pastor of Madison Square Church, New York, says: "To be a Christian is humanly to incarnate the very life of God; and thus to be, in the strictest sense of the expression, a little Christ in our own little world."

Charles W. Eliot, LL. D., president of Harvard University, says: "I beg to say that to my thinking he is a Christian who accepts Jesus Christ as the best moral and spiritual guide the world has ever seen, and tries in his spirit to love and serve God and man."

Bordon P. Browne, LL. D., Professor of Philosophy, Boston University, replies: "To be a Christian is to live in loving submission and active obedience to the will of God, trusting in his mercy in Jesus Christ."

Hon. Franklin Fairbanks, president of Fairbanks Scale Company, says: "To be a Christian is to believe on and to follow the Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God, one of the Trinity. (Acts 8: 37; John 11: 27.) To be a Christian, one must have a change of heart, the 'new birth.' (John 3: 3-5.)"

Joseph Cook, lecturer, author, editor of Our Day, writes: "A Christian is one who has obtained deliverance from both the love and the guilt of sin through the new birth and the Atonement; one who has the faith that makes faithful; one who loves what God loves, and hates what God hates; one who has gladly, affectionately and irreversibly accepted God in Christ as both Saviour and Lord; one who sees God as Creator and Saviour so vividly and intelligently as to be willing to accept him as Ruler also; one who so beholds the Cross of Christ that it is no cross to bear the Cross."

Hon. Robert C. Pitman, LL. D., Judge of the Superior Court, replies: "The simplest answer is the best. It is to be a disciple of Christ. Or, as Dr. Thomas Arnold puts it in one of his letters: 'The purpose of his heart and mind is to obey and be guided by Christ, and therefore he is a Christian.' This suffices for entrance upon the Christian life, and is the all-sufficient test of fellowship. The ultimate aim must be likeness to Christ."

Rev. Arthur T. Pierson, D.D., editor of the Missionary Review of the World, says: "To be a Christian is to accept Jesus Christ as Saviour and Lord; as Saviour, to save from sin's penalty and power; as Lord, to rule over the heart and life. A Christian is, therefore, one who heartily believes on Jesus, and is therefore a follower of him."

Marion Harland, editor of the Home-Maker, says: To be Christians is, first of all, to believe, love and trust our Crucified, Risen and Ascended Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ, for our temporal salvation from sin, and eternal safety from the consequences of sin. As the fruit of this act of "saving faith," it follows that we should grow, daily, into likeness to him, and nearness to him, looking to him for counsel, comfort and strength. If we love him, we will keep his commandments. His Spirit informs the desires and shapes the actions of his true children. Thus springs into exercise the highest form of humanity. As he loved us, we must love also one another.

Mrs. Lucy Rider Meyer, principal of the Chicago Training School, and superintendent of the Chicago Deaconess Home, says:

To be a Christian is:

1. Not to be a church member, though all Christians ought to be church members.

2. Not to be religious, though all Christians will be religious.

3. Not to "give one's body to be burned," though all Christians, by the grace of God, would, if need be, give their bodies to be burned.

To be a Christian is:

1. To be born of God. "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God."

2. To be saved from sin. "Thou shalt call his name Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins."

3. To be like Christ. "It is enough for the disciple that he be as his Master."

4. To possess Christ. "He that hath the Son hath Christ."

Theodore L. Cuyler, pastor of Lafayette Avenue Church, Brooklyn, says: "Jesus Christ answered this question when he said that whoever would be his disciple must deny himself and follow him. The man, therefore, who forsakes his sins, and by the help of the Holy Spirit endeavors to keep the commandments of his atoning Saviour and Lord, is a Christian. Faith joins the sinner's soul to the sinner's Saviour."

John P. Newman, bishop in the Methodist Episcopal church, responds as follows: "You ask, 'What is it to be a Christian?' There is a world of difference between a Christian and a Christ-like man.

"We count Christians by hundreds of millions, but the Christ-like people are reckoned only by millions. He who accepts Christ as 'God manifested in the flesh;' his teachings as divine revelations to mankind; his ordinances of religion as the holiest obligations; his conditions of repentance, faith, conversion, as essential to eternal life; his claims on the love of the soul, the purity of the life and on charity for man and devotion for God, is a Christian by profession of faith, as distinguished from all unbelievers, whether in heathendom or Christendom. This is the honorable difference between the believer in the Lord and the Jew, the infidel and the pagan. Such are historical and doctrinal Christians, and the world is full of them. Let us believe that many such are beautiful in morality and lovable in philanthropy. This is an immense power seen in governments, in systems of education, and in social reforms. All hail! to a power so potent and sublime! All this is the fruitage of a true professional conviction.

"But there remains something deeper, broader, grander, to be possessed. The measure of this better estate ranges from a desire to 'flee from the wrath to come,' to 'all the mind that was in Christ,' dominating the whole man, and an individual incarnation of Jesus, so that 'Christ liveth in me.' To cherish this desire by all possible means of grace, until all that is evil in us is eliminated, all that is good in us is brought to maturity, and all that is lacking in us is supplied, is the duty and privilege of each. Within these extremes are all true Christians. The 'bruised reed' and the 'smoking flax' are not to be despised. The 'leaven in the meal' and the 'mustard seed' in the earth are symbols of heavenly grace in the human heart. This is the babyhood of the Christian, lovable and beautiful as infancy. Beyond is the manhood, wherein the Christ-spirit holds every appetite and passion within the limits of law—purifies each motive, exalts each purpose, ennobles each aspiration, intones the conscience to the severest morality, enshrines the love of God and man in the 'heart of hearts,' and lifts up the human will and the divine will in their duality into a perfect oneness in our Lord.

"Many have attained thereunto. They are walking in white; their conversation is in heaven. To them prayer is the habit of the soul. Faith is the normal condition of the spirit. Love is enthroned. Oh, that this experience may be my realized answer to your question, 'What is it to be a Christian?'"

ELIAS HOWE AND THE SEWING-MACHINE.

In the enlightened days of the nineteenth century the great inventors enjoy a brighter and sunnier lot than did those who lived in ruder and darker times. The modern inventor is seldom the victim of ignorance. He is no longer hunted down by fierce and fanatical superstition. He is no longer thought to be a sorcerer, for his magic is seen to be the product of intellect and reason. He is now courted and popular, and shares with the great soldiers, statesmen, and explorers the gratitude of nations. Yet modern inventors have by no means always found the path to success and wealth an easy one. If the inventors of the olden time often suffered violence and death, so those of a later period have sometimes been forced to face misconception and ridicule, poverty and long-enduring privations, injustice and robbery, before they reached the goal of their ambition.

A striking illustration of this fact is found in the life of the inventor of the sewing-machine.

Elias Howe was a native of the beautiful town of Spencer, which is spread over the crest of high hills in central Massachusetts. His father was both farmer and miller, and Howe's boyhood years were spent amid quiet rustic scenes. When he was a child no one would have guessed that he was destined to do any great thing in the world, for he was small of size, feeble in health, and suffered from lameness in one foot from his birth. His father was very poor, and as soon as the little lad was able to work at all he helped his father in the mill and on the farm.

When he was eleven years old Elias was "put out," or apprenticed, to a neighboring farmer, but in a short time, being unable to endure the hard farm-work, he returned for a while to his father's mill. Already he began to take an interest in tools and machinery. He mended furniture, and during his spare hours he spent his time in learning the uses of such tools as his father had, and making all sorts of things with them. His fondness for mechanics developed rapidly, and at sixteen, resolute of will though frail of body, he set out from his country home and repaired to the great manufacturing town of Lowell. He worked for two years in the Lowell mills on small wages, at the same time studying and mastering the details of the machinery which was used in them.

Then he moved to Waltham, and went to work in the mills there. At Waltham was working at the same time a cousin of Elias Howe, who has since become famous both as a statesman and a soldier. This was Nathaniel P. Banks. The two cousins little thought when they were toiling at the Waltham looms that one would become Speaker of the National House of Representatives, Governor of Massachusetts, and a Major-General in the army, and the other would become forever famous as one of the greatest inventors of all time.

"While he was in the mills Elias grew more and more interested in machinery, and he soon began to dream of being an inventor. This led him, when he was about twenty years old, to repair to Boston, where he found an employer who was an inventor, and kept a shop in Cornhill. In this shop Elias earned nine dollars a week. He now fell in love, and although he was earning but a small pittance he was imprudent enough to get married. The early days of his wedded life were full of hardship and privation; but all was borne with cheerful courage by him and his young wife.

It was while their fortunes were at this low ebb that the idea struck Elias Howe which was to give him a new object in life, and which was to lead him, through many misfortunes and miseries, to fame and fortune. His awakening to the knowledge of his powers of invention was as sudden as that of Edmund Cartwright, who invented the power-loom, and as romantic as that of William Lee, the inventor of the stocking frame. Love, indeed, was the wizard which called his inventive genius into action. Howe sat by his young wife one day, in their dismal lodging, not knowing where the next day's food would come from, and with starvation staring them in the face. The wife was busily sewing, and Howe was watching her. All of a sudden the question occurred to him whether a machine could not be made which would take stitches many times faster than his wife could. By a little thought it seemed to him that such a machine might take fifty stitches while his wife was taking one.

This idea, when once it had got fixed in his mind, never left it. He went to work at once thinking out the plan of such a machine. He first attempted to attain his object with a needle which had its eye in the middle, and which was sharp at both ends. Then with difficulty he made with pieces of wood and bits of wire a rude model, which, however, rude as it was, convinced him that with toil and patience a working sewing-machine could be made.

He moved to Cambridge, where his father was living, and had the good fortune to fall in with a friend, George Fisher, who lent him five hundred dollars to continue his experiment, and soon after took Howe and his family into his own house. After the lapse of six months, Howe had completed his first machine, which was about a foot and a half high. He showed it to the Boston tailors; but some of them laughed him to scorn; others feared that it would ruin the tailoring trade if it were brought into use: not one of them would purchase it. Then came a period of bitter poverty and ill health, during which Howe depended upon charity for sustenance.

We see him, just as soon as he could raise as much as a pittance, taking passage in the steerage of a sailing vessel for London, cooking his own food as he made the cheerless voyage across the ocean, giving the use of his machine to a capitalist in London, who, as soon as his workmen had learned how to manage the sewing-machine, cast Howe adrift, Howe pawning his clothes to pay for the wretched supply of beans which barely kept body and soul together, spending four months in making a machine, which he sold for twenty-five dollars; and at last, returning destitute, but never despairing, to his native land.

He arrived in New York to learn that his devoted wife was dying at Cambridge, and he had not money enough to make the journey thither. He earned it in a New York machine shop, and reached his wife's bedside just in time to see her die. So poor was he that he was forced to borrow a suit of clothes in which to follow her to her grave. A few days after, he heard that the ship which contained all his worldly goods had gone to the bottom of the sea.

Yet Elias Howe stoutly persevered, and rose bravely above all his difficulties. At last the sewing-machine was introduced, successfully established, and came into rapid demand on every hand. At the age of thirty-five his income from his great invention was two hundred thousand dollars a year. At forty-eight he was worth two millions. His later life was not one of ease and idle luxury. He dispensed generous and quiet charities, he was kind and benevolent, and sturdily patriotic.

For this millionaire, lame as he was, and wearied as he might well have been after such a life of toil and trials, was one of the first to respond to the call to arms at the outbreak of the civil war. He enlisted in the army as a private, shouldered his musket, and went into the ranks; and when, on one occasion, the pay of his regiment (the Seventeenth Connecticut) was behindhand, he himself promptly advanced the thirty thousand dollars needed to supply the wants of his fellow-soldiers. Not long after the close of the war Elias Howe, not yet an old man, died, leaving the record of a noble, generous life, and a name ever to be honored among the great inventors of the age.—Harper's Young People.

Charles Clendenning, the oldest resident of Allegheny county, Pa., died some time since, aged 101 years. The deceased never used whisky or tobacco in any form, and up to a few weeks before his death was remarkably healthy. He leaves behind him three or four generations of descendants and a host of friends who will sincerely mourn his loss.

A Christian "walks worthy of his vocation" when his life is so far transparent that the grace of the Gospel shines forth in holiness on every side and from all his relations, as a candle in a crystal glass, not in a dark-lantern, lightsome one way and dark another.

Men look upon the success of our efforts and judge us by these, but God looks at the efforts themselves.

THE LAST DAY OF THE YEAR.

This year is just going away,
The moments are finishing fast;
My heart, have you nothing to say
Concerning the things that are past?
Now, while in my chamber alone,
Where God will be present to hear,
I'll try to remember and own
The faults I've committed this year.

O Lord, I'm ashamed to confess
How often I've broken thy day;
Perhaps I've thought of my dress,
Or wasted the moments in play;
And when the good minister tried
To make little children attend,
I was thinking of something beside
Or wishing the sermon would end.

How often I rose from my bed
And did not remember my prayer;
Or if a few words I have said,
My thoughts have been going elsewhere.
Ill-temper, and passion, and pride,
Have grieved my dear parents and thee,
And seldom I have really tried
Obedient and gentle to be.

But, Lord, thou already hast known
Much more of my folly than I.
There is not a fault I can own
Too little for God to descry;
Yet hear me and help me to feel
How wicked and weak I must be,
And let me not try to conceal
The largest and smallest from thee.

The year is just going away,
The moments are finishing fast;
Look down in thy mercy, I pray,
To pardon the sin that is past;
And as soon as another begins,
So help me to walk in thy fear
That I may not with follies and sins
So foolishly waste a new year.

TEMPERANCE.

FATHERS, READ THIS.

Bad for Minneapolis! Of three hundred boys in the North Side High-school, over half smoke cigarettes, while one-fourth of them are "confirmed smokers." So are one-fifth of the boys in the Winthrop School; while it is said of the Hawthorne School that every boy smokes, "several confirmed smokers being only six years of age." Moreover, "the boys who do the smoking are uniformly the poorest pupils, the habit rendering them dull and stupid." Bad for Minneapolis; but it may be as tolerable for her in the day of investigation as for many other of our cities. The teachers threaten to appeal to the law, but this will avail nothing. There is a sentiment in our cities utterly hostile to the restriction of the liberty of man or boy to gratify appetite. Consistency is something of a tyrant, and officials who wink at the violation of law every day on the part of men feel rather awkward in enforcing law against boys—especially if the boys are but following their own example.

Where, then, is the remedy? Shall we join the enemies of the public schools; declare them to be the nurseries of vice, and demand their abolishment? Or shall we not rather cleanse the fountain of youth at its head—the home? But who shall do it? It is the way nowadays to visit the sins of children on the heads of the mothers. Kate Field takes the field against her kind in the New York Herald, and argues that because "the average woman does not govern her children," she would make a mess of politics; for is not politics "the art of governing?" Maugre the dictionaries, the bigger half of politics is the art of being governed—of living under law; but, waiving that, do men govern their children? After a pretty wide and varied experience as pastor, teacher and neighbor, in country, town and city, I affirm that many times the larger share of the government of the children—the restraint, influence and directive power that makes for righteousness—is due to the mothers; and that many of the follies and vices to which boys are addicted are copied from the fathers in spite of the mother's influence to the contrary. Nay, more, much of the insubordination and disrespect for parents, so painfully apparent amongst youngsters, is owing to the disrespect of fathers for the opinions, wishes and feelings of the mothers. The desire seizes one often (on the secular side) to kick some supposed-to-be-respectable man for open and gratuitous disrespect to his wife in the presence of his children. It is easy to see after which side this smoking is copied; and everybody knows that if the fathers opposed it as earnestly and consistently as the mothers, it would be practically abolished. This is equally true of the worst habit of drinking, gambling, etc. The average American father must somehow be brought back to a sense of his own responsibility.—Christian Standard.

IOWA'S DECREASED CRIME.

The criminal statistics of Iowa are published biennially, and the report for 1888 is not yet ready, for it is waiting for the 1889 report. But through the courtesy of Secretary of State Frank D. Jackson, the Voice is enabled to present the official figures for ten months of 1888 that have especial bearing upon the liquor question. These are given below, comparisons being made with the figures for the five previous years:

Total convictions in the State: 1880, 1,081; 1881, 1,370; 1882, 1,470; 1883, 1,377; 1884, 1,592; 1885, 1,339; 1886, 1,645; 1887, 1,520; 1888, 838.

Total expenses of counties on account of criminal prosecutions, not including fees of District Attorneys: 1880, $313,141.10; 1881, $358,535.50; 1882, $401,431.18; 1883, $361,173.78; 1884, $379,580.81; 1885, $413,349.77; 1886, $421,024.31; 1887, $282,877.66; 1888, $300,424.06.

Population: 1880, 1,624,615; 1885, 1,753,980; 1888 (estimated), 2,000,000.

The prohibitory law of Iowa went into effect, nominally, in July, 1885, but the serious enforcement did not begin until 1887, after the passage of the Clark act. The effect was immediately seen in a decrease in the number of convictions for crime and in a very large decrease in the aggregate amount expended for criminal prosecutions. On the basis of the official statistics for ten months of 1888, there were fewer convictions for crime than in any former year for eight years, notwithstanding the large increase in population, so beneficial had been the results of prohibition.

More interesting still is an official statement from Secretary Jackson in reference to the empty jails of Iowa. He writes:

"Of the ninety-nine counties in Iowa, in 1888, there were fifty-five which reported no commitments to county jails."—N. Y. Voice.

KING OF POISONS.

"Alcohol drinking must be called alcohol poisoning. You can't speak of a temperate use. It is nothing but a poisoning business right through from beginning to end. It is a poison that takes the active substance from the nerve tissue. It bites the nitrogen from the ganglia of the brain and the nerve-cells wherever and whenever it comes in contact with them. It creates an illusion of warmth and strength while it is only reducing the temperature and wasting the strength. Truly I may call it the King of Poisons, the King of Frauds and the King of Nuisances. As a nuisance it destroys the nervous system of the individual that drinks it, and leaves the whole body sick and rotten with stuff that it cannot throw off. Look at those purplish, twisted veins in the nose of a toper and you will understand what I mean. An individual with waste matter in his blood that he cannot throw off through the kidneys, the skin and the lungs, has scarcely any chance in diseases of an inflammatory nature. An individual who habitually takes alcohol, even in what are called moderate quantities, runs great risks. The nuisance that it is outside in society at large you yourselves know full well. I also call it the King of Robbers."

Prohibitionists in Maine lately made a surprising discovery that an astonishing amount of Jamaica ginger was being sold for drinking purposes, not only by druggists, but by grocers in every hamlet. It was demonstrated that some makes of ginger contained a large per cent of alcohol.

In Birmingham, England, the guardians of the poor have resolved that the customary allowance of beer to the paupers at Christmas should be stopped, "because of the disorder which appeared to be inseparable from its use." Instead of beer they are to have tea, fruits and other extras.

A STUDENT MOVEMENT AT UNION PARK.

The hour from five to six o'clock is given to devotions at the Chicago Congregational Seminary. The professors and students meet in a hall given by Philo Carpenter, and which bears his name. At the right of the platform is a bust of Deacon Carpenter. By invitation of the faculty President J. Blanchard addressed the one hundred and seventy-five students last Tuesday evening, in their regular hour of worship. It was an occasion of great interest to many of the students as they had never before seen President Blanchard. For more than a half hour he delighted his audience with reminiscences of the great minds in the Congregational church, as Dr. Parks, Woods, Skinner, and many others. Facts which modern publishers suppress, and ordinary eulogists think it will not do to mention concerning these great men, Dr. Blanchard took occasion to place before his hearers. That they had been "filled with astonishment," as Prof. Moses Stuart said he was, on contemplating the Masonic "trifling with oaths and with the awful name of the ever-blessed God," very few have means of knowing. To theological students, the names enumerated above are bed-rock, and the utterances of those great minds are oracular. President Blanchard caused them to speak again with good effect. Way was made for a free discussion of the merits and demerits of the secret society system. Many young men have declared themselves opposed to secretism for reasons. One young man says he found it necessary to give up Masonry when he became a Christian. Another says he found affiliating with saloon-keepers and black-legs in the Odd-fellow lodge, was a great damage to him in trying to save the souls of men, and especially of those with whom he associated.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. A pious couple, vs. 5-7. We have here a beautiful picture of true marriage. With one common aim,—to glorify God; with all their hopes and desires fixed on things heavenly and eternal, there could be no room for any question of "rights" in this divine equality of service. We can be sure that such a marriage was not entered into hastily, or without a serious considering of its duties and responsibilities. The decay of the family institution and the modern prevalence of divorces has its root in low and false ideas on this important subject. "They were both righteous before God." God does not recognize any double standard either in religion or morals. What his word condemns in one sex is equally condemned in the other. But society holds and teaches this double standard, and it is to this defective education that the great proportion of unhappy marriages and consequent divorce suits can be traced. One great blessing was withheld. "They had no child." Yet, as our lesson unfolds, we see that God held even this coveted blessing in store. God may be keeping the realization of our heart's dearest wishes to be our joy in eternity, though in this life he may seem to deny them.

2. The vision in the Temple, vs. 8-12. God has his "set times to favor Zion," and his chosen places for peculiarly manifesting his presence. In the services of the sanctuary, at communion seasons, and wherever his people meet for prayer, there is a sacred influence, a spiritual atmosphere most favorable for seeking and obtaining a blessing. Zacharias, without doubt, believed that God was present in the temple, accepting his offering in behalf of the people worshipping outside, and yet he was troubled at the appearance of one who was only his messenger! The fact that many Christians would be frightened if they should receive immediate answers to their prayers is a part of the same inconsistency. A consideration of the age in which Zacharias lived will show us one reason why he was so ill prepared for this angelic vision. For four hundred years there had been no prophet in Israel. God had ceased to openly manifest his presence, and a cold formalism had taken possession, with but a few exceptions, of priest and people. Christ's coming was to inaugurate a new age of miracles, of which this vision of Zacharias is the first recorded instance. It is when we offer to God the pure incense of praise from hearts wholly consecrated to his service that we may expect special communications of his will. The place of answered prayer is always nearest the altar.

3. The angel's message, vs. 13-17. There is here undoubted reference to his life-long wish for a son. He had probably given up all hope of such a blessing, and on this particular occasion it could not have been the burden of his prayers, as his duty at this time was to make intercession for the people; but, as in the case of Cornelius, these prayers, which for years had seemed to win no answer, had now "come up for a memorial before God." "He shall be great in the sight of the Lord,"—a very different standard of greatness from that which generally prevails among men. "He shall drink neither wine nor strong drink." No indulgence which confuses the intellect, or dims the spiritual consciousness, could be allowed in him who was to be inspired for his great work by the direct power of the Holy Ghost. Yet the command is to all "to be filled with the Spirit," and anything which clogs the medium through which that Spirit acts should be shunned by every Christian who wants God to use him. This is one of the strongest arguments against wine-drinking, tobacco, intemperance in eating, or any bodily indulgence which unfits us for the highest service. John was to inaugurate one of the greatest revivals the world ever saw. Though comprising but a limited area, it accomplished its result—of "making ready a people prepared for the Lord." So we have reason to believe that Christ's second appearing will be preceded by such a spiritual awakening as will make ready a people prepared to receive him,—though, as with ancient Israel, it may be but a very small proportion whose hearts are thus turned to their coming Lord.

PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS FROM PELOUBET.

1. Obedience to God's commands is the gateway to high experiences and large blessings.
2. It is right to pray for temporal blessings, but much more earnestly for the salvation of the world.
3. Prayer is like incense, composed of the fragrant spices of praise, penitence, faith, hope, love; offered on the altar of the heart; kindled by the love of Christ.
4. The best gifts come in answer to prayer—Jesus's transfiguration, Job's prosperity.
5. The answer is often delayed, but it is sure to come, often in unexpected ways and times.
6. The answer, long coming, is better than we dared to hope.
7. True greatness is the greatness of love, of character, of usefulness.
8. Christianity has special care for the children.

—Christianity is advancing very rapidly in Japan, yet there are still 250,000 Buddhist priests in the empire, or more than eight times the total number of Christians.

—Rev. J. E. Rankin of the Valley Congregational church, Orange, N. J., has accepted the presidency of Howard University, Washington, D. C. His resignation takes effect Jan. 1, when he will assume the duties of his new position.

—Dr. Pentecost, having completed his meetings in Airdrie and Coatbridge, where they were accompanied with marked success, has begun a month's campaign at Dundee in response to a hearty requisition from thirty-seven ministers and many leading citizens.

—Mrs. Sarah B. Lansing, wife of Dr. Gulian Lansing of the United Presbyterian Mission, died at Cairo, Egypt, in the last week of November. She was the daughter of Rev. Dales of Philadelphia, sailed for Damascus, Syria, in September, 1854, was married to Dr. Lansing in 1867. Her thirty-five years of mission work were of great value.

—The Salt Lake Tribune says the Scandinavians are rapidly leaving the Mormon church. They are returning to the Christian church faster than the elders can send over fresh supplies, and when once converted from Mormonism make excellent citizens.

—The massacre of the German missionaries at Dar-es-Salam, on the East African coast below Zanzibar, has been followed by the massacre of an English missionary named Brooks with sixteen of his followers, at Saadani, a point nearly opposite Zanzibar. These massacres, committed by the Arabs and natives under their control, in the rising against the Germans, were not unexpected. The course of the Germans, who had no experience with the African Arabs or natives, was such as to provoke hostility. They established their commercial enterprise last August, and in a few weeks the Arabs were put in arms. The blockade of the coast maintained by Germany infuriates the rebels because it stops their traffic, and they will, it is feared, massacre all the missionaries on whom they can lay hands.

—Missionary interests have become very extensive in East Africa. The Church Missionary Society and the Universities Mission, of the Church of England; the Established and the Free Church, of Scotland; the London Missionary Society, the United Methodist Free Churches, and the Church of Rome, all have missions on the coast or in the interior. The Church Missionary Society has two distinct lines of missions—one with its basis at Mombasa, in the English Sphere of Influence, with eight stations, some of which are on or near the coast and some in the interior. One is in the neighborhood of Mount Kilimanjara. The second line of stations is that which stretches from Zanzibar to Uganda. There are nine stations in this line. The Universities Mission has twelve stations, one at Zanzibar, four in the Usambara country north of Zanzibar, four on or near the River Rovuma, and three on the east shore of Lake Nyassa. The two Scottish churches have—the Free Church five stations on Lake Nyassa, the Established Church one on Lake Shirwa, at the south of Lake Nyassa. The route to this region is by the Zambesi and Shire Rivers. The London Society goes further west than any of the other societies and plants two stations on Lake Tanganyika. The United Methodist Free Churches have two missions in the Mombasa region, and one in Gallaland. Three German Protestant Societies have five stations—three in Gallaland, one in Zanzibar and one in Dar-es-Salam, where one of the massacres took place. It is the Berlin Society which maintains the last two stations.

THE WEEK OF PRAYER.

TOPICS SUGGESTED BY THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE FOR THE UNITED STATES FOR JANUARY 5TH-12TH, 1890.

SABBATH, JANUARY 5TH.—SERMONS.—The church of Christ. Prayer for the power of the Holy Spirit to work a great revival among Christians. Eph. 1: 15-23.

MONDAY, 6TH.—CONFESSION AND SUPPLICATION.—Confession of sin and failure in the past, and prayer for consecration to a holier life. Prayer for the church universal that there may be more of love and co-operation among Christians of every name; for the gift of the Holy Spirit; for greater faithfulness to Gospel truth; for large accessions of consecrated young men to the ministry; for pastors and other laborers in Christ's vineyard. Psalm 32; Nehem. 9: 1-21; Eph. 4: 1-16; Heb. 13: 7-21; 1 Tim. 4: 1; 2 Cor. 4: 1; John 4: 35-38.

TUESDAY, 7TH.—NATIONS AND THEIR RULERS.—Prayer for all in authority; for the enactment of wise laws and their faithful administration; for the abolition of the traffic in intoxicating drinks; for the repeal of all laws which protect vice; for the sanctification of the Lord's day; for social purity and all other needed reforms, and for the recognition by all men that "righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people." 1 Pet. 2: 13-25; 1 Tim. 2: 1-4; Eph. 5: 18; Acts 16: 13; 1 Pet. 2: 1-12.

WEDNESDAY, 8TH.—THE YOUNG.—Prayer for special grace and wisdom for those who are charged with their training; for a great increase in the number of earnest Christian teachers in schools, colleges and universities; for more abundant spiritual fruit from Sunday-schools, and from organizations of young men and young women. Eph. 6: 1-18; Psalm 119: 1-16; Acts 20: 28-38; Prov. 8: 9; Col. 3: 1-17; 2 Tim. 1: 1-13; Joel 2: 28, 29.

THURSDAY, 9TH.—THE CHURCH AT HOME.—That the church may be awakened to an appreciation of her increased opportunities and responsibilities for bringing the Gospel to every home in cities, rural districts and new settlements, and to our immigrant population. Isa. 62: 1-4. John 1: 35-46; 17: 20-23; Mark 2: 3-5.

FRIDAY, 10TH.—THE CHURCH ABROAD.—Prayer for missionaries; for those who are preparing to enter the foreign work, and that their number may be greatly increased; for native pastors and helpers; for missionary schools and colleges; for native churches and converts, especially such as endure persecution for Christ's sake; for the suppression of the opium traffic, the rum traffic, and the slave trade; for the manifestation of Christ as the promised Messiah to God's ancient people, Israel; for the quickening of nominal Christians; for the conversion of Mohammedans and heathen. Rom. 11; 2 Cor. 3; Jer. 31: 1-14, and 31-40; John 4: 31-43; Matt. 9: 27-38; 2 Cor. 5: 8-21.

SATURDAY, 11TH.—THANKSGIVING.—For manifold blessings, spiritual and temporal, public and private; for the maintenance of peace among the nations; for answers to prayer; for the progress of Christ's kingdom; for a growing spirit of Christian love and co-operation; for the increasing number of those who have dedicated themselves to the service of missions; for the privilege of being permitted thus unitedly to lay our requests before God during this week of prayer. Psalm 107; 1 Sam. 2: 1-10; 1 Chron. 29: 10-15; Isa. 12; Eph. 1; Rom. 12; Psalm 135.

SABBATH, 12TH.—SUBJECT OF SERMONS.—The Future Glory. Isa. 2: 1-5; Dan. 2: 34, 35.

LODGE NOTES.

The lodge of "Red Men" have a woman's degree called "Daughters of Pochahontas."

The Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers have also a female attachment known as the "Grand Auxiliary of the brotherhood."

In Denmark there is one Provincial Lodge, nine St. John Lodges, and two St. Andrew's Chapters. The membership is 3,472. King Christian is High-Protector, and the Crown Prince Grand Master of the Craft.

The "Northwestern order Knights and Ladies" is among the latest inventions of the devil to please the ear with promises of relief, etc. The main business of the lodges of the order in Chicago seems to be attending dances.

In Alabama the Grand Commander was asked for a dispensation to allow a Commandery to appear as an escort at the marriage of one of its members, which was refused, a wedding not being considered a Masonic event. Women are left with Christ, idiots and umbrellas outside the lodge.

In his report to the Brotherhood of Railway Brakemen, now in session at St. Paul, Vice Grand Master Slattery admonished the men to take no part in the relief schemes of certain railway companies, alleging that "they are only a snare to draw you on and make you a slave to your employer." This is the lodge reply to the effort of employers to benefit their men.

The Grand Secretary's report of the Grand Lodge of Washington Territory, 31st annual communication, gives five dispensations granted during the year for new lodges. A petition has also been received for the opening of a lodge in Sitka, Alaska, which had not been acted upon because not made in the form prescribed by the Constitution and By-laws of the Grand Lodge.

W. Fred Pettit was arrested at Columbus, O., lately, charged with the murder of his wife, who died quite suddenly July 17. Her death caused a suspicion of strychnine poisoning. Her body was exhumed, and an analysis of the stomach and liver showed a large quantity of poison. Mr. Pettit was a Methodist minister at Shawnee Mound, Ind. He is a member of the bar, and the Grand Prelate of the Grand Commandery of Indiana Knights Templars, and a thirty-second degree Mason.

A secret conference between General Master Workman Powderly of the Knights of Labor and Evan Jones, president of the Farmers and Laborers' Union, at St. Louis, which lasted until an early hour in the morning, resulted in a thorough understanding being reached, and President Jones said that confederation was now an established fact. Mr. Powderly delivered an address next day. He was enthusiastically greeted. Mr. Powderly paid attention to the land question, railroad transportation, the formation of the Knights of Labor, and the present and future hopes of the order. He related how the Knights had attempted to run a co-operative coal mine in Indiana, in which they were thwarted by the railroads.

Homer L. McGraw, who was expelled from the Knights of Labor at the Atlanta convention, gave the press an extended statement, in which he makes some serious charges against the leading officials of the order. Mr. McGraw was at the head of the insurance association of the Knights of Labor for three years. The charges were preferred against him by the officers of the Window Glass Workers' Association, he says, because he had been instrumental in collecting evidence to prove that President Campbell and other officers of the Window Glass Workers' Association had assisted in importing forty-five English glass-blowers, now at work at Jeannette. He alleges that the action of the convention was unconstitutional. One of his accusers, Charles Litchman, he offered to prove from the records, was at one time short in his accounts, and only paid them when threatened with criminal prosecution.

tion. He was not given the chance. On the 6th inst., at a meeting of Warehousemen's Assembly 1,790, K. of L., at Pittsburgh, Pa., Homer McGraw, Grand Secretary, who was expelled at the Atlanta convention, was reinstated. Under the law an expelled member can be reinstated by a three-fourths vote of a local assembly, and at the meeting last night McGraw received the unanimous vote of the assembly. This action is regarded as the precursor of a bitter fight between Powderly and anti-administration factions of the order.

The committee representing the Modern Woodmen camps of Rock Island county lately addressed a circular in reply to an anonymous communication recently sent out with the purpose of discouraging the calling of the head camp. This circular intimates that the communication emanates from Head Counsel Root or his friends, and sets forth the urgent necessity of a head camp meeting. The circular also contains sensational matter not yet published, and which is to the effect that the committee has learned that camps advertised in the official organ of the order as 717, Forest City, Neb.; 746, Maquon, Neb., and 894, Westerville, Ill., are fictitious; that no such postoffices exist in the States named, and that the members of the order have been contributing to the maintenance of these fraudulent camps for some time.

A GREAT SUCCESS.

The Equitable Homestead Corporation, an association incorporated under the laws of California, has now ONE THOUSAND ACRES of the finest raisin land in Fresno county in process of cultivation.

SO MANY INQUIRIES

have been made about the organization of this colony, and the profits of raisin culture, and such a desire manifested to have the Equitable enlarged so as to admit more members, that I have decided to organize another colony association on the same plan.

NOTE THIS:

I have 2,000 ACRES of land which I will dispose of in the following manner: It is divided into five-acre lots and multiples of five. It will all be planted in raisin grapes and other fruits and cultivated at actual cost, the purchaser paying in cash just what it takes to plant and cultivate it, which he may do in small installments during three years' time, which brings

HOME AND HEALTH.

WHAT A WIFE OUGHT TO KNOW.

Mrs. Dinah Mulock Craik has the following suggestions in one of her articles on woman's responsibilities in money matters: Very few men have the time or the patience to make a shilling go as far as it can; but women have; especially a woman whose one thought is to save her husband from having burdens greater than he can bear; to help him by that quiet carefulness in money matters which alone gives an easy mind and a real enjoyment of life; to take care of the pennies—in short, that he may have the pounds free for all his lawful needs and lawful pleasures, too.

Surely there can be no sharper pang to a loving wife than to see her husband staggering under the weight of family life, worked almost to death in order to "dodge the wolf at the door," joyless in the present, terrified at the future; and yet all this might have been averted if the wife had only known the value and use of money, and been able to keep what her husband earned, "to cut her coat according to her cloth," for any income is "limited," unless you can teach yourself to live within it, to "waste not," and therefore to "want not." But this is not always the woman's fault. Men insist blindly on a style of living which their means will not allow; and many a wife has been cruelly blamed for living at a rate of expenditure unwarranted by her husband's means, and which his pecuniary conditions made absolutely dishonest had she known it. But she did not know it, he being too careless or too cowardly to tell; and she had not the sense to inquire or find out.

Every mistress of a household, especially every mother, ought to know what the family income is and where it comes from, and thereby prevent all needless extravagance. Half the miserable or disgraceful bankruptcies never would happen if the wives had the sense and courage to stand firm and insist on knowing enough about the family income to expend it proportionately, to restrain, as every wife should, a too lavish husband, or, failing in that, to deny herself all luxuries which she cannot righteously afford. Above all, to bring up her children in tender carefulness that refuses to mulct "the governor" out of one unnecessary half-penny, or to waste the money he works so hard for in their thoughtless amusement.

THE HOT-WATER CURE.

Relative to hot water as a remedial agent, Hall's Journal of Health publishes some interesting hints. It says:

A strip of flannel or a napkin folded lengthwise and dipped in hot water, and wrung out, and then applied around the neck of a child that has the croup, will usually bring relief in ten minutes.

A towel folded several times and dipped in hot water, and quickly wrung and applied over the seat of the pain in toothache and neuralgia, will generally afford prompt relief. This treatment in colic works almost like magic. I have seen cases that have resisted other treatment for hours, yield to this in ten minutes. There is nothing that will so promptly cut short a congestion of the lungs, sore throat, or rheumatism as hot water when applied promptly and thoroughly.

Pieces of cotton batting dipped in hot water, and kept applied to old sores, or new cuts, bruises and sprains, is the treatment now generally adopted in hospitals. I have seen a sprained ankle cured in an hour by showering it with hot water poured from a height of three feet.

Headache almost always yields to the simultaneous application of hot water to the feet and back of the neck.

A goblet of hot water, hot as one can drink it, taken half an hour before bedtime or twenty minutes before breakfast, or both, is the best of cathartics in the case of constipation, while it has the most soothing effect on the stomach and bowels. This treatment continued for a few months, with proper attention to diet, will cure any curable case of dyspepsia, and it will give relief almost from the first glass. Try it and you will never regret having done so.

Many an otherwise handsome face is disfigured with pimples and blotches, caused by a humor in the blood, which may be thoroughly eradicated by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It is the safest blood medicine in the market, being entirely free from arsenic or any deleterious drug.

HAVE YOU READ IT?

It will create a sensation and "open" the eyes of every true American to see the "Danger Ahead," and expose the secret of Rome's attack upon our Public Schools. This wonderful book is none other than

THE SECRET INSTRUCTIONS OF THE JESUITS.

Published by an ex-Romanist.

This work is a translation from the Latin of the "Secret Instructions of the Jesuit Society." Its revelations are startling, showing to what depths of deceit the Jesuit priest and all connected with this Order of "Spies" and "Traitors" will descend to accomplish their unholy aims. It is printed in the original Latin with the English translation parallel, thus doing away with the anticipated charge of forgery by those who set a premium on murder and treason.

A history of the Order of Jesuits and their expulsion from every Catholic country is given; also, the reason why the Public Schools must go.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; OR FREEMASONRY SELF-CONVICTED. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. 207 pages. Postpaid, 40 cents each.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. 15 cents each.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the GRAND LODGE OF ILLINOIS. Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. H. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each.

History of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. 25 cents each.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' LETTERS on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Price, cloth, $1.00. Paper, 35 cents.

Hon. Thurlow Weed on the Morgan ABDUCTION. This is the legally attested statement of this eminent Christian journalist and statesman concerning the unlawful seizure and confinement of Capt. Morgan in Canandaigua jail, his removal to Fort Niagara and subsequent drowning in Lake Ontario. 5 cents each.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene. In cloth, 75 cents. Paper covers, 40 cents.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Pres't J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen 50 cents.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District North western Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. Published at the request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion. A clear, cutting argument against the lodge, from a Christian standpoint. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. W. P. McNary, pastor United Presbyterian Church, Bloomington, Ind. This is a very clear, thorough, candid and remarkably concise Scriptural argument on the character of Freemasonry. Five cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Stearns' Inquiry into the Nature and TENDENCY OF FREEMASONRY. With an Appendix treating on the truth of Morgan's Exposition and containing remarks on various points in the character of Masonry, and a Dialogue on the necessity of exposing the lodge. 338 pages: cloth, 60 cents each; per dozen, $5.00. Paper covers, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.00.

FARM NOTES.

AGRICULTURE IN THE UNITED STATES.—Here are a few figures from the report of Secretary Rusk: Agriculture produces an annual yield of nearly $4,000,000,000; employing on the 5,000,000 farms 10,000,000 persons, representing a population of 30,000,000 people; while the estimated value of the live stock is $2,507,000,000. The number of sheep in the country, instead of being augmented, has been reduced 7,000,000 head; while the importation of wool has increased from 78,350,651 pounds in 1884 to 126,487,729 pounds the past year. He calls attention to the fact that while the head of the agricultural department has been made a cabinet officer, there has been a lack of sufficient appropriations for carrying on the necessary work. Of the countries that are the competitors of the United States in the markets of the world, Great Britain appropriates for agriculture $1,500,000; Germany, $2,850,000; Brazil (for agriculture, mining, etc.), $20,000,000; France, $8,000,000; Austria, $4,000,000; others, greater or less amounts.

INFLUENCE OF PLACIDITY ON THE SECRETION OF BUTTER FAT.—During the remarkable public test of the Jersey cow, "Value 2d," when she gave over twenty-five pounds of butter in seven days, it was found that one day she produced one pound less butter than upon the preceding and following days. This, of course, led to enquiry and speculation as to what could be the cause. It was found that, after being turned out as usual, to spend the night in a small pasture with two companions, threatening clouds came rolling up with muttering thunder, and so, rather than expose "Value 2d" to the storm, she was brought into her roomy stall, with cows upon every side of her and all things very comfortable, and a manger full of green fodder besides. Still she worried a little and called for her companions. Though she fed well and appeared all right, she fell off in her butter yield just about one pound. This and some other confirmatory observations lead me to think that the mental condition of the cow may have more to do with her butter yield than the kind of feed.—American Agriculturist.

FORETHOUGHT AGAINST FIRES.

Attempts to kindle fires by pouring oil from cans when there are live coals in the stove is a fruitful source of accident to persons and property. If kerosene must be used for this purpose, corncocks or partly decayed sticks of wood soaked in the fluid are best; these will kindle even hard coal. Lamp explosions are prevented by keeping the lamps as nearly full as possible and the little holes in the burners open. A lamp should be filled and trimmed every twenty-four hours, by daylight, and not by its own light at night, nor that of another. Incipient fires are the most easily extinguished by smothering with rugs, blankets or carpeting. When one's clothing is on fire, it is folly to run out of doors, for this but adds fuel to the flame. The person should be wrapped in blankets or something of the kind, or even roll over and over on the floor. Breaking lighted lamps by dropping or knocking them over is a source of fires which can only be prevented by care. Many who have children resort to the commendable practice of keeping tallow candles to run about the house with, and others will use only stationary lamps. Have iron hooks in the barn to hang lanterns on, and carry no light into the hay-loft. Chimney flues should be examined often and any defect remedied. Dwellings sometimes take fire when the soot is burning out of chimneys. The burning in a chimney can be stopped instantly by throwing a handful of salt on the fire in the stove or fireplace. Fires often occur where stove-pipes pass through ceilings and partitions. These places should be made secure and be examined frequently. Wire all stove-pipes. Wood ashes are next to kerosene in causing fires. Often they are placed temporarily in the woodhouse, are forgotten, and a fire springs up from the smoulder-

Ayer's Hair Vigor

IS the "ideal" Hair-dressing. It restores the color to gray hair; promotes a fresh and vigorous growth; prevents the formation of dandruff; makes the hair soft and silken, and imparts a delicate but lasting perfume.

"Several months ago my hair commenced falling out, and in a few weeks my head was almost bald. I tried many remedies, but they did no good. I finally bought a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor, and, after using only a part of the contents, my head was covered with a heavy growth of hair. I recommend your preparation as the best in the world."—T. Munday, Sharon Grove, Ky.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for a number of years, and it has always given me satisfaction. It is an excellent dressing, prevents the hair from turning gray, insures its vigorous growth, and keeps the scalp white and clean."—Mary A. Jackson, Salem, Mass.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for promoting the growth of the hair, and think it unequalled. For restoring the hair to its original color, and for a dressing, it cannot be surpassed."—Mrs. Geo. La Fever, Eaton Rapids, Mich.

"Ayer's Hair Vigor is a most excellent preparation for the hair. I speak of it from my own experience. Its use promotes the growth of new hair and makes it glossy and soft." The Vigor is also a cure for dandruff."—J. W. Bowen, Editor "Enquirer," McArthur, Ohio.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for the past two years, and found it all it is represented to be. It restores the natural color to gray hair, causes the hair to grow freely, and keeps it soft and pliant."—Mrs. M. V. Day, Cohoes, N. Y.

"My father, at about the age of fifty, lost all the hair from the top of his head. After one month's trial of Ayer's Hair Vigor the hair began coming, and, in three months, he had a fine growth of hair of the natural color."—P. J. Cullen, Saratoga Springs, N. Y.

ing embers. When taken up ashes should remain in sight until removed to a place of safety; it is dangerous to store in cellar, even in stone or brick receptacles, for, under certain conditions, they burn as readily as tinder, and make an intensely hot fire. Keep matches in metallic boxes and out of reach of children, who so often play "cook dinner" out of doors and sometimes cause disastrous conflagrations; also out of reach of rats and mice.—Galen Wilson, in N. Y. Tribune.

The way to make money is to save it. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the most economical medicine to buy, as it is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "100 doses one dollar." Do not take any other preparation if you have decided to buy Hood's Sarsaparilla.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

President Harrison has transmitted to the Senate the extradition treaty with England negotiated by Secretary Blaine and Sir Julian Pauncefote. By its terms the number of extraditable offenses is largely increased, the most important addition being that of embezzlement, so that if the treaty be ratified Canada and the United States will cease to exchange a class of undesirable residents who have hitherto secured immunity from punishment.

A bill introduced by Senator Cullom Friday to establish a limited postal-telegraph service, authorizes the Postmaster-General to contract for five years with any existing telegraph company for the use of its lines for the transmission of postal messages between free delivery offices, the Postmaster-General having authority to determine between what points the lines shall run. The messages are to be prepaid with stamps, at rates to be fixed by the Postmaster-General, and are to be delivered by the letter-carriers.

The Senate on Wednesday, by a vote of 52 to 11, confirmed the nomination of David J. Brewer of Kansas to be associate justice of the Supreme Court. The negative votes are said to have been cast by Senators Blair, Wilson (Iowa), Colquitt, Reagan, Berry, Jones (Ark.), Call, Moody, Allison, Chandler and Pettigrew. Senator Edmunds, it is said, declined to vote.

CHICAGO.

The Chicago Herald Publishing Company was sued yesterday in the Superior Court by ex-Juror John Culver of the Cronin murder case for $25,000 damages for alleged libel.

Mr. Milton George has given to the Illinois Industrial Training School for Boys a valuable 300-acre farm in the town of Bloom near this city, to be used for the purposes of the school. Mr. George would have the friendless city boys educated and taught the use of tools, particularly of farm implements. They would then be fitted to till the soil intelligently and to supply in some measure the drainage of country boys into the city.

COUNTRY.

Reports are published showing that since 1880 the taxable property of the United States has increased $6,963,000,000, and that in the same period the actual wealth of the country increased $18,662,000,000. The total wealth of the country, exclusive of public property, is placed at $61,459,000,000.

A call has been issued by the "Anti-Partisan W. C. T. U." for a meeting for organization at Cleveland, Ohio, Jan. 22 next. With the call is an address to the public, setting forth the alleged defects of the existing National W. C. T. U. and offering reasons for the formation of a new association.

The Utah commission met at Salt Lake City to hear the Mormon charges against the deputy registration officers for the city. The allegations were so indefinite that the commission called for more specified charges. These were furnished Friday, and the hearing began on the claim that the registration officers were favoring Gentiles and discriminating against the Mormon voters. The commission decided that the charges were not sustained, and quoted from a decision of Judge Zane that registration officers have discretionary duties as well as ministerial, and, while up to certain points they must register any one who offers to take the legal oath, they may afterward strike off names if in their judgment, on proof, the persons practice polygamy.

At the meeting of the Miners' Progressive Union at Indianapolis resolutions were adopted asking the miners and mine-workers in this field to prepare to put the eight-hour day in force May 1, 1890; that the miners of Illinois be requested to use every available means to establish a shorter interval between pay-days, and that in order to raise a general fund mine-workers in the district be assessed $1 a head for the months of February, March, and April.

Gov. Miller signed the prohibition bill for North Dakota Thursday. The interstate prohibition convention, in session at Omaha, sent a message to the Senate congratulating that body upon the promptness with which it passed the prohibition bill. The law goes into effect July 1st.

Gov. Mellette of South Dakota has visited the dry districts. He says there are two centers of the dry districts. Miner county in the south and Faulk county in the north. Excepting a light crop in western Faulk there was almost a total failure of crops in these counties and in portions of the adjacent counties, except to the west, making in each case a dry district somewhat greater than double the area of each county. There are many cases of absolute destitution, and would have been suffering but for the prompt assistance furnished from all other parts of the State and also adjoining States. The railroads are donating coal and hauling articles free to unlimited extents. The people are unusually healthy and in good spirits.

A shocking accident occurred at the Tilden Public School, Detroit, while some sixteen girls were rehearsing a Christmas cantata. The costumes of the girls were made of light gauze, and trimmed with cotton batting. One of the performers had a wand with which she accidentally struck a candle, igniting the wand. The flames were communicated to the children's clothing, and all were burned more or less. Of the eight most seriously burned two have died.

The deputy internal revenue collectors seized the winery, distillery, wines, brandies, cooperage and personal property of the Fresno Vineyard company, amounting to $500,000. It is said to be the largest seizure ever made in California. It is claimed that the amount of brandy made and disposed of was in excess of that accounted for.

The little town of Petrolia, Pa., once the scene of the liveliest oil happenings in the country, was desolated by a fire which started at three o'clock Sunday morning. The flames raged fiercely, helped by a high wind, until the entire business portion of the town was destroyed, a blow from which the place will doubtless never recover, and its 700 inhabitants will seek a new place to live in some other oil town.

The town of Pineville, Ky., was visited by a destructive storm of wind and rain early Sunday morning. Several dwellings and three business houses were swept away by the cyclone, which only passed through the center of the town. Two brothers received serious injuries. Several people had miraculous escapes. The loss is estimated at about $50,000.

FOREIGN.

By an executive decree promulgated Saturday by the new government of Brazil, the ex-Emperor Dom Pedro is banished from Brazil for two years, together with the members of the royal family; and Senator Martino, Governor of the Rio Grande do Sul, charged with treason as the leader of the movement for the secession of that State, is condemned to transportation. The decree recalls and cancels the grant of 5,000,000 milreis to Dom Pedro, and suspends his allowance in the civil list. The news of this decree has been withheld from Dom Pedro by the advice of his physicians.

The charter of the South African Company has been issued at London. The charter describes the regions of the company's operations as immediately north of Bechuanaland and west of the Portuguese possessions, and north and west of the dominions possessed by the Transvaal Company. This includes the vast tract of Central Africa north of the Zambesi River and west of the coast line in Mozambique, to which it is now the policy of England to limit the Portuguese. The company is bound by the conditions of the charter to oppose and discourage the slave trade and the trade in spirits.

A shell exploded in the artillery magazine at Baku, Russia, causing a general explosion in the munitions stored there and the destruction of the building. The noise of the exploding shells and rockets sounded like a bombardment. One hundred thousand cartridges were destroyed. Four persons were killed and four injured.

Reports have been received at London of the massacre of Siberian exiles. It is alleged that a party of exiles, having hesitated, contrary to orders, in regard to the withdrawal of a petition, were attacked by police and soldiers. Six were shot dead, including a young woman. Nine were wounded. The pretext for the attack was that the petition was of a rebellious character. A court-martial condemned three of the survivors to death and the others to long terms of imprisonment.

A private cable dispatch from Rio Janeiro states that fresh disorders have broken out in that city and that further complications are feared. It may be regarded certain that there are troublesome times ahead for Brazil. The downfall of the army and the probable confiscation of church property have caused a virtual combination of European monarchies inimical to the new republic, who may follow up protest by force.

Advices from Shanghai state that the railway projects in China have been suspended, owing to political intrigues and popular opposition to the construction of the lines.

The Daily Press, of Troy, New York, in an editorial on long-lived reformers, notices the remark concerning the late Oliver Johnson, that he was the last of the Abolitionists, and quotes from the Brooklyn Eagle a long list of yet living reformers of another generation which is headed by the venerable and beloved Whittier. The Press makes a further addition of the name of the Cynosure editor, and very happily compliments the aged men with the remark that "nature seems reluctant to deprive the world of those who unselfishly consecrate their lives to its betterment."

The peculiar epidemic which last week spread with amazing rapidity through the country, is one of those touches of nature which "makes the whole world kin." One day in a city the doctors find nothing of it, next they are busy with thousands of cases, seldom fatal, but generally disagreeable enough. One of the instructors at Harvard University was its victim Saturday. From every Northern city from Boston to Denver come reports of the thousands of clerks, policemen, and men of every business laid off for a day or two to meditate on the vanity of human affairs. In Europe, from whence it is generally believed we have received the disease, there is far greater fatality, and its visitation in some of the larger cities presents a serious problem. With us it answers at least one obvious purpose—to serve as one warning, of which the poet's story tells us death gives three, that we may be ready when our change shall come.

The murder outbreaks in the South last week may have a partial explanation from the season, but this does not wholly set aside the rule of race prejudice which has invariably applied to such cases. At Barnwell, South Carolina, a white mob took eight Negroes from jail, tied them to trees and riddled them with bullets. At Jesup, Georgia, on the 25th, no one has yet told us just how many black and white were killed, the former largely predominating, as usual. Murders and carousals filled the papers with ghastly reports last Thursday from many parts of the South—and North also. In Washington City there were 191 "drunk and disorderly" arrests on "Christ-mass" day. Never were there so many of this kind before, even when the city was filled with a hundred thousand strangers. Why is this day so notorious for crimes resulting from drink? Can the old pagan Saturnalia spirit never be cast out of it? Or is it that the devil, cast out by the Pope in the fourth century, has come back with seven others worse than himself?

CHARLES G. FINNEY.

"We have, then, the implied testimony of Freemasons themselves, that the Christian church ought to have no fellowship with Freemasonry as thus revealed, and that those who adhere intelligently and determinedly to such an institution have no right to be in the Christian church. In our judgment we are forced to the same conclusion; we cannot escape from it; we wish it were otherwise; we therefore sorrowfully, but solemnly, pronounce this judgment."

The new insect pest which is causing such consternation in Medford, Mass., and the towns around, might point an instructive moral if our easily gulled public would heed it. A few gypsy moths imported from Europe by an experimenter in silkworms, and accidentally let loose, have already stripped large tracts of anything green, attacking fruit and shade trees alike, and the most strenuous endeavors are being made to exterminate the creature before it gets a foothold in the country at large. If our State governments were equally convinced of the harm done by secret benefit orders, and the wide-spread distress which must come on many of the hard-working poor when they finally collapse, equally strenuous measures would be taken to suppress what are as truly schemes of chance as the Louisiana lottery.

It is good news from Washington to read that Senator Edmunds is making preparation to do some much needed temperance work. A few days since he wrote to the City Commissioners, requesting a list of all persons selling liquors, by wholesale or retail, in the District and outside of the city limits. When asked if he intended introducing a bill in the Senate restricting the number of liquor dealers outside the city, he answered that two or three years ago he had endeavored to have licenses refused for places within a mile of the Soldiers' Home. He had been informed that lately the nuisance from this cause had been growing worse and worse, and that something ought to be done for the protection of the disabled old soldiers. When they receive their monthly payments of pensions, they go straight to some saloon, where they are plundered and ruined, for in many cases the poor old invalids are incapable of taking care of themselves. The Senator thinks Congress ought to take some action for their protection; or at least restrict the granting of licenses within a mile in any direction of the Soldiers' Home, and he proposes to present a bill for the purpose at an early day. But the honored Senator from Vermont would show greater wisdom if he began a movement to utterly abolish the saloons in the District.

SONG OF THE CLAN-NA-GAEL.

BY REV. ALEXANDER THOMSON.

We live beneath the starry flag,
But for it care not we;
Our home it is old Ireland still,
The green isle of the sea.
And much we love, all hand and glove,
Our mystic clan to rally,
When Pat and Mike came forth at night
From each back lane and alley.

But don't we love this Union dear?
Yes, no man can deny it;
For as we have a vote for sale,
There's some one here to buy it.
And mighty fine it is we wield
Chicago's big shillaly,
And have a blue coat and a star
For Pat and Mike and Kelly.

Here we can pray God bless the Pope,
And free from Orange scorning,
Can sing with honest rye to cheer
St. Patrick's day in the morning.
Here no men flaunt their Orange rags,
Nor of King William chatter,
And no band moves along our streets
To play the cursed "Boyne Water."

Hurrah! hurrah! for the Clan-na-Gael,
We dig canals and ditches,
And we've a hand in the pockets deep
Of Uncle Sam's striped breeches.
All day we twist the Lion's tail,
At night our courage rises,
And we lay plots of import dread,
And guard against surprises.

Whoe'er betrays our sacred cause,
No man shall hear his groanin';
We'll do our work up better next;
Remember Dr. Cronin.

LODGES AND LIQUOR.

BY REV. W. J. GLADWIN.

In India the Masonic lodges are simply private liquor clubs, according to the testimony of many who have been in them, and from what I have known of their fruits.

Here is an item from Odd-fellowship, as given by their own historian, Theo. A. Ross, 1888, p. 10: "Even to this day some of the original and characteristic features of the order are still practiced in the English branch of the fraternity. In the early days of the institution, after the formal business was transacted, conviviality and good-fellowship became the order of the night, and the brethren, glass and pipe in hand, made the welkin ring with the melody of their favorite songs:

"When friendship, love and truth abound
Among a band of brothers,
The cup of joy goes gaily round,
Each shares the bliss of others."

"Or:

"Then let us be social, be generous, be kind,
And let each take his glass and be mellow;
Then we'll join heart and hand, leave dissensions behind,
And will each prove a hearty Odd-fellow."

While modern Odd-fellow lodges have been influenced by the current of the temperance reform, so as to be less "mellow" than formerly, yet here is their action as to the abominable curse of the liquor traffic. (Ross, p. 540.) "The Sovereign Grand Lodge cannot prohibit members from engaging in the traffic of intoxicating liquors without creating a new test of membership in the order."

How I thank God that in his only true "order" of O. F.'s, viz., Obedient Followers, the liquor traffic is forever settled by divine decree. "Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink."

The woe of Christ is upon all "whited sepulchres" (Matt. 23: 27), even though it may be some of his professed followers that have helped to whiten them.

GLORIFYING GOD.

BY REV. A. SIMS.

If you talk to some professing Christians concerning the duty of always serving God, with an air of self-satisfaction and innocence they will tell you that they have not time to perform many religious duties; as though there were only some special actions that can or ought to be done as duties of moral obligation.

This is a serious and lamentable delusion. The Bible nowhere teaches that under any circumstances is this ruling religious motive to be separate from anything we do. We are to plow and sow and to sell our goods with the same singleness of view to the glory of God that actuates us in church attendance, or praying in our families, or reading the Bible. Mental or physical work, done from this motive, is as truly religious in the sight of the Lord as praying. What cannot be done from this motive is not to be done at all: no matter whether it respects our occupation, dress, eating, drinking, or anything else. The great and first question to be asked, before deciding on anything, is not, "Will it be advantageous to my interests, secure me the favor of men, or help my secular interests?" but, "Will it please the Lord and conduce to his glory?" If, after careful consideration of this question in the light of the Scriptures and much prayer, we see that it would be acceptable to God, our path is clear: but not otherwise. If this principle were carried out, how much, of what is now popular among the great mass of professing Christians, would have to be given up! How speedily would the puffing and blowing, spitting and chewing of tobacco-using professors be abandoned! How soon would superfluous ornaments in dress be discarded, and popular ornamentation be superseded by the adornment of good works! What a revolution would take place in the methods of supporting God's cause! Money raised by worldly devices in the church, would give place to free-will offerings of consecrated souls. What a blessed change would take place in the general deportment of professing Christians! Light, frothy discourse, foolish talking and jesting, would be renounced for sound speech and edifying words. How soon would idle pastimes be set aside, and due time be spent in moral acts that would stand the fires of the judgment day.

It is sadly too true, however, that many of the professed children of God, instead of first consulting the Word of the Lord, are mainly influenced by considerations of temporal advantage. The question with them is not what God requires them to be and to do, but how to appear, and what people will say of them. But what is the end of all such conduct? Facts of history, and the testimony of the Bible, unite in saying, that the final result is disaster, shame and sorrow. Look at the career of Lot after he separated from Abraham. Because the country near to Sodom was well watered, and suitable for his flocks, he chose that place, apparently not heeding the notorious wickedness that prevailed there. But what was the result of this choice? Did he not lose all his property there, and also some of the members of his family? Oh, we may think to benefit ourselves in some instances, by pursuing a course that is not conducive to the glory of God; but we shall meet with disastrous disappointment. "There is a way that seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death." Prov. 16: 25.

At times temporal appearances may seem to be unfavorable to the attainment of the right path; but no earthly loss, however great, must hinder us in this matter. A failure to act in accordance with the principle here laid down, explains the reason of so much darkness in the souls of many professing Christians. Christ says: "If, therefore, thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light. But if thine eye be evil, thy whole body shall be full of darkness!" Matt. 6: 22, 23. Otterville, Ont.

GEORGE F. PENTECOST.

"God's Word prohibits the believer from forming alliances with the ungodly in society. Whenever the Christian surrenders himself to the society of the unbelieving world, his heart will be led away from God. This is especially true of thousands of Christian men who have deliberately yoked themselves up with unbelievers in all manner of secret societies. This course of false alliance is doing more mischief to individual Christian men by turning their hearts away from God and his service, and to the church by depleting and robbing her of her male membership, THAN ANY OTHER ONE ENEMY OF CHRIST. There never was a time when the cry, 'Come out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord,' was more needed than now."—George F. Pentecost in Bible Studies, 1889, p. 389.

WHO MAY NOT SIT AT THE LORD'S TABLE.

BY MISS RUFINA FRY.

The Holy Spirit, by the mouth of Paul, says to the Corinthian brethren, and through them to all saints to the end of time, to eat of the bread and drink of the cup of the Lord worthily. And it would be marvelous, indeed, if in a matter so over-whelmingly important, God's people were left to guess how to worship acceptably in this ordinance. But they are not left in ignorance. God has made the subject so plain that all who will may know if they are obeying his Word.

"Let a man examine himself, and so let him eat of that bread and drink of that cup. For he that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation to himself, not discerning the Lord's body. For this cause [eating and drinking unworthily] many are weak and sickly [spiritually] among you, and many sleep [spiritually]. For if we would judge ourselves we should not be judged." Yet Paul makes the subject still plainer in his second letter, 13: 5 (italics ours): "Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves. Know ye not your own selves, how that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates" [disapproved of God]? There are conditions to be met before Christ can dwell in the human heart and fit us to partake of his table; and unless those conditions are met, the man "eateth and drinketh damnation to himself."

There are but two classes that partake of the Lord's table unworthily. They are, first, all who have not obeyed the Gospel. This class includes all who will "not choose the fear of the Lord," and all who seek to "climb up some other way." To these the Saviour's sad cry is: "Ye will not come to me that ye might have life." There is no neutral ground in the Gospel of Christ; for most emphatically and plainly does the Lord say, "He that is not with me is against me; and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad."

Second, all who have accepted the atonement, and therefore received the "gift of the Holy Spirit," have appropriated their share in the sacrifice, whose names have been "written in the book of life," but "have forsaken the right way," have "departed from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils;" have turned away their ears from the truth, giving heed to commandments of men that turn from the truth. "These be they who separate themselves [from God], sensual, having not the Spirit." These "deny the only Lord God, and our Lord Jesus Christ," and "walk after their own ungodly lusts." These all partake of the Lord's table unworthily, and so eat and drink damnation to themselves.

The effects of this eating and drinking are painfully visible in the church,—the body of Christ. How many weak and sickly members are hindering the progress of Christ's kingdom! How many sleep! How many are trying the impossible feat of drinking the cup of the Lord and the cup of devils, partaking of the Lord's table and of the table of devils!

Those who have obeyed the Gospel, and are adhering members of the secret system, are seeking to do just what Paul says they cannot. Freemasonry is a religious organization, and its numerous progeny is more or less so. Freemasonry has its "chaplains," "priests," "high-priests," "grand high-priests," "altars," "baptisms," and "burial services;" its "temples," "prayers," "hymns," "dedications," "libations," etc., and its members generally think it better than the church.

"Masonry is declared to be a universal system of religion, one in which all men agree."—Mackey's Masonic Jurisprudence, p. 95.

"So broad is the religion of Masonry, and so carefully are all sectarian tenets excluded from the system, that the Christian, the Jew and the Mohammedan, in all their numberless sects and divisions, may and do harmoniously combine in its moral and intellectual work with the Buddhist, the Parsee, the Confucian, and the worshiper of deity under every form."—Webb's Monitor, by Robert Morris, p. 285, art., Religion.

"Initiation signifies the end of the old life, and the new birth to a life of purity and virtue."—Mackey's Ritualist, pp. 22, 23.

Of the candidate about to be made a Mason, it is said: "There he stands without our portals, on the threshold of his new Masonic life, in darkness, helplessness and ignorance. Having been wandering amid the errors, and covered over with the pollutions of the outer and profane world, he comes inquiringly to our doors, seeking the new birth, and asking the withdrawal of the veil that conceals divine truth from his uninitiated sight."—Mackey's Ritualist, p. 22.

"Acacian, 'Innocence,' and signifying a Mason, who by living in strict obedience to the obligations and precepts of the fraternity, is free from sin."—Mackey's Lexicon, p. 16.

"When the Master Mason exclaims, 'My name is Cassia,' it is equivalent to saying, 'I have been in the grave; I have triumphed over it by raising from the dead; and being regenerated in the process, have a claim to life everlasting.'"—History, Cyclopedia, and Dictionary of Freemasonry, Robert Macoy, p. 452.

"We now find man complete in morality and intelligence, with the stay of religion added to insure him of the protection of the deity, and guard him against ever going astray. These three degrees thus form a perfect and harmonious whole; nor can we conceive that anything can be suggested more, which the soul of man requires."—Sickel's Monitor, pp. 97, 98.

"Masonry requires only a belief in the Supreme Architect of the universe and a future life. Under the shelter of this wise provision the Christian, the Jew, the Mohammedan and the Brahmin are permitted to unite around one common altar."—Mackey's Masonic Jurisprudence, p. 95.

Thus we learn from the highest Masonic authority that Freemasonry is a religion, one in which all men agree. It "teaches symbolically, piety, morality and science." "Each man who is about to be regenerated is led by his guardian angel to the door of the lodge, of which it is said, 'Seek and ye shall find, knock and it shall be opened." "Man cannot work or correct the irregularities of life until he is clothed with innocence, or the badge of a Mason." "He then becomes a divine spiritual man or Mason."—Masonic Trowel, by L. E. Reynolds. pp. 101, 214, 219, 237.

"We present the candidate with the apron, the gauge and the gavel, as symbols of spiritual purification." "The lambskin apron is the emblem of innocence and the badge of a Mason." The Master Mason "represents a man raised from the grave, and quickened into another and better existence." "The Master Mason represents a man saved from the grave of iniquity, and raised to the faith of salvation."

It will be seen by every candid mind that Freemasonry claims to regenerate its disciples, and that by strict obedience to its obligations (oaths) fits them for the "Grand Lodge above;" and that it is not of Christ, nor according to his Gospel. The fruits of the two systems, the secret system and the Christian system, are widely different. The fruit of the latter "is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, faith, meekness, temperance; against which there is no law. And they that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts."

The works of the flesh, which includes the secret system, "are manifest, which are these: Adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revellings and such like: they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God." The secret system is an evil, —a corrupt tree, and cannot bring forth good fruit.

In Rev. 13 we read of two beasts which shall operate in the world. Of the first beast it is said, "The dragon (devil) gave him his power, and his seat, and great authority. And all the world wondered after the beast. And they worshiped the dragon (devil) which gave power unto the beast: and they worshiped the beast, saying, who is like unto the beast? who is able to make war with him?" "And all that dwell upon the earth shall worship him, whose names are not written in the book of life of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world." He that leadeth into captivity shall go into captivity." This is final. All who do not worship God through Christ worship the devil, direct or indirect, through the beast, or through his image, which is a modified form of devil worship. These make up that "great city" called "Babylon the Great." Rev. 14:11.

That the religion and worship of the Masonic system is the religion and worship of the "dragon, that old serpent called the devil and Satan," is plain to be seen. Thus it is plain that the Mason professing Christianity, who partakes of the Lord's table, eateth and drinketh unworthily, and so eateth and drinketh damnation to himself. For "ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord and the cup of devils: ye cannot be partakers of the Lord's table and of the table of devils; and I would not that ye should have fellowship with devils."

The path of duty is plain. "As ye have therefore received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk ye in him." "Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering; for he is faithful that promised; and let us consider one another to provoke unto love and to good works." Let "Christ dwell in your hearts by faith; that ye, being rooted and grounded in love, may know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge."

Ligonier, Ind.

There's the make-up of a whole comic opera in the story from Atlanta, Ga., of the development of college-boys' squabble. Some of the most eminent and bloodthirsty colonels in the State have taken up the quarrels of their sons over secret society matters. The rival fraternities' row had reached such a pitch as a challenge for the designation of members to fight to uphold the honor of the respective fraternities. The chancellor ordered that forty members should suspend their connection with the secret societies for six months. This they refuse to do, and will withdraw from the university first.—Boston Record.

DWIGHT L. MOODY.

Give them the truth anyway, and if they would rather leave their churches than their lodges, the sooner they get out of the churches the better. I would rather have ten members who were separated from the world than a thousand such members. Come out from the lodge. Better one with God than a thousand without him. We must walk with God, and if only one or two go with us it is all right. Do not let down the standard to suit men who love their secret lodges, or have some darling sin they will not give up.—Address in Farwell Hall.

THE CHURCH MUST NOT BE SET ASIDE.

BRIEF ADDRESS OF REV. F. O. CUNNINGHAM AT THE BOSTON CONGRESS.

There are two propositions which I wish to lay before you in the time allotted to me, and which I wish to make central in my remarks. These are (1) that the church of Jesus Christ is amply sufficient to meet all man's social and religious needs, and (2) that it is the only organization which has the divine command behind it, and the promise of the divine blessing and presence to remain with it continually.

The church of Christ is unique in its foundation. It does not rest upon Peter, a weak, vacillating, impulsive mortal, whom Christ called Satan in the same conversation wherein the Roman church finds one of its strongest arguments for the "primacy of Peter." Nor does it rest upon the confession of Christ's character and person, which Peter, by the divine revelation, was enabled to make. Christianity rests upon a surer basis than a creed, even a creed so glorious as that of Peter's. The rock is Christ, the "Rock of ages," on which is inscribed in letters of light, "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, to-day and forever." Against this church, thus founded, the gates of hell shall not prevail. The true church is a catholic church, embracing all true and loyal believers in the Lord Jesus Christ, of every name and in every land. Mr. Marvin well says, "The best part of any Christian is that wherein he agrees with all saints, and the poorest part is that which contains his 'ism'."

No organization on earth can take the place of the Christian church. Its principles, purposes, hope, methods and spirit are peculiar to itself. It consists of regenerated men; and as none but the Holy Spirit can regenerate, and as that Spirit is given to the church, it follows that the church alone has within itself the prospective subjects of God's everlasting kingdom. This church, purchased by the precious blood of Christ, owes and owns allegiance to him alone. "Our citizenship is in heaven." Here in the church of Christ abide faith, hope, love, these three links of the truest brotherhood. The church is a royal family, princes of nobler birth than come from earthly parentage. Sons of God! children of the Most High! Walk worthy of your vocation, and touch not unclean things!

The mission of the church is to disciple, baptize and instruct all nations, and in this work she has the pledge of the presence and power of the omnipotent and omnipresent Son of God. There is no ambiguity about this commission, and if we broaden the channel beyond these lines we shall lose the power.

The church is a safe organization in a community. No secular, commercial or political ends are hers, though men may sometimes pervert membership to their selfish profit. The church's sphere is self-sacrifice. Self-denial is the heart of Calvary, the inner meaning of Christ's cross. Her surest investments are men, not mortgages. If the church follows her Lord, the poor will hear the Gospel from her lips, broken hearts will be soothed by her sympathy, and many chains will be broken by her hands. It is a shame to the church that her members feel obliged to enter any organization other than her own, to feel assured of help in times of adversity, or the care for widows in the event of death. The early church attended to these matters herself.

The church has no right to cater to the world, or seek the world's support in her work. Abraham would not accept a thread or a shoe-latchet from a pagan king, lest he should say "I have made Abraham rich." The church of to-day needs to have a little more independence of men, and a good deal more dependence on God, and remove from the world all excuse for saying, "All the church wants of me is my money." Church fairs and festivals are invented to avoid self-denial on the part of members of churches. They may bring some money to the festival, but it is very apt to come forth in a golden calf, which leads away from God, and to a worship of self. The church must do her work on the lines God has marked out if she wishes to succeed. She must be separate from the world, and avoid all tendencies to conformity with it. Do not be deceived by things which seem Christian or that pretend to be. "The devil is God's ape."

"Wherever God erects a house of prayer,
The devil always builds a chapel there;
And 'twill be found upon examination,
The latter has the largest congregation."

The apostate church confronts the true church. The imitation confronts the genuine. It is for the true church to maintain her purity, walk with Christ in heavenly places, and avoid competition with spurious imitations. The church and the secret society can never be wedded, as the Boston Traveler suggests, without a progeny which shall forget God and his pure and spiritual worship. The destiny of the church is to triumph with her King. Blessed are those who are faithful to the end, that with their King they may reign forever.

THE LODGE ANTI-CHRISTIAN.

REMARKS OF REV. J. H. HUGHES AT THE BOSTON CONGRESS.

It has been a blessed relief to me to know of such a convention as this. It voices my principles and testimony for forty years. I did not imagine there was such an organization in existence, one that would venture to assail so gigantic an enemy. We are societied to death in these times. Our men say they have to attend two or three or four societies, which consume their money and their time, so they cannot go to the church of God. When the Sabbath comes they have been out so much that they must have the day for sleep. They can't afford to pay for church work, for they have spent all their surplus on the lodges. These secret societies were originated by the enemy, who is always on the alert to destroy the church of God. The young men are absorbed by some club or some lodge, and it is impossible to get them into a church. Ruin comes to immortal souls from these societies. I must regard them as anti-Christian in their practical working.

When I was laboring in the provinces (Canada), I was asked to join the Masons as an assistance to my work. I could get at so many more men, etc. But I found that wives were not allowed to attend, and so promptly refused to join. I found in the provinces that where those secret societies met, they had what they called a most holy place. It is a brotherhood inside of and aside from the real brotherhood, a fraternal bond more dear than that true one we have in Christ Jesus.

I have observed the work of these societies in courts, and have found the secret fraternities take care of their own members at the cost of justice, and to the injury of the whole community. Their criminal selfishness is too often manifested in this way. But God requires of all men that they should obey him, and give to his service their strength and all their powers. Men have no right to be identified with anything else that shall interfere with a perfect obedience to this manifest will of God. The lodge is most manifestly interfering, therefore, with the Christian church.

I pray God's blessing upon this effort to enlighten men, and warn them against this evil. I have had some personal experience with some of these societies, but I am through with them—with Good Templars and all. Let us be like Christ in all our life among men. He "ever spake openly to the world, and in secret said nothing."

ROMANISM AND MASONRY.

REMARKS OF EVANGELIST THOMAS E. LEYDEN IN THE NEW ENGLAND MEETING, DEC. 12, 1889.

Mr. Leyden said he was pleased to be here as a listener in this meeting, for he found something yet to learn about Roman Catholicism, though once a member of that church. He had the privilege of attending the meeting of the Association at Worcester some time since, and what he there learned of the relations of Romanism and secret societies gave him food for thought for months. He told of his speaking in the streets of New York for Christ and his arrest which followed, though he had a permit in his pocket from the Mayor. If the police would not break up a street Gospel meeting because they were Catholics, they would because ordered to do so by Catholics. The reformed Catholic work had grown to a great power in Boston in the providence of God, and by his grace aiding the work it would continue with increasing power.

In respect to secret societies, he said that he was led in the meeting at Worcester to compare the teachings of Masonry with those of the Catholic church, and he had found to his surprise that they were in a wonderful degree alike. [Applause. One cry, "Not so."] He loved the poor men who had been duped into these systems. They were greatly deceived, and in great danger. Romanism is a great secret institution from the Vatican Council and the Black Pope at Rome to the confessional box in every Catholic church. This church professes great unity and universality, but the fact is there are more sects within her pale than all the sects of Protestantism. The Jesuits are a secret society, and are to-day the great power in the church. The Jesuit priest has more power in America than in any other country. Our work for Christ in opposing all these systems of evil, must be open and in his name. If not, there is danger ahead for us, and for our country.

The boasts at Baltimore were not idle talk. Rome would not permit such a conference of laymen if she were not preparing for some ulterior measure which would fasten her chains upon the necks of Americans more firmly. It is not long before she will take the ban off from Masonry, and all these secret societies will be permitted, but in such a way as to aid the papal power.

If we would successfully contend against this foe of our country and our God we must be bold in the name of Jesus. Don't be afraid to lose a few customers. God will take care of that, and make all our sufferings, for his dear Son's sake, help to bring in his glorious kingdom. God bless you in your deliberations. If there is anything I can do, I am with you with all the help I can render.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

A daily prohibition paper for New England—A possible Masonic help-meet for Dr. Quint—A Girl's Secret Society—A question for moralists—The ignorance of the organizers of secret endowment orders—Other matters—Guizot's conditions of a perfect government.

New England is going to have a daily prohibition paper, some of the leading prohibitionists of Massachusetts having secured control of the Worcester Daily Times. It will be under the same editorial management as the Protest, with which it will be consolidated. The Protest is a lively little sheet, and as the prohibition organ for Massachusetts and New Hampshire has occupied a field peculiarly its own. It requires some pluck and enterprise to start a reform daily. We can only hope for the venture the fullest success, and if New England prohibitionists will give it their support instead of patronizing papers that truckle to the rum power, there need be no fear of failure.

Should Rev. George C. Lorimer accept the call given him by the Warren Avenue Baptist church, Dr. A. H. Quint will have "a worthy companion" to help him uphold Masonry in our New England churches. Our late congress, however, has showed that there are a goodly number of young ministers in that denomination who are not disposed to obey the behests of the lodge beast.

Salem's social circles are agitated over the Girl's Invincible League, a secret organization whose escapades just come to light are not of a gratifying nature to careful parents and guardians. But it is not uncommon to hear of scape-grace male juveniles forming a secret society among themselves for purposes of mischief. Why not the girls? There is an old proverb that what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. We have been in the habit of considering the evil effects of the lodge as confined almost entirely to men, but the secret false worship of ancient times dragged down both sexes. In many of our cities and large towns the inroads made on the home by secret societies in taking away mothers from their families till a late hour at night, and exposing them to unworthy associations, is simply appalling. The easy-going system of lodge morals renders it as much a matter of course for them to go home with men who are not their husbands as to choose their partners for the dance on the same principle. And thus the springs which feed the home are poisoned at the very fountain head.

Moralists may yet find that the growing laxness of the marriage tie and the prevalence of secret societies, are as closely connected as the lodge and the saloon. It is also noticeable that the most insignificant of the endowment orders, the ones "whose greatest secret is that they have no secret," to quote Miss Willard, lead the van in frivolous and corrupting entertainments; and the more as the necessity presses on them to rope in all the new members possible, as their only means of paying off the old.

Insurance Commissioner Merrill's coming report promises to be a very interesting document, as it will be largely occupied with an account of the growth and condition of these same orders. He has from the outset condemned them unsparingly, although Massachusetts law, as it now stands, forces him to "approve" them, but he has always done it under protest. The trouble is with the Masonically-controlled Legislature, which, instead of protecting the people against schemes as hollow as the "South Sea bubble," lets them be fleeced at will. It is said that of the new organizations which have recently applied for incorporation, not one was formulated with a sufficient degree of clearness to cause them to conform to the very simple requirements of the law, and yet it is to these same ignorant and unscrupulous men that the public are trusting their hard-earned savings to such an enormous extent!

The corner-stone of the new State House was laid on Forefather's Day with all the anticipated Masonic ceremonies. The Springfield Republican, which considers the old one plenty good enough (and surely it is if the mental and moral acumen of those we send there be taken as a standard) criticizes the date as glaringly inappropriate, and suggests that the corner-stone had better be laid on the day set apart for fasting, humiliation and prayer. The Pilgrim Fathers would have found abundant reason for the appointing of a special day for prayer and fasting, could they have foreseen how their memories—nay, their very graves—would be dishonored by the lodge.

The Boston Pilot, in view of the late victory for Protestantism in that city, proclaims it as "an immediate necessity that the Catholic population provide schools for their children in which their religious and civil rights will not be outraged by ignorance and prejudice." There promises to be no abatement of the war, and where it will end the most sagacious, far-seeing and deep-thinking minds will be the slowest to prophesy. There is a truce on the question of out-door preaching until next summer, but it is a rather curious fact that while Protestant Republicans oppose opening the parks to either the Labor or the Evangelical Union, the Democratic nominee for Mayor, himself a Catholic, favors it.

Says Guizot, in his History of Civilization: "There are two conditions to perfect government;—one is that the power should attach itself to and remain constantly in the hands of the best and most capable; the second, that the power thus legitimately constituted should respect the liberties of those over whom it exercises itself."

Given the first condition, the second follows. But with the lodge and the saloon dominating our politics, swaying our caucuses and electing our rulers, how far are we from perfect government? And a still more interesting question—how long will it take us to reach that goal at our present rate of progress.

ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

REFORM NEWS.

OUR BUSY AGENT IN ILLINOIS.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—After the Sycamore meeting I went to Kingston and called upon Bro. Worcester, whom I had known in other years. Rev. Hull, the pastor of the M. E. church, was holding a series of revival meetings, which I attended, and was invited to preach. Two persons that evening manifested a desire for salvation, and the pastor invited me to preach again the following night.

Next day Bro. Worcester took me to see several parties in the country, and then we went to Genoa and engaged the Advent church for a meeting, which continued two nights, beginning on Sabbath evening, the 8th of December. We visited the German Lutheran pastor, and sent a notice of our meeting to the M. E. pastor, which he kindly read, and added that he had a laudable curiosity to hear the relation of Freemasonry to the Christian religion discussed, and he presumed many of his congregation felt as he did; and so he would take up his appointment that they might attend the lecture.

Sabbath morning I attended the Methodist church of Kingston, and was courteously invited to assist in the opening exercises; after which I listened to an able and faithful presentation of the Gospel by the pastor. In the afternoon I addressed a Sabbath-school, and in the evening went to Genoa to speak, according to appointment, on "The Relation of Freemasonry, and kindred orders, to the Christian religion." We had a crowded house. The pastor of the Methodist church was present and many of his people. He went with me to my place of lodging, and remained in conversation upon the subject of the lecture until a late hour. He had an engagement to assist Rev. Hull of Kingston in his revival meetings, which prevented his being present the second evening; but the German Lutheran pastor was present on Monday night and manifested his sympathy with the work.

On Tuesday I returned to Kingston, and then went with Bro. Worcester to a town five miles distant to prospect for another meeting. We saw the M. E. pastor and a member of the Swedish Lutheran church. They each regarded our work with favor, and an arrangement for a meeting there will be made, I think. The next day, by invitation, I dined with the Methodist pastor of Kingston, and then left for home, to rest and write, and prepare for another campaign.

I have met four Methodist pastors, none of whom are favorable to the secret lodge system. I have been on two presiding elders' districts. I did not meet either of the elders, but learned that one of them was free from the lodge yoke, but was pained to learn that the other is a Knight Templar Mason. Let fervent prayer be offered, and earnest, loving effort put forth for the deliverance of every honest man who has been ensnared by the lodge.

After the Genoa meetings, I went to Aurora, and Batavia, and secured a church in each city to hold meetings in for the discussion of the lodge question. In Aurora two churches were offered me, the Free Methodist, and the Swedish Lutheran. We will use the latter. At Batavia the meeting will also be in the Swedish Lutheran church. Sabbath morning I went to the M. E. church, Kingston, and assisted in the opening services. In the afternoon I attended Sabbath-school at a little village near Kingston, and at its close, gave an address. Bro. Worcester then took me about six miles to Kirkland, where we had arranged for a lecture. The meeting was to be in the Swedish Lutheran church, the M. E. pastor having consented to take up his appointment and attend. But when we arrived at Kirkland we found the M. E. church lit up for evening service. The pastor said that some of his congregation had protested against his taking up his appointment to go to the lecture, and so he had concluded not to do so. Though disappointed, I was not discouraged. A fair congregation had assembled when we reached the Swedish church, and they continued to come until the body of the church was filled, and the ushers had to direct the overflow to the gallery. I don't know what we should have done with the people if the Methodist minister had carried out his original purpose. When we consider that it was a moonless night, and that the roads were very muddy, and that the Swedish congregation mostly live in the country, the gathering of the people in such numbers was a marked indication of interest in the subject to be discussed. At the conclusion of the lecture I promised to speak again on Monday night.

After the meeting closed I was interviewed by Prof. Gross, the principal of the public school of Kirkland, who is a Knight Templar Mason, and the master of the Masonic lodge at Kingston. He wished to be heard in defense of Masonry. After discussing the religious pretensions of Masonry, the conversation turned on the Masonic covenants. I had announced that I would show, if there was time, that the assumption so generally made, that those who renounced their Masonic covenants are perjured villains, is groundless. I proposed to put the dynamite of truth under that assumption and blow it to atoms. He said that expulsion was the highest penalty incurred by those who violated their Masonic covenants. I drew my hand across my throat and said, "What does this mean, then, if expulsion is the highest penalty known in Masonry?"

"You don't mean," said he, "that that is ever inflicted?"

"O yes I do," I replied. "A Masonic lodge on the Delaware river punished a Mason by cutting his throat from ear to ear; and Mr. Brownlee, of Illinois, was punished by cutting his throat and tearing out his tongue, as related to me by his near relatives."

This interesting conversation was abruptly brought to a close, as I stepped aside to confer with the sexton, while the master retired from the church.

The one thing needed to carry on this work is money. If I had it, I think my zeal is strong enough to go to this war at my own charges. But, like Paul, I live in my own hired house, and I am obliged to have the support of the friends of Christ, and the lovers of equal justice and personal liberty, or it is impossible for me to go forward in the work. And what you do needs to be done quickly. If you can pledge $100 to the support of the work, do it, please, at once. If you cannot pledge $100, then pledge $50, or $25, or, if this is beyond your means, some smaller sum. But do quickly what you can do. Don't wait until your State agent is forced, by your neglect, to abandon the field. Consider that funds are needed now, and let each reader of the Cynosure immediately respond to the call of your agent for help to go forward in the work. And let each one be a committee to canvass for money and pledges among the circle of your acquaintance. Send your pledges and money to the treasurer of the Illinois Christian Association, Ezra A. Cook, 17 River St., Chicago, Ill.

C. F. HAWLEY, State Agent.

GAINING GROUND IN OHIO.

MT. VERNON, O., Dec. 23, 1889.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Since my last report of work in Ohio I have been permitted to hold some excellent meetings, which, I trust, will result in lasting good. December 5th I visited Dalton, a pleasant village of about 1,000 inhabitants, ten miles west of Massillon. I was most kindly received and entertained by the pastor of the Presbyterian church, Rev. Mr. Newell. I lectured on the 6th and 7th in a large, well-filled hall to most attentive and respectful congregations. My subject was the Secret Lodge System in its relations to Christianity and Civil Government. Quite a number of Masons and Odd-fellows were present. One of the former affirmed that what I said was "entirely false." Another, who had been a member of the same lodge, and an older Mason, said, "It was all true." Both are physicians, the first an infidel, the other a member of the United Presbyterian church. "Where doctors differ who shall decide."

On Sabbath the 8th I preached in the morning in the Presbyterian church, and at night gave a lecture on Africa and the missionary work. Pastor Madge of the U. P. church postponed his evening service and united with the Presbyterians, and a fair collection was taken. Next day I went home and enjoyed a brief visit with my family. On the 19th I visited Cleveland and called on friends of the reform. On the 20th I lectured in the United Presbyterian church at Fredricksburg. I was sorry to find pastor Long and his estimable wife both seriously sick, but I was kindly received by pastor Moore of the Presbyterian church; and, notwithstanding the night was dark and stormy, the attendance was fair, and there was a good degree of sympathy with our work.

On the 21st I went to Gann in Knox county, stopping over night with Bro. Day of the United Brethren church, and preaching next morning in the M. E. church to a good congregation. I was glad to know that my testimony against the lodge system was kindly received by some good brethren who had been duped into Odd-fellowship. I stayed to the afternoon service and listened to a good sermon from the pastor. I then walked four miles to Buckeye City, where I was kindly entertained by Elder Ross of the Brethren (Dunkard) church, and preached in their fine new house of worship to a large congregation. My text was Eph. 5: 11, 12, and as there were a good many lodge members present there was quite a commotion. A large part, however, were in sympathy, and nearly all were eager for tracts. Your brother in Christ,

H. H. HINMAN.

CORRESPONDENCE.

GREAT IS DIANA.

KANSAS CITY, MO.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The great conclave of Knight Templars at the nation's capital recently, flaunting their pageantry and tinsel in the eyes of the people, displayed the head of the serpent of secret orders that threatens to yet choke to death our beloved Republic. A correspondent of the Waukesha Freeman thus described their display:

"Our beautiful Pennsylvania avenue has been the scene of many grand and historic processions. Newly-made Presidents have been escorted over it by long lines of soldiers and triumphant politicians; funeral dirges have mingled with the sound of the tramping feet of this great highway; and 'the grand review,' when for three days the returning soldiers filled its wide spaces from curb to curb, as they passed from the Capitol to the White House, was a sight that some who witnessed it tell me they cannot recall without a thrill of patriotism."

"But in some respects the parade that formed and marched up the avenue last Tuesday, was the most unique and brilliant procession that we have ever seen. Twenty thousand long ostrich plumes, as many pairs of gauntlet gloves, together with the swords, the sashes and the badges, made up the 'regalia;' eighty-six bands furnished the music; and countless beautiful banners, a bear and an eagle, gave the diversity. The Sir Knights were truly a splendid-looking body of men, and the city welcomed them with gaily-decorated streets, a brand new pavement on the avenue, and the most beautiful weather that ever comes in October."

"For an entire week our streets, our public buildings, our shops and our homes have been filled with this Knightly company. I think that the two strongest impressions that they have left are wealth and courtesy. Hundreds of thousands of dollars must have been spent in this general interchange of good feeling. The four home commanderies kept 'open house' all through the week. A gentleman told me that the table alone at one of the headquarters cost $5,000. But each State did the same thing. The California people had a carload of fresh fruit sent on each day. I think that the Golden Gate Commandery rather took the palm for magnificence. Their regalia was literally 'cloth of gold,' together with the trappings of their horses, averaging $1,500 per man."

Rev. Isaiah Faris, of Vernon, Wis., ever on the alert to reprove the secret workers of darkness, published in the Freeman the following brief rejoinder:

"ED. FREEMAN:—It is strange how differently different people will view the same things. I read with astonishment the description by your Washington correspondent of the grand parade of Knight Templars. The cause of my astonishment was that the daughter of a respected Christian minister (as I believe your correspondent to be) could write such a description without one word of disapproval of so extravagant a display in honor of an order which, though professedly Christian, nevertheless being a degree of Freemasonry, cannot be reached without passing through the ordinary Masonic degrees, which are confessedly not Christian, but designed to be of so universal a character that in them the professors of all religions, Jewish, Christian, Mohammedan and heathen, may meet on perfect equality. The pompous display described by your correspondent is certainly inconsistent with the spirit of Christianity on any occasion, but when made to magnify an institution that tends to bring Christianity on a level with all other religions, is especially objectionable, and, it seems to me, that Christians, instead of giving such doings encouragement, should, according to Scripture, 'rather reprove them.'"

M. A. GAULT.

JUDGE ANDERSON'S DECISION.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—In your issue of Dec. 19, you copy an article from the Inter-Ocean headed "A History-making Decision," in which the writer is very sanguine. I did not want to give a word of discouragement, but rather guard against discouragement for the future. I want to warn against putting our trust in the present courts of this corrupt nation. The writer says it is a far-reaching decision, and if sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States as it doubtless will be, it will make an end of Mormonism as a political power. It is a righteous decision, and ought to be sustained and enforced by the United States courts in all its bearings. But, humanly speaking, can we expect it from our present judiciary?

The writer says it is a far-reaching decision. Let us see. Is it not too far-reaching to be sustained by our present courts? The ground upon which these foreigners were refused the right of franchise was that they had sworn absolute allegiance to a church, the hierarchs of which claim to be God's vicegerents on earth, and having the power to bind and to loose, and therefore any law or constitution framed by any human power must be accepted or rejected as it meets with the approval or disapproval of those vicegerents. Does not this form a precedent which the present courts will be unwilling to follow in parallel cases hereafter? If foreigners are unfit for citizenship because they have taken such oaths, ought native Americans, who are bound by the same oaths, to have the right of franchise? And will not the same ruling disfranchise Jesuits, Romanists, Freemasons and members of other secret orders? Certainly it ought to.

But I fear we cannot expect our present judiciary to sustain such a decision. Let us not be discouraged if we are disappointed in such expectation. Our hope is in God. He is our help and our shield. May he give us a vision of the invisible Divine armies and chariots of fire which surround us in this righteous warfare. The walls of this Jericho of secretism must fall; but it will not be by the thirty-two thousand nor the ten thousand of Gideon's army, but by the select band of three hundred. And it will not be by the battering ram, nor by the modern artillery of the nineteenth century, but by the trumpets of the little faithful band. God grant that the present providential disclosures may bring such a wave of light over the land as shall reveal the iniquity of secretism as it was revealed in 1826 and after. But the thousands of dumb watchmen upon Zion's watch-towers at the present time will have a fearful account to give at the judgment when they meet the many young men who have been led to ruin by their neglect.

FROM AN ANTI-SECRETIST OF MORGAN TIMES.

A NEW STUDENTS' MOVEMENT.

CHICAGO THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY,
Dec. 26, 1889.

There is no time for play to those who are absorbed in their work. Half the Seminary year has gone and proved the advantages of this "school of the prophets" to be abundant. This transfer from college to seminary is usually made with fear and trembling, but in a very short time an adjustment is made to the new environs. Amid all the new faces and new duties there is the theological student's one purpose held in common, and that makes way soon for social and friendly converse. The college clans soon give way to one huge Christian brotherhood. The earnest spirit of the faculty is supplemented by that of the students; a missionary enthusiasm pervades the whole school. Several of the senior class are booked for the foreign field. The missionary Society of Inquiry meets fortnightly and is well sustained, when the program is worthy of the presence of busy men. Interesting reports of the different missionary conventions held in this city and in New York during the fall have been given by Professors Boardman, Scott and others. Moral, social and political reforms find a place in the press of class duties. Anti-saloon, anti-papal and anti-secret society papers are at hand, and bring highest prices at the students' paper sale.

Judging from my present acquaintance with the members of the faculty, it would be a matter of surprise to find in them a want of sympathy with the National Christian Association work. It must be obvious to all disinterested men of Christian thought that it is very important that the church should be informed as to the serious objections to oath-bound secrecy.

Several young men of the Seminary have expressed a desire to have a "Look-out" committee, whose duty it will be to bring in things new and old from this portion of the great battle-field. A candid hunt for facts concerning secretism, and a just weighing of arguments and principles, will be in keeping with the straightforward nature of this great school.

EDGAR WYLIE.

READY FOR EVERY CHRISTIAN REFORM.

MILLVILLE, N. J.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I received a few copies of the Cynosure a week or so ago, which it has given me the greatest of pleasure to read almost entire. I have often seen the paper before, and was once a subscriber to it for a short time, being obliged to discontinue it because of limited means, but do believe that I can truly say that I was never so well pleased with it as at present. I know that my opinion in such a matter does not weigh much, and is therefore hardly worth the reading, and that it would doubtless be considered fulsome and vain by many, yet I will take the liberty of saying that of all the reformatory papers I read (and I read a good many of the very best and most wide-awake prohibition and other reformatory papers published,) I find none so generally instructive and entertaining to me on all of the moral issues and reforms now before the American people as the Cynosure.

I am a strong third-party Prohibitionist myself (am president of the local club in this city), and enjoy reading the New York Voice, Pioneer, and Weekly Witness, and the Beacon very much, but they are practically and perhaps necessarily the advocates of but the one reform, prohibition, and dare not sound the alarm against the secret society devil. And, while I do believe that the reform of the evil of secret societies must follow the prohibition of the liquor traffic, and cannot be expected to precede it, I do not believe that this is any time to wink at such high-handed treason as the secret oaths of some of our un-American secret societies involve. The prohibition of the liquor traffic is retarded and held back more by the alienation of the voters of this country from moral principles and a love of God and home and native land, brought on largely by their fealty to paganistic, oath-bound secret societies, as by any other one agency under God's heavens: that is, I mean to say that it is my humble opinion that there is on the one side a growing disregard for God and the right among the American people, and on the other side a constantly increasing tendency to bow down to the wrong because it is in high places and cannot be overcome in an instant, which will yet work the ruin of the country if it is not quenched, and which when squelched will make a man just as much down on secret societies and tobacco as on rum, and for exactly the same reasons. But "God works in a mysterious way his wonders to perform."

I am a young man, 23 years of age, and expect to fight all these evils just as long as God permits me to live, and shall never regard a reform as thorough which does not touch (eradicate) all public evils.

I am yours for the conflict, to fight it out on this line until the last legalized saloon, the last tobacco shop and store, and the last un-American, oath-bound secret lodge shall be driven from American soil, and, in the language of the great Lafayette, to "where the devil drove the hogs."

CHRISTIAN UNION.

There can be no question in Christian hearts as to the probability of a vastly increased impetus being given toward securing the complete triumph of the Gospel of peace in the earth, were Christ's prayer for the oneness of his disciples to be consummated in an affirmative answer. T. DeWitt Talmage, standing as he does upon one of the pinnacles of the earthly temple of our God, declared in October last, in substance, that he did not know but that he saw in the horizon the glimmering of the light that preceded the rising of the sun of union, lighting our pathway back to the times when no division, except geographical ones, existed in the Christian family.—R. W. LYMAN, Yorkshire, N. Y.

WORK FOR THE PETITION—RETURN IT APRIL 1.

I am over 76 years of age, and if you will give us time I will promise 500 names and upwards. Now if every reader of the Cynosure will do this we will make their ears tingle. It is high time that we wake up. Our mechanics and grocers and professional men are at this time tied hand and foot, and, worst of all, some of them claiming to be anti-secret men.—JOHN LEEPER, Seneca-ville, O.

STREETS WITHOUT BLOOD MARKS.

This is quite a nice little town of 2,000, with graveled streets and good sidewalks, all built and kept in repair without the aid of blood money. We have no saloon, but it is said a man may obtain all the liquor he wants at the drug stores. We have five churches, and as many more Christless orders. If any one from principle exposes the detrimental effects of secret societies on Christianity, they are spotted and crowded all along the line.—WM. D. JOHNSTON, Lexington, Ill.

THIS LETTER HAD EIGHTY-FIVE NAMES TO THE CENTENAL PETITION.

I am in unison with your work, and will favor it all I can, but old age and infirmities of the body prevent me from doing much. But the cause must prevail, for it is of God; but O! if the churches of God would wake up it would be a short job. May God speed the day, is my prayer.—C. A. WEBB, Ripon, Wis.

ANOTHER NEW ENGLAND PULPIT AWAKE.

I feel a deep interest in the peace and good government of the people of our beloved country, and for a long time I have preached against the secret orders, which, in utter disregard of the wholesome laws of our land, are working mischief. The murder of Dr. Cronin has revived the memory of other similar crimes committed by secret orders. I declare myself free from them all. Christians have no right in these oath-bound orders.—G. W. SEDERQUIST, pastor Liberty Street Church, Lynn, Mass.

LITERATURE.

The Truth, which Dr. James H. Brooks has edited in St. Louis for fifteen years, has been removed to Chicago, and begins its sixteenth volume with the January number, very much improved in external appearance. The Gospel Publishing Co., 10 Arcade Court, will publish the magazine, but Dr. Brooks continues to edit it with that wealth of Scriptural knowledge and single-hearted devotion to the doctrine of inspiration which has so long distinguished him and the magazine. To men who are drifting among the shallows and quicksands of doubt Truth has been like a rock of refuge. It has been like salt upon the mass of our religious journalism to preserve it from the corrupting influence of the "higher criticism." This magazine ought to be in the hands of every theological student, and pastor and S. S. teacher. It will well repay them the $1 subscription.

The December number of Our Day completes its fourth volume and second year. This "Record and Review of Current Reform" holds a place peculiarly its own. It is unchallenged in its sphere, and is deservedly becoming widely known and read. The editor-in-chief, Joseph Cook, and his associates, including Dr. Crafts, Field Secretary of the Sabbath Reform Association, Anthony Comstock and Miss Frances E. Willard, are recognized leaders. The present number contains an interesting symposium on religious reading. The question: What volumes, aside from the Holy Scriptures, have been the most serviceable to yourself in Christian evidences, church history, religious biography, and devotional literature? is answered by about thirty leading divines and educators. "The Exciting Situation in Utah," by Rev. R. G. McNiece, D.D., "Impressions of a Transcontinental Tour," by Rev. Dr. Crafts, "Adverse Criticisms on Missions," by ex-Pres. Cyrus Hamlin, are papers of great interest. "An Interview with Edward Bellamy," by Miss Willard, gives a view of this popular author and his plans of bettering the masses. The editorial notes are timely, terse and trustworthy. Published at 28 Beacon street, Boston.

Scribner's Magazine for January opens with "Water-storage in the West," by Walter Gillette Bates, a lucid and comprehensive statement of a great material problem which is now engaging the earnest attention of a Congressional commission, a government hydrographic surveying party, and many State legislatures. The problem is to reclaim and make fertile vast tracts of land in what is called the "arid region," an area of 1,200,000 square miles, or more than two-fifths of the United States. Artesian wells and canals have been employed in many places effectively, but their application is narrow and limited compared with the new method of water-storage by means of artificial lakes. He illustrates what private enterprise has already accomplished by brief descriptions of four great dams—the Merced, Cal., the Walnut Grove, Arizona, the Sweetwater, Cal., and the Bear Valley, Cal. W. C. Brownell contributes his ably written notes and impressions of "The Paris Exposition"—colocating them with reference to the political significance of the celebration, to its features as a great spectacle, to the place of the Eiffel Tower in the general plan, etc. A bright article on the "Beauty of Spanish Women" reaches the conclusion that "the mission of Spain has been to evolve the most perfect type of personal beauty and grace, the petite brunette, and to transmit to Europe what is best in Oriental and African physiognomy." "Tripoli of Barbary," by A. F. Jacassy—the first of several African studies, from an artist's point of view, which this clever draughtsman and writer will contribute. The Electric series is continued with the sixth article, "Electricity in the Household," by A. E. Kennedy, chief electrician in Mr. Edison's laboratory. From his abundant knowledge and experience he has been able to supply an untechnical account of the numerous devices which are becoming necessary to the convenience of every modern household.

Its new dress adds another attraction to the Missionary Review of the World. The title page is plainer than the old one, and still more beautiful. The present number of the Review begins a new year. New writers are introduced and the old tried ones are retained. The first article on Geographical History of the Christian Church, by Prof. Henry W. Hulbert, of Marietta College, promises a very valuable series of papers from his pen. Dr. Pierson contributes a characteristic paper entitled, "Is there to be a new Departure in Missions?" Also his article on the Bishop of the Niger (Crowther, whose photograph adorns the number) is of special interest. Asceticism in Missions, by Dr. E. E. Ellinwood, "Education as an Evangelical Agency," by Rev. James Johnston, of England, are noteworthy articles. This Review gives promise of enhanced power and usefulness. 20 Astor Place, New York.

In the Ladies' Home Journal Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage begins his work as one of the editors and opens his new department, "Under My Study Lamp," in a popular style. The portraits drawn of his early home and training, his mother's death, and a celestial dream while lying one evening upon his lounge are word-pictures of singular beauty and striking power. The new editor-in-chief, Mr. Edward W. Bok, begins his work in a manner to make us suspect him a Jesuit.

SECRET SOCIETIES CONDEMNED

BY GREAT MEN IN THE CHURCH.

REV. JOHN TODD, Pittsfield, Mass.:—Unhesitatingly I give my decided disapprobation of what I deem secret societies in college and elsewhere. I have never known any good results from them which could not have been attained in some other more appropriate way, and I have known great evils resulting from them.

HOWARD CROSBY, Chancellor University of New York, 1870:—We have no hesitation in writing secret societies among the quackeries of the earth.

Idem, 1886:—The secret lodge system belongs to despotisms and not to democracies. Whatever in it is not babyish is dangerous.

REV. MATTHEW L. R. PERRINE, D.D., Auburn Theological Seminary, REV. JOEL PARKER and REV. CHAUNCEY EDDY:—Having formerly associated with Freemasons, we deem it our duty, publicly to declare that the system of Freemasonry is in our judgment, of a tendency on the whole pernicious to the moral habits, and dangerous to the civil and religious institutions of our country.

REV. LEVI CHASE, Fall River, Mass.:—The question has been asked by Masons, who wish to asperse the characters of those who have renounced Masonry, "Why did not they renounce it before?" For one, I will give them the reason why I did not. The Masonic oaths locked my tongue in silence—death, in all its horrid shapes and frightful forms, stared me in the face—I considered the oaths binding.

REV. C. D. BURLINGHAM, in history of the Genesee M. E. Conference, 1860:—This new element of discord (Odd fellowship) began to introduce itself in our church, professedly as a mutual insurance company against temporal want, and a newly discovered and remarkably successful Gospel appliance for bringing the world, reformed and saved into the church. But our people very naturally looked upon it with suspicion, dreading its power as a secret agency acting through affiliated societies, and doubting its utility as a financial scheme. They feared it would drag the church, debased and corrupted, into the world.

REV. JOEL MANN, a renouncing Mason:—Although portions of the Gospel are interwoven with its forms, I conceive that Masonry presents false grounds of hope; leads men to depend on their own defective righteousness;—to expect the favor of God without the interposition of a Redeemer, and even without repentance; and thus has a most injurious influence on their eternal interests. Under the most favorable circumstances, which in any place, have attended Masonry, it has occasioned a great waste of time and money, which might and ought to have been employed for better purposes. And furthermore, it interferes materially with domestic religious duties.

REV. AARON LELAND, formerly Lieut.-Governor of Vermont and Deputy Grand Master of the Masonic Grand Lodge (to a Baptist association):—He stated that the first objection which presented itself to his mind was the practice of praying for the soul of a brother Mason after he had been dead two, three, and sometimes four days—that he persisted in the practice for a short season to the injury of his conscience—that it was a Romish custom, and he never would preach at the burial of a Mason when Masonic forms and customs were attended to—that he never would preach to a lodge of Masons as such, and that he was ashamed that he had ever participated in the principles and practices of the institution.

ELDER DAVID BERNARD:—I solemnly renounce all fealty to Masonry, and do most earnestly beseech my brethren in Christ Jesus, of every name, to come out and bear unequivocal testimony against it. Think, O think, dear Christians, that hundreds and thousands of precious and immortal souls will be lost forever, unless they return and repent, but that the name of the precious Jesus is rejected, your Saviour, your precious and adorable Saviour taken away—the cause of your bleeding Redeemer injured—the hands of the wicked strengthened, and the Almighty God dishonored! And O, let me entreat you in the mercy and bowels of Jesus Christ, to reflect that you have to answer for the blood of those who shall find also, when it shall be forever too late, that Masonry is not a Saviour!

THE N. C. A. FUNDS.

The General Fund is that from which the running expenses of the Association are paid. From it the agents on the field are supported.

The Foreign Fund is that from which the foreign demand for literature against the lodge is supplied to missionaries.

The Free Tract Fund clearly states by its name the object for which contributions are solicited. Millions of pages have been distributed by means of this fund.

The Cynosure Ministers' Fund. The donations to this fund have enabled the Association to send many copies of the Cynosure to the ministers of the South, especially to pastors of colored churches. The result has been a blessing to them and their churches.

Contributions to any or all these funds are urgently solicited.

FORM OF BEQUEST.—I give and bequeath to the National Christian Association, incorporated and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, the sum of — dollars for the purposes of said Association, and for which the receipt of its Treasurer for the time being shall be sufficient discharge.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JANUARY 2, 1890.

A Happy New Year to all our readers! May it be long as happy, and useful as long.

The old year fades as we write; the new year will begin before these pages are opened by our readers. As we step across the threshold of the last decade of our century, we cast but a glance behind. The year cannot turn back and be re-born, or filled with a new and better life. But each may with profit reflect upon the record, and put to himself the question of Pharaoh, "How old art thou?" For our days are not measured by our years, but rather by our deeds of love to men, and of gratitude to God.

"We live in deeds, not years; in thoughts, not breaths; In feelings, not in figures on a dial.

We should count time by heart-throbs; He most lives Who thinks most, feels noblest, acts best."

We are most truly as old as the number of days in which we have grown toward the perfect man in Jesus Christ. We are as old as the number of days during which we have made progress toward eternal life; as old as the days we have given to those things which shall never pass away.

If our view of life is from the human side, we must say as did Jacob, "Few and evil have been my days." "Our days are but a hand-breadth, a shadow that passeth." But as we look back on our life from the foot of the Cross, shall we not rather be able to say, "The joy of the Lord shall be my delight all the day long." In Christ alone can any say, "I have not lived in vain."

"That life is long which answers life's great end."

That life is a success which has no mark upon it such as the Emperor Titus put upon part of his when he wrote, "I have lost a day."

"Count that day lost whose low descending sun, Views at thy hand no worthy action done."

But no one should from the low motive of personal ambition begin the New Year with noble resolves. Our children repeat from Longfellow:

"Lives of great men all remind us
We can make our lives sublime;
And departing leave behind us
Footprints on the sands of time."

But the truest, noblest and sublimest life must be God made; and that is too low an ambition which seeks only a monument on which men are to gaze. He is not wise who at this time seeks for less than the highest ends, or whose vows are less than the noblest. And what desire more exalted and holy can we frame into resolution than those glorious words of Paul in his Philippian letter: "I follow after, if that I may apprehend that for which I am apprehended of Christ Jesus. Brethren, I count not myself to have apprehended; but this one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark, for the prize of the high-calling of God in Christ Jesus. Let us, therefore, as many as be perfect, be thus minded," and as many as would be perfect also. To know that such an ambition inspired the souls of all our friends would be the crowning joy of this

NEW YEAR.

How BETTER shall we begin the year than by calling to mind the "GOOD NEWS," as we look upon the faces of some of its heralds. So we have made this a kind of evangelical number: and would only say that, in addition to the testimonies of these good men, we might take almost the whole list of really eminent evangelists and they will be found opposed to the whole secret lodge system.

FREE PRESS, BIRMINGHAM, IOWA.—The last number of this able paper has just reached us, and we have read it through. It is a remarkable paper, conducted by W. L. Enlow, Esq., Dr. I. N. Norris, and Mr. M. N. Butler, well known to the readers of the Cynosure. The Free Press is a neatly printed monthly, devoted chiefly to the American party, and the last number is worth the whole subscription as a permanent document, showing the men and their principles who saved our U. S. Republic, and the agency of the lodge in its attempted destruction by aid of the slave power in the bloody rebellion. We wish our readers would each send the 50 cents to W. L. Enlow, Birmingham, Iowa, and procure this interesting mass of facts.

GEORGE CLARK.

His oath teaches the poor blind Jesuit, thus made a candidate for high orders in Jesuitry, just as his oath teaches the miserably poor, blind Freemason thus, too, made a candidate for high orders in Freemasonry, not that he may destroy, for example, the government of the United States—that were a mere matter of course—but that he may destroy the government "safely."

A WORD IN SEASON.

It is a word also for the season. We are just emerging from evergreen boughs, carousals, merry-makings and happy home gatherings. The "holidays" are past, and what might not be said with any effect while the "Christmas" whirl was on may be said now.

The Catholic press is congratulating Protestants because their papers and magazines, which said little of Christmas thirty years ago, are now full of tales, poems and essays on this popish-pagan festival. "Before the war," says one Catholic paper, "Christmas in New York was not even a play-day. The shops were open. Men worked and traded as though there never was a Christ. Only Catholics glorified the Incarnate God, with prayer, song and sacrifice, rest from labor and joyous pleasure. The Puritan tradition bore heavily on our city. Christmas was an 'idolatrous' feast in the eyes of non-Catholics.... The press was like the people. A column or so was all the day was worth."

What shall be said of this spirit of festivity and mirth which has come to possess our people on the 25th of December? Is it from the Lord or no? As we turn away from the teaching of the Pilgrim Fathers to accept that of the papists, are we sure that we are led of the Holy Spirit or no? Were the early churches "keeping the faith" as they declined from the teaching of Peter and Paul, James and John, to accept the "traditions of the elders" and set up in the fourth century the church of Rome? Were the English people setting a worthy example for their descendants when they wearied of the stern, steady and godly rule of Cromwell and bargained for the return of the profligate Stuarts? And are we acting more wisely when we patronize the fables of our heathen ancestors and the inventions of Romish priests concerning the so-called birth of Christ, when the disciples of Christ, whom we are admonished to follow, were for three hundred years satisfied to "Remember" their Lord in the way he had taught, and no other?

The evangelist Brown of London, of whose work we read in another column, has written a protest against the "Devil's Mission of Amusement." He writes in general terms, but we wish to apply to our holiday season the following excellent paragraphs from his pamphlet*:

When young converts begin to "damp off," forsake the gatherings for prayer and grow wordly, I almost always find that worldly Christianity is responsible for the first downward step. The mission of amusement is the devil's half-way house to the world. It is because of what I have seen that I feel deeply, and would fain write strongly. This thing is working rottenness in the church of God, and blasting her service for the King. In the guise of Christianity, it is accomplishing the devil's own work. Under the pretense of going out to reach the world, it is carrying our sons and daughters into the world. With the plea of "Do not alienate the masses by your strictness," it is seducing the young disciples from "the simplicity and the purity that is toward Christ" (R. V.). Professing to win the world, it is turning the garden of the Lord into a public recreation ground. To fill the Temple with those who see no beauty in Christ, a grinning Dagon is put over the doorway.

It will be no wonder if the Holy Ghost, grieved and insulted, withdraws his presence; for what concord hath Christ with Belial, and what agreement hath the Temple of God with idols?

"COME OUT!" is the call for to-day. Sanctify yourselves. Put away the evil from among you. Cast down the world's altars and cut down her groves. Spurn her offered assistance. Decline her help, as your Master did the testimony of devils, for he suffered them not to speak, because they knew him. Renounce all the policy of the age. Trample upon Saul's armor. Grasp the book of God. Trust the Spirit who wrote its pages. Fight with this weapon only, and always. Cease to amuse and seek to arouse. Shun the clap of a delighted audience, and listen for the sobs of a convicted one. Give up trying to "please" men who have only the thickness of their ribs between their souls and hell; and warn, and plead, and entreat, as those who feel the waters of eternity creeping upon them.

Let the church again confront the world; testify against it; meet it only behind the cross; and, like her Lord, she shall overcome, and, with him, share the victory.

A GOSPEL OF HATE.

While the Boston Congress was meeting in Tremont Temple, a few rods away in the Common Council chamber of the City Hall the National Federation of Labor Unions was sitting. This body was heralded by considerable notices in the daily press, not only of Boston, but of the country. At their first meeting the Mayor of Boston and the Governor of Massachusetts were waiting in the lobby until the body had got through its opening business and then a messenger was sent to notify these representatives of a great city and a great State that they could now appear. About the affair there was such an air of condescension that people were inclined to marvel what new dignity this might be! What mighty power do these men represent? The reports sent abroad through the press dispatches only increased the wonder and the respect. The deliberations were telegraphed at large as though for the proceedings of a most influential body.

The Pole-star looked down calmly on all this ado, and the Cynosure representative walked into the meeting with no challenge but amazed looks. He found a small meeting of about half a hundred men, and Samuel Gompers in the president's seat. He looked about critically. These were "bigger men" than Powderly and his Knights; for they early voted the Knights of Labor out of their meeting, and they represented, not one secret labor lodge only, but scores. In spite of tobacco smoke curling up from all parts of the room, it was easy to see that shops and yards of the bricklayer, the stone-mason, the printer, the tailor, "the butcher, the baker, and candlestick-maker," had sent hither, not their men of intelligence and force of character, but often young men and boys, whose every word betrayed their ignorance and misguided ambition to get on a pedestal to be admired of somebody. Mr. Gompers himself is a man of natural ability, a leader by nature, but a leader of men of low aspirations, who neither knew nor seemed to care to know the nature of the great social questions upon whose borders they profess to legislate for hundreds of thousands of their fellow workmen and their families. Mr. Gompers has himself come from a cigar factory to control this national organization. His shop habits were painfully seen as he generally put a motion after puffing out a cloud of tobacco smoke.

We have not time to discuss the action of this body of men, as their business continued for the better part of a week, intermingled with dances and feasts. But they were not always united in their votes; as when a resolution condemning the factories of North Adams, for requiring their men to promise to keep out of the labor lodges, had been rejected by the committee on resolutions, it was finally passed by a vote of 32 to 25.

But more important than resolutions are the principles held by this Federation as published in their representative papers. One of these, the Workmen's Advocate, of New York, was liberally distributed in the meeting. This sheet denounces profit-sharing as a "pseudo-philanthropic scheme." It declares such efforts, on the part of humane, God-fearing men, to put in practical effect the Golden Rule, to be "designed to blind the workmen to their true interests, which are ever antagonistic to their employers." The tone of this sheet is all upon this key. It teaches unthinking and often exasperated men that their safety lies in secret combinations against the employing class; and the leaders know that these lodges are best fed on hate. Love, fair dealing between man and man, gives no place for the strike and the boycott, and these have always been the weapon of the lodge. Shall we not have a mission to the workingmen to teach them a better Gospel, even the true.

—The Teller of New Orleans is now entirely in the control of Bro. F. J. Davidson, and it will hereafter, he promises, decidedly oppose the lodge.

—The Washington agent is experiencing some of the benefits of the universal Russian catarrh epidemic, but without serious results to his wife or himself. He desires to acknowledge the kindness of Edwin Selw and wife, with whom he found a very pleasant home during his stay in Philadelphia. His last lecture in that city was in the Swedish Lutheran church. The pastor hoped to arrange for another lecture after the holidays.

—The young evangelist Houser, who has been laboring with the Baptist church of Wheaton for the past month, spoke several times against the lodge, and during his closing meetings last week spoke strongly, and established his position with conclusive facts and arguments. This testimony made a powerful effect, because unsolicited and generally unexpected. This revival has had great results, and some hundred converts are reported.

—Last week the Chicago papers gave their readers a surprise by publishing the fact that Dr. Lorimer, of this city, was called to the pulpit of the Warren Avenue Baptist church of Boston, of which Rev. O. P. Gifford has been pastor. Dr. Gifford resigned some time ago to take a more important pastorate at Brookline, just outside the business part of the city. The affair has a very Masonic look about it. Mr. Lorimer is known as a Masonic champion in all the lodges of the world. Freemasonry has been the main prop of his popularity. Dr. Gifford's great speech in Tremont Temple on the lodge has probably stirred up the Boston Masons, and the invitation to Dr. Lorimer is looked upon as a sort of bluff, to counteract as much as possible the effect of the Boston conference.

—Hon. S. C. Pomeroy kindly sends us a pamphlet containing his views on the bill of Senator Ingalls, of Kansas, on the proposed World's Fair of 1892. His argument is that, inasmuch as it is to be commemorative of the discovery of America, the celebration should be strictly national, upon national ground, sustained by national funds, and controlled by national authority. This means that Washington is to be the location of the exposition. We fear that Mr. Pomeroy has been too long absent from Chicago. We do not remember that he has visited our city since '84, otherwise he would hardly venture so far in favor of Washington. With the experience of last inauguration day vividly in our memories, we cannot understand how guests from all over the world are to be entertained in that city; unless, indeed, Uncle Sam becomes sutler, and commissary also, and constructs a vast camp for the season. The work of the Chicago committees in this enterprise has been most able, and is worth a profound study by all who wish to know the art of managing a great enterprise. It has demonstrated that Chicago possesses the liberality, courtesy, energy and ability to make the celebration a success in every particular. The Chicago idea of the Washington centennial last April surpassed all others in its conception and execution. Let him that has gained ten pounds rule ten cities.

CHARLES C. FOOTE.

"Christ's claims of universal supremacy are absolute. The claims of Masonry are just that and nothing else. A more intense antagonism cannot be found. It is a war for very existence; and must, therefore, be a truceless one. But Masonry wages war with Him whom the armies of heaven follow: upon whose vesture dipped in blood, and upon whose thigh is written, 'King of kings and Lord of lords.'"

PERSONAL NOTES.

—Prof. H. A. Fischer of Wheaton College, and for several years member of the N. C. A. Board, has resigned the pastorate of the church at Prospect Park, the added labor overtaking upon his health.

—Juror Culver, of the Cronin jury, was reported as a member of two secret societies. It seems that he formerly was a member of the Good Templars, Sons of Temperance and Royal Arcanum, but when examined for the jury he said he was no longer a member of any lodge.

—Rev. Francis J. Davidson lately attended a meeting of the Fourth District Baptist Association at Plaquemine, La., the strongest district convention of the denomination in the State. The meeting was an enthusiastic one, more than two-thirds of the members being Anti-masons.

—From New York comes the unpleasant news that Pres. C. A. Blanchard is detained in that city sick at the home of Dr. Bishop on 38th street. Dr. and Mrs. Bishop are old Wheaton friends who for some years were residing in Florida. Their excellent care promises that his delay will not be long.

—Bro. H. W. Johnston, who was first introduced to us as editor of the Crank, of College Springs, Iowa, and later assisted in the editorial work of the American, of Washington, has started for West Africa as a missionary. He gave up his Washington work some time since and returned to Iowa before going abroad. He is accompanied by his wife, who has a fourteen months' old child in her arms, and Miss Alice Harris, who has added to her other preparations for mission work, a knowledge of medicine. Bro. Johnston was ordained at Houghton, N. Y., and sailed about Dec. 11th.

—The Christian Nation has the following account of an assault on Rev. J. F. Avery, of the Mariner's Temple, New York, and one of the valued contributors of this paper: "We are grieved to note the ill-treatment which Rev. Dr. J. F. Avery has lately received at the hands of three roughs, on account of his chasing away a boy who was annoying a Chinaman. They beat him dreadfully about the head and face. He wrote a communication to the New York Times in which he tells of the abuse and annoyance he is constantly forced to bear from his neighbors, who are Catholics. The windows of his church are wilfully broken, things are stolen out of the church, the books are torn, and lately bullets have been fired through his bulletin board, and especially through his name. Dr. Avery is the able editor of one of New York's best illustrated monthlies, Buds and Blossoms."

THE N. C. A. BOARD MEETING.

The called meeting of the Directors of the National Christian Association was held Friday forenoon. Rev. Alexander Thomson, chairman of the Board, being absent, Rev. Geo. A. Milton, of Elgin, was called to preside. There were present brethren Hitchcock, Whipple, Richards, Sutcliffe, Milton and Worrell. Bro. Thomson, being delayed by train, came in later. Secretary and General Agent Stoddard verbally reviewed his work in New England and the Boston Congress, and was followed by H. L. Kellogg, who gave his view of the vast importance of following up the providential opening in New England with enthusiasm, courage and faith. A general discussion followed favorable to an earnest continuation of the effort in New England. It was voted that the Eastern work be pushed on immediately, and that the General Agent return to New England in a week or two, to spend six months if thought best. Before he returns, however, he was instructed to begin work for a conference of churches in Chicago, and a committee was appointed to aid in these preliminary efforts. Alexander Thomson, E. R. Worrell and W. I. Phillips were chosen as this committee. Speakers from Boston were suggested for this meeting. It was voted that Rev. C. F. Hawley, Illinois agent, be allowed the same amount in new Cynosure subscriptions, to be secured by himself, as he was receiving in Iowa last year.

A LONDON EVANGELIST.

More than a full score of years Mr. Brown has preached amid the giddy crowds of East London. Every form of gilded vice, seductive pleasure, of attractive display surround his church, yet out from among these tempted souls four thousand persons who have put on Christ received from him the right hand of fellowship. Nor do these number all the saved, who, through his instrumentality, have been plucked from the burning; some have joined neighboring churches, others have emigrated. The East End Tabernacle, of which he is pastor, is truly a working church. More than forty societies have been evolved from it, each and all imbued with his spirit, in their endeavor to preach Christ through various forms of practical Christian benevolence. Like Mr. Spurgeon, Mr. Brown is pre-eminently a preacher to the masses. His ordinary congregations number three thousand persons; in the weekly prayer meeting are frequently found from one thousand to one thousand five hundred. Far be it from me to disparage our worthy brother as a gifted man, but we consider his powerful hold on the hearts of the people as the grip of a redeemed and consecrated hand. Despising alike the jugglery of the pulpit trickster, with the wordiness of the would-be-orator, pastor Brown preaches in good old Anglo-Saxon the message of salvation out of the Bible, and in consonance with its precious and powerful doctrines.

On Lord's day morning and evening he comes from the room where pastor and elders have been closeted in prayer. After brief invocation the hymn is announced. By his side stands the precentor, a godly brother, who, without aid of choir or organ, leads the vast congregation. What rapturous praise! This is worship. Then follows the Scripture lesson—a lesson indeed. Two thousand or more Bibles fly open, and eagerly the people listen to the juicy comments, the rich expositions, the candid exegesis. For many years he has given himself to careful study of Scripture, that he may expound God's Word with profit. After prayer and further singing he preaches a half-hour sermon, which is an amplification of the text. We do not wonder that glorious results follow. The Word of the Lord for matter: the Spirit of the Lord for power. With such resources can there be failure?

—No mission in the world, perhaps, can show a more notable record than that of the Canadian Presbyterian church in China. At the end of 16 years' work, and with a small staff of laborers, it reports 2,650 baptized members, 2 native pastors, 64 elders, 60 deacons, and 37 native preachers. It maintains 2 mission houses, 50 chapels, a girls' school, and a training college. The credit of these results is due, under God, to Dr. Mackay, one of those remarkable men who are born missionaries.

THE HOME.

THE OPENING YEAR.

Orphan hours, the year is dead,
Come and sigh, come and weep,
Merry hours smile instead,
For the year is but asleep:
See, it smiles as it is sleeping,
Mocking your untimely weeping.

As an earthquake rocks a corse,
In its coffin in the clay,
So White Winter, that rough nurse,
Rocks the dead-cold year to-day;
Solemn hours, wail aloud,
For your mother in her shroud.

As the wild air stirs and sways
The tree-swung cradle of a child,
So the breath of these rude days
Rocks the year—be calm and mild,
Trembling hours; she will arise
With new love within her eyes.

January gray is here,
Like a sexton by her grave;
February bears the bier,
March with grief doth howl and rave;
And April weeps; but, O ye hours!
Follow with May's fairest flowers.

—Shelley.

THE MINISTER'S BARGAIN.

The new minister came down from his room in a costume more suggestive of a day-laborer than a gentleman of the cloth. He was young. This was his first charge, unless his young wife might be considered his first charge, which he had cared for well. She met him now at the foot of the stairs, her pretty nose turned upward, and a look of smiling disgust on her face.

"James!" she exclaimed, "how you do look! Suppose Deacon Brown should come to call?"

"Tell him that I am at the back of the lot," said her husband, cheerfully, "and that they must give me a larger salary if they don't expect me to beat my own carpets."

It might not have been anything remarkable if the worthy deacon, seeing his pastor, had been shocked at the reverend gentleman's appearance. He wore an old slouch hat, and the remainder of his toilet was entirely in keeping with that tramp-like remnant. Even his every-day clothes must not be subjected to the trial of carpet-beating.

The carpet was not very large, nor very new, although the housekeeping trials of that little family were both. It belonged with the parsonage, and had stood, with the entire building, the wear and tear of many a donation party and the playful feet of many little children. The sturdy young man soon had it stretched across the line and proceeded to whittle a convenient stick into proper shape. The day was very windy, and any one who has tried to beat a carpet in such weather understands the difficulties which constantly beset him. It is simply astonishing how much dust can hide itself within the outside company character of a deceitful ingrain carpet—how it will, when its faults are discovered, elude every effort to correct them! But the young minister was not to be discouraged. In this new field he would have harder foes to fight.

In the late part of the forenoon his wife came out to tell him that one of the deacons had actually come, and he replied that he would receive him there at his post, or King Æolus might decide to carry the little carpet off on a breezy trip. Thus it came to pass that the clergyman, wiping the perspiration and dust from his face, was soon discussing church-work with Mr. Everett.

"You will not find the field a difficult one, I fancy," said that gentleman, "although there are a few perplexities. There is one man who is a great vexation and disappointment to us. Mr. Bedford, yonder, some years ago became alienated from the church, and since then has done a great deal to hinder, rather than to help, our work. He is a wealthy man; in fact, the only one in the village, and was a great loss to the church. I was hopeful that a new pastor might get hold of him, but I almost fear he is beyond our reach."

The minister cast his eye toward the pretty stone house, up the brook a little way, surrounded by the prosperous farms of its owner, stretching out to the background of wooded hills. Who knew but it might be his mission there to help this erring one, so rich in gold but so poor at heart. The odor of broiling beefsteak was already beginning to suggest a welcome repast in the tiny dining-room, and the carpet was conquered. The wearied worker was turning his face toward the breeze that slipped softly along the brookside, when there approached him an elderly gentleman, with somewhat severe lips and deep-set eyes.

"I am looking for a man to beat my carpet," he said; "it must wait no longer. I have been watching you this morning, and I think you are about the sort of a man I want. You look as though you would be glad of a job. Is this the parsonage carpet? What a dirty little rag it is! My name is Bedford; my home is the stone house yonder. Well, what do you say?"

It may be that a roguish smile played for a moment about the young minister's handsome features, but it was suppressed before his would-be employer had noticed it.

"I think," he said, "that I will be able to do your work."

But his sudden idea must be even more quickly decided upon. "If you don't know," said his interviewer sternly, "I will seek elsewhere. I am a prompt man, and I wish others to be."

"I will do your work for you," said the clergyman, "and will be at your house in an hour."

The engagement being made, his visitor left, and he hastened in toward the beefsteak, fearing that his real character would be betrayed by his wife.

"Kittie," he said, as he came down a second time, without having improved his toilet, "I am going over to the stone house across the brook to beat the gentleman's carpet."

"James," said his wife, again showing merry dismay, "to what limit will your generosity extend? I am afraid you are not planning to make a very long stay in this church. When are you going to write your sermon?"

"I have my text," he said, gaily; "'Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might.' And I am not showing any generosity, either. I have hired out. Good-bye!" and, with a parting kiss, the workman started for his task.

Mr. Bedford's Brussels carpet, of fine texture and choice pattern, had never been served better than that afternoon. The young minister did his work well, and, when it was done, looked at the clean fabric, spread upon the green grass, with as much satisfaction as he had had over his first sermon. Mr. Bedford's place afforded more assistance than he had at his home, but this carpet was also larger than his, and the day was plainly waning when, the object of his labors deposited with his own muscular arms in its proper place, he sought his employer, and informed him that his work was done.

"Well," said Mr. Bedford, uttering the favorite monosyllable more pleasantly than usual, "you have done it well; I shall inquire for you when I need further help. What is your name, and how much do I owe you?"

The roguish smile overcame its bashfulness this time, and stayed boldly on the clergyman's face. He reached into his ragged pocket and drew forth his card:

REV. JAMES WESTWOOD,

Avondale Berean Church.

Sabbath Services 10:30 a. m. and 7 p. m.

"My card," he said, pleasantly, handing it to his employer; "and if you will make yourself at home in my church, Mr. Bedford, and we may look to you for help and sympathy, we will consider this matter square."

It is not in my power to describe the astonished look, or astonished thoughts, which succeeded this disclosure. Mr. Bedford seemed undecided as to whether to be disgusted or amused.

"So you are the new minister?" he said.

"I have that honor," said the ragged and reverend gentleman.

"Well," said Mr. Bedford again, grimly, "your wages are high—something out of my line entirely, I may say; but you have done your part, and it's a fair bargain: I said I would let you set your own price. Will you remain to tea, Mr. Westwood?"

But the new minister wended his way across the brook-path toward his little home, and, with a lighter heart than if he had earned many a dollar by his hard day's work; and dollars were not too common in his modest pocket-book, as you, dear friend, well know.

Suffice it to say, that the bargain was kept; that a prominent pew in the village church became the property of Mr. Bedford, until, instead of his creating surprise by his presence there, the doctor used to write his name in his memorandum, whenever he did not appear in his place on Sabbath morning. Let me pause to tell that one morning, not long afterward, a large package was left on the porch of the tiny parsonage, which was found to contain a carpet of as fine texture and finely harmonized tints as Mr. Bedford's own, just the size for the parlor of that home; let me even add, that, as the anniversary returns each year, one more floor in the house is decked with a new and lovely covering, from the stone house over the brook, and that when the number is complete, it is suspected that the church itself is coming in for a share; for Mr. Bedford always declares that the young minister has never received his full wages for that job done by the ragged carpet-beater.—Herald and Presbyterian.

A NEW YEAR'S LETTER FROM MOTHER.

FOR YOUNG MEN.

Not a sermon, young men, nor an address, or even a lecture—only a loving mother's letter to you. A letter from a mother, who is trying by God's help, not only to take up her own life work, but to do that also of her beloved son, who passed to the Father's house, and could not stay to finish the work he wanted to do. His message comes to her in the early waking hours of morning, and when the shadows gather over the hours of the closing day, and in the night time when the darkness has gathered over the world: "Mother, do all you can to save young men—to show them the way to Jesus and to heaven." And so, in these first hours of her great sorrow, and amid the loneliness that fills her heart, while shut in from the great world, she takes up her pen to write you this letter.

The most important time of your whole life is when you are crossing the threshold of manhood. You may be a light-hearted boy, with a fresh young face, and well-taught in the ways that lead to a noble type of Christian manhood. In your earliest days, you learned how to talk with the Saviour at your mother's knee. You have started on the road of life with every aid that promises a safe journey. But all about you are thieves watching for your coming. If you do not keep constantly watching, and place a guard about your soul, they will meet you on the highway, and will strip you of your raiment, wounding you sorely, and will leave you half dead. Take Christ for your Guide and Helper at this very beginning of your journey. Oh, my dear boy, (you know a son is always a boy in the mother's heart, no matter how old he is), do not take the first steps in those habits that sooner or later will ruin your manhood. You cannot tamper with them. Many a young man, who felt as strong as you do to-day, took his first glass of liquor because some evil adviser told him it would make a man of him, and is to-day a poor helpless drunkard. Habits begin in cobwebs but they end in iron chains. "Seeing life" and "sowing wild oats" are productive of a harvest that must be gathered in sorrow and bitter tears.

"We reap what we sow." It is a wonderful truth. The young do not appreciate the fact of retribution following on misdeeds. When a gifted man, whose life had been spent in profligacy, lay dying, a friend asked if he could do anything for him. "Yes," replied the dying man, eagerly, "Give me back my youth." "Live as long as you may," says Southey, "the first twenty years are the longest half of your life, and the most pregnant in consequences. It is the seed-time of life, and what is sown then must be reaped when the harvest time comes."

One of the most effective causes of the ruin of young men is bad company. "Keep good company," says George Herbert, "and you will be of the number." At first the low jest, the oath, the contempt of things good and pure, makes the hearer blush and tremble, but by association he too is soon using the same language without a shudder. The best property a young man can have is a good character. "Character," says Samuel Smiles, "is the greatest of all possessions. It is an estate in the general good-will and respect of men, and they who invest in it—though they may not become rich in this world's goods, will find their reward in esteem and reputation fairly and honorably won."

When the shadows of evening gather, how many young men in our large cities are wending their way to the gilded saloons of sin, which are the destroyers of young manhood. Many of them are away from the loving home circle and the good mother's influence—they wouldn't have her know where they were—no, not for anything. They are ashamed of their associations themselves, but the fascinations of "seeing life" are strong. They think they can break off at any time from their alluring snares, but how they deceive themselves! Lost! lost! lost! how soon the word becomes branded on their once pure young faces.

Young man, are you in a city full of temptations and being led away by them? Are you taking your first steps away from your mother's teaching? Oh, be warned in time—choose good associates—put yourself under good influences and pray to Christ to be your strong Helper and Guide. Should some poor mother's boy, who has wandered into a far country, chance to read this letter, a poor hungry boy who has been feeding on husks, and has spent all his portion in that which satisfieth not, let him not be discouraged.

Our Lord's precious talk to the multitude on the day he told them the parable of the Prodigal Son, assures the wanderer of a loving return to the Father. His father met him when he was yet a great way off and fell on his neck and kissed him. Did he put on some of the cast-off garments in the home to cover his son's nakedness? Oh, no, he called for the best robe. Yes, poor sinner, Christ waits for you—he will forgive you—in your weakness he will put his strong arms about you and keep you from falling.

He didn't come to save the righteous—only sinners. It is they who overcome by his help the sins of the flesh, and come up through great tribulation, that he clothes with the robe and bids them stand before the throne for ever and ever.—Susan Teal Perry, in Christian at Work.

HAPPY NEW YEAR.

Good morning, my pets, Happy New Year to you;
To my bonny brave boys, to my girls bright and true:
Happy New Year to sister, and kind elder brother,
Happy New Year to father, and dear loving mother.

Happy New Year to children in sickness or health,
Happy New Year to those who are poor, or have wealth,
For those that are ill, or are riches denied,
This Happy New Year, may the dear Lord provide.

Happy New Year to teachers who patiently try
To make pleasant the days that so rapidly fly,
Who smooth the hard road, by kind loving rule,
Of knowledge and learning, for children at school.

Happy New Year to all who come round my chair.
The big and the little alike have a share:
If you live in God's love, his wisdom, his fear,
'Twill indeed be a blessed and Happy New Year.

THE STORY OF A YEAR.

It was New Year's morning a year ago, bright, crisp, pure and fresh. The snow, which had fallen heavily the night before, lay in smooth unruffled masses over field and lawn; a fair and beautiful sight thought Aunt Amy, as she stood at the breakfast-room window. Not a footstep to mar its purity. "It is a fit emblem of the new year, but it is sad to think how soon unsightly things will defile its whiteness, even as it will be with the coming hours of this new year; even as it will be with the fresh whiteness of these young lives," she added, as the sound of merry voices and the patter of eager feet interrupted her reverie, and she turned to forget sentiment in responding to the joyous and noisy "Happy New Years."

The breakfast-table conversation at Egmont was very animated that day. To be sure New Year's day was not "celebrated" as in France by New Year's gifts, or as in the New York of old times by the calls of gentlemen upon their lady acquaintances; but it was a holiday and a gay day nevertheless, for the three city cousins had come; the skating was "splendid" where the snow had been swept away; the snow itself was perfection, not drifted in the least and intensely suggestive of warm, furry sleigh-ropes and merry jingling bells.

But first Aunt Amy, who filled the place of her sister, who had died, to the Egmont children, gathered them all around her, and after commencing the new year with readings from God's Holy Book, and words of prayer addressed to him, talked with them of the duties and responsibilities which lay before them, and of the resolutions suitable to the beginning of another year.

"I'm going to study just as hard as ever I can," said Constance, who is noted as being the most inattentive of the school-room group. "I'm going to catch up with Horace in arithmetic, and write compositions every week in the year."

"I'm going to learn to sew as nicely as you do, Aunt Amy," said her little namesake, who detested the sight of a needle.

"I mean to be kind to everybody, specially girls," said rough Tom.

"And I mean to help everybody besides doing all my own work," said lazy Lawrence.

Wonderful were the resolutions made that New Year's morning. The keeping of them would have made active, industrious, scholarly, little gentlemen and ladies of the whole group.

"One thing more," said Aunt Amy, "who is going to seek the Lord Jesus this year and spend all its months and days and hours in trying to please him?" It was the time for promising, and everybody complacently said "Aye."

"Have you begun to keep your resolution?" said Aunt Amy to each tired, excited child as she kissed the flushed faces for good-night at the close of the day, and each answered in turn, "Not yet; why this is only one day."

A week passed; many bad marks stood against Constance's name in the arithmetic class. The fascinations of the skating pond interfered sadly with composition writing, and none was added to her stock that week. Nor was even one of the handkerchiefs little Amy was trying to hem for papa completed—a great many needles were broken and lost, a great deal of thread soiled and knotted, the work was bedewed with many tears, but very little of it was accomplished. Many tears had been shed also by the younger children, whom Tom's rude words and ruder acts had made to suffer during those seven days. The cat had been nearly squeezed to death in the door, "just for fun;" the dog was quite lame from a savage kick given in a moment of passion, and Baby Alice exhibited a bruise on the forehead where the rough boy had knocked her against the bedstead. Good-natured Lawrence had looked on while other hands tidied his room, picked up his toys and put away his books, and never lifted his hand to help in the many domestic crises when his big-boy strength would have well supplemented the weakness of sisters or aunt. But we need not continue the sad catalogue. Duties had been neglected, untrue and disrespectful words said, time and opportunities wasted, and Aunt Amy sighed as she reviewed the shortcomings of the week.

"What has become of your New Year's resolutions, children?" she said, as the little flock gathered round her fire, as was their wont, on the first Sabbath afternoon of the year. "I am afraid you were not in earnest in making them."

"Oh, yes we were," said Constance, "but we haven't begun to keep them yet. There's plenty of time; only one week of the year has gone yet, you know."

"I am afraid none of you have thought much about the chief resolution of all. Perhaps that is why you have succeeded so badly with the others."

"You mean to begin to be Christians," said Ernest, one of the cousins who had come to Egmont to spend New Year's, and had not yet gone home. "But that seems such a great, terrible thing, as though it would take a lifetime."

"Yet it must be begun in a minute some time, and I know of no better time than now; do you?"

No answer was given, and the next day the city cousins went back to their own homes.

Again came the beginning of a year, again the snow fell, again the sleigh-bells jingled, again Aunt Amy gathered around her her little flock. It was smaller than last year, for the city cousins did not come. Ernest was just recovering from a long and serious illness, and his parents did not wish their other children to leave him behind. The gathering was held on New Year's eve, this time, for Aunt Amy had that to say with which she did not wish to sadden the glad New Year.

"Children," she began, "I am greatly grieved and disappointed with the record of this year. At its beginning you all resolved to be industrious, painstaking, faithful, obedient, kind and helpful; but as I look over the records of the year I find that you have been more heedless, idle, disobliging, and positively unkind than before; you don't seem even to have tried to keep your resolutions and conquer your faults."

"I always meant to," said Amy.

"And I kept thinking I would begin to-morrow," said Tom and Lawrence, both at once.

"I mean to keep mine still," said Constance, "but it's only one year since last New Year's; what is that out of a lifetime?"

"I am afraid that 'only' is at the bottom of all your failures," said Aunt Amy. It's only this once, only a day, only a week, a month, a year. A great many older people reason in the same way, and before they know it only a lifetime has slipped away, and they have accomplished nothing worth living for. Is it going to be so with you? But I called you together to listen to a letter which I have just received from your cousin Ernest, which will, I think, preach to you more eloquently and effectively than I can.

"DEAR AUNT AMY:—I want to send you the first letter the doctors have allowed me to write since my long, long sickness, to tell you that I was able to bear all the pain and suffering, to be patient under all the treatment and long confinement, and not to be a bit afraid when they told me I should in all probability not recover. I took your advice and began to try to love and serve Jesus the very night you said 'now was the best time.' Suppose I had waited only a week, as I was tempted to. The accident would have happened just as it did on the way home; I should have been unconscious for all that long time, and when I came to I should most likely have thought more of the pain than of being a Christian; and if I had died—what would have become of me forever? Tell all my cousins to begin and keep all their good resolutions at once, the moment they make them, and that just now is the only time to seek and find the Lord Jesus."

Silence followed the reading of this letter, and then all the children began to speak at once.

"Aunt Amy, I will," "Aunt Amy, I mean to," "Aunt Amy, I promise."

"No," said their aunt, raising her hand to enjoin silence, "I am not going to let you make any resolutions this New Year; such resolutions made in your own strength are almost sure to be broken, but I will tell you what by the grace of God I am going to do. I am going to say only during this year in quite a different way, and you can do the same if you choose. To-morrow morning I am going to say to myself, 'There are only three hundred and sixty-five days in this New Year for me to serve God and fit myself for heaven.' At the end of a week I shall say, 'There are only fifty-one more weeks of the year; I must be very diligent or I shall not finish all the work my Heavenly Father has given me to do this year.' When a month has gone by I shall say, 'Only eleven months left; I can't afford to miss a single opportunity or lose a single minute, and every day and every hour I will remind myself that every other hour will bring its own duties and its own responsibilities, and that what I do I must do quickly and do it now.'"

"Aunt Amy," said Horace, who being about Ernest's age, had listened with great interest to his cousin's letter, "I never felt before exactly that a boy could be a Christian; but Ernest is a real boy if there ever was one, and I'd like to be what he is; won't you let us kneel down while you pray that we may on this night of the old year, just now, seek and find the Lord Jesus?"

"If you do that," said Aunt Amy, with glad tears in her eyes, "He will give you strength to keep all your New Year's resolutions."—M. E. Winslow, in N. Y. Tribune.

TEMPERANCE.

"EVER OF THEE."

One cold day in January, 1850, a tramp entered the music store of Mr. Turner, in the Poultry, London, and said he had business with the proprietor. The visitor was unclean, and ragged almost beyond description. His beard was unkempt, dirty, matted; his feet were covered with folds of rags for shoes; he was filthy in the extreme. He was permitted through the kindness of a clerk to warm by the fire in the workshop, and then taken to Mr. Turner, the publisher. He offered the music publisher a composition which he unearthed from his rags. When asked who wrote it, he replied that he did, and then he played it on the piano to the publisher. His listeners were electrified when they heard the piano almost speak at the touch of that bundle of rags and filth. His touch was marvelous, and his very soul seemed to be at his finger tips. Then he sang a stanza of the song, and the publisher was assured it would be a success with the public. He placed the gifted tramp in charge of the kind clerk who had taken him in, and, after a bath, a shave, and decent clothes had been given him, it was found that the man was really distinguished looking, despite his dissipation. While appeasing his hunger, the transformed tramp, James Lawson, author of "Ever of Thee," related the following sad story to his new-found friend:

"I was once rich. You know what I am now. You were astonished to hear me play the piano so well. That little song has been the only companion from which I have gained any comfort for the past fifteen months. It brought back to me the days when I was rich, loved, looked up to and happy. Of course it has its sad side for me. But the memory of what it recalls is the dearest thing in my existence. Let me tell you how and why I composed the little song. Two years ago I met a girl in Brighton. If God ever allowed one of his angels to come on earth, she was that one. I adored her. She seemed to return the affection. I escorted her everywhere, was at her beck and call morn, noon and night, and it was currently believed that Miss Blank and I were engaged. I had to return to London on business, and when I went back to Brighton she was gone. Three months after I met her at a ball. She had just finished a waltz with a tall, good-looking man, and was promenading the hall on his arm. She recognized me. But when I said, 'How do you do, Miss Blank?' she quickly replied, 'I'm well, Mr. Lawson, but I am surprised to hear you call me Miss Blank. When you left Brighton so suddenly I thought I should never see you again. You left no address, never called again, and—well, I am married.' 'To whom?' I gasped. 'To Mr. Prize,' she replied, pointing at the same time to the gentleman with whom she had been dancing. That ended my life. My Marie, my dream, was gone. I left the hall, went to a low gambling place, and in drink and gambling endeavored to kill my grief. It lasted but a little time, for in four months I was penniless. Then came my trial. The men who played with me shunned me. My friends shut their doors, and a few days later my last sovereign was gone. I was utterly stranded, homeless, and unhappy as it would be possible to make a human being. For nights I slept in the cabmen's coffee houses; then I was considered a nuisance, and some door-step served me for a bed. I pawned every trinket, decent suit of clothes—everything—and finally I spent three months in a workhouse under an assumed name. It was there the presence of Marie haunted me again. One day we were at dinner. Several rich people came to distribute among us such gifts as tobacco, warm clothing, etc. I was hungry, and didn't look at the visitors; when suddenly a voice I knew, said to me: 'My good man! which would you prefer, some warm clothing or some pipes and tobacco?' I looked up. It was Marie! I rushed from the table out into the fields, and there I was found hours after, insensible. In my bed, there in that workhouse hospital, I wrote the words of the song you heard me sing to-day. Then I got well, and, sick of life, I left the place and became night watchman at some new buildings they were putting up in Aldersgate street. While there the music of my song came to me. I got a scrap of manuscript music paper, and jotted it down, and for a time I was happy. My old friends often passed me at night, jolly and careless, little dreaming that James Lawson was the poor night watchman who answered their indolent questions. Often, when all was still, I poured out my soul in this little song, and after a while the night gamins used to come and listen to me. It pleased them. To me it brought back the memory of a dead love and a ruined life. But you are tiring of my story; there is little more to tell. I could not endure the solitary meditation of my past. I again began to drink. I lost my situation, and as a last resort I thought that perhaps my little song was worth a few shillings, and brought it to Mr. Turner."

The publisher paid Lawson ten English shillings (about $2.50), and said that if the unfortunate and gifted composer kept sober he would be paid a good royalty, but that if he spent the money given in drink he would receive no more. Lawson left the music store, and did not make his appearance for five days. Then he was in a condition almost as woe-begone as when he first entered it. All his new and decent clothing was gone, and he was the picture of dissipation. Mr. Turner gave him a half-crown piece, and informed the kindly clerk that Lawson must not be allowed to return. The unfortunate man immediately left the store, and went out into the darkness of despair. The song has sung itself into hundreds of thousands of hearts, and probably no more popular or profitable one was ever written.—Inter-Ocean.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The reasons why Mary sang this song. Vs. 46-49. Mary's wonderful song shows (1) that every true experience of salvation causes us to magnify the Lord, and (2) and to make self shrink into nothing. We magnify the Lord when we make all we say and do praise him, and this can only be when we are in a state of constant nearness to him. "My spirit hath rejoiced in God my Saviour." Note the possessive case, my Saviour. Mary evidently felt that she needed a Redeemer, which forbids entirely the Romish notion of her sinlessness; and also that she needed to personally and individually appropriate him as her own. There is no respect of persons with God. Even the mother of our Lord must herself be saved like others. For this reason the Magnificat has been through all the centuries the property of the whole church. The humblest Christian can make Mary's song of praise his own. "For he hath regarded the low estate of his handmaiden." Mary saw herself, though only a simple peasant girl, blessed by remotest generations, and contrasts her humble, obscure lot with the honor that awaited her, as a reason for thus magnifying God. The great majority live and die unknown to the world, but the very few who are "born in the purple" have nothing of which to boast. "One thing happens alike to all." To be mortal, to be subject to disease and death is a low estate; and especially is humanity without a Saviour a low estate. Read the first chapter of Romans, and compare it with the condition of the ancient world, and the reports of missionaries among heathen tribes. "He that is mighty hath done to us great things" in making us heirs to eternal life, and setting before us a prospect of boundless progress.

2. The character of God a reason for magnifying him. Vs. 50-55. (1) He is merciful. They that fear him are the objects of his tenderest care. We can have no burden or anxiety so petty as to be beneath his thought if we will but trust it with him. (2) He is infinitely strong, and weakness worships strength. Human nature always desires to see what is termed poetic justice meted out; to see innocence vindicated and wrong-doers punished; to see arrogant wickedness put down and modest virtue exalted. Nor could we ever feel satisfied with the crooked course of human history and human destinies if we did not believe that a divine Hand held the threads and would eventually straighten them out. We should have no heart to labor for the putting away of wrong if we did not have a just God on our side. From the merely human standpoint evil always appears stronger than good. We see, like Elisha's servant, the hosts of the enemy, but until our eyes are opened, we do not see the chariots of fire that are fighting on the side of right. To say that an evil like the rum traffic or secret societies can never be overthrown, is a blasphemy, for it leaves God out. It is tacit infidelity; it is saying to the world, "there is no God." Christians could never commit so great a sin if they would make Mary's song theirs. "He hath filled the hungry with good things," etc. It was only when Christ came that the poor had the Gospel preached to them. A haughty hierarchy, among even the Jews, arrogated to themselves the exclusive control of spiritual things. We have in the prophets (see Zech. 11) the severest denunciations of these hireling shepherds who did not feed the flock. But in Christ the hungry souls of the common people should be satisfied, while their proud spiritual rulers should be sent away empty. Mary's song ends with a burst of patriotic fervor. "As he spake to our fathers," etc. True patriotism has its root in religion. The word country has no meaning divorced from the idea of God. Our strongest ground of assurance in fighting prevailing evils is that he will hold in remembrance the prayers of our nation's God-fearing founders. As he kept his promise to ancient Israel, so he will to them.

From the beginning there has been a continuous series of prophecies whose rays focus on Jesus the Messiah.

1. In the time of Adam, B. C. 4000, Christ's coming as a man (Gen. 3: 15, "The seed of the woman," etc.).
2. In the time of Abraham, B. C. 2000, the nation through which he was to come (Gen. 22: 18, "In thy seed," etc.).
3. In the time of Jacob, B. C. 1700, the tribe (Gen. 49: 10, "Judah").
4. In the time of Isaiah, B. C. 730, the family (Isa. 11: 1, "The stem of Jesse").
5. In the time of Micah, B. C. 700, the town (Micah 5: 2, "Bethlehem").
6. In the time of Daniel, B. C. 550, the time (Dan. 9: 24).
7. To Mary, the person, (Luke 1: 30).
8. By the angels, the day (Luke 2: 11).
9. By the star, the house (Matt. 2: 9).

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—The Ohio State Sabbath Association held its second annual State convention in the First United Presbyterian church of Cleveland, December 16, 17. The convention was in every sense a success. Dr. Crafts reported it more interesting than the national convention held in New York city. President Scovel, of Wooster, opened the convention with an address on the theme, "The Sabbath Situation, and How to Meet It." Dr. Crafts closed the convention by a powerful address on "Fair Play and Sunday Play." It was observed that Ohio is ahead of all the States in county organizations, twenty-two out of the eighty-four counties being organized. Cleveland is just now organizing a Law and Order League that promises much, especially as it is backed by a quickened moral sentiment.

—Through the generosity of W. F. Graves, Esq., of Syracuse, N. Y., a College Missionary Lectureship was recently endowed in Rutgers College. It was begun last year, provision being made for six lectures, which were given by six different persons as follows: 1. Mr. Stout on the Unique Features of Mission Work in Japan; 2. Dr. Wherry on Islam in India; 3. Dr. Kip on China as a Stronghold of Heathenism; 4. Dr. Hamlin on Fifty Years of Christian Education in Turkey; 5. Dr. Ellinwood on the Testimony of Heathen Religions to Christianity; 6. Rev. J. H. Wyckoff on the Philosophy of India. Dr. A. T. Pierson has accepted the entire Lectureship for 1890.

—Dr. A. J. Gordon writes of the Bible training schools: "I see clearly that we must have a large reinforcement of common men—knowing only the Bible, and being filled with the Spirit—in order to do the work in foreign fields. Every man of this sort whom we have sent out has done well—I speak of those employed in our A. B. M. U. So I am going to do my utmost to receive such."

—Wm. Taylor has done more to turn the eye of the church toward Africa than any other man. Others have called the attention of political governments to the Dark Continent, but no man ever turned the church toward it as Wm. Taylor.—Dr. Leonard.

—Exeter Hall, London, was lately the scene of one of those intensely interesting missionary farewells, to which the China Inland Mission has, of late years, made us happily accustomed. There were on the platform twenty-nine friends on the eve of setting out for the far East, to swell the ranks of the workers in that vast mission field—seventeen ladies and twelve gentlemen. Of these only three are returning; all the others are fresh recruits.

—Canadian Methodists gave $215,675 for missions last year, and the treasurer reports a surplus of $4,683.

LODGE NOTES.

The Duke of Fyfe, who recently wedded a daughter of the Prince of Wales, is a Mason, and all the Governors-General of Canada have been Masons, according to the British Masonic press.

At the meeting of the Miners' Progressive union at Indianapolis a resolution was passed in favor of consolidation with the Knights of Labor, and committees were appointed to attend the Columbus convention and arrange details.

Many of our American exchanges to hand by the last Frisco mail seem to be in a bad humor with each other. There are so many burning questions popping up in American Masonry that there seems to be a free fight raging.—Victoria Freemason.

The Legal News, of Chicago, in the following item implies that the office of "prelate" in the lodge has a religious significance: "Mr. E. R. Bliss, of the Chicago Bar, has been elected and qualified as prelate of Apollo Commandery, St. Paul was an excellent lawyer, and noted for his persecution of Christians before he was called to the ministry. Mr. Bliss will not renounce the legal profession for the ministry, but continue to practice law."

A correspondent of an Australian Masonic monthly approves a criticism of the editor in the following significant terms: "Your pithy 'gleaning' re lodge grog cupboards has ventilated an abuse which has long been as a canker worm, spreading yearly, and with the most pernicious efforts. I have never been able to see the necessity for these aids to private tipping, or recognize the right of any member of a lodge to have the 'use of them' at all hours. The contents of these 'private bars' belong solely to the lodges and should only be used at their festive meetings, and their being used on any other occasion is a breach of trust, which, in my opinion, renders the offender amenable to lodge discipline."

Colonel Olcott, the traveling theosophist, has touched at Belfast, and lectured in that fine city at a shilling a head. He is cheaper than a blaspheming "Colonel" who remains on this side of the water. Colonel Olcott did not secure a large audience in the old Presbyterian town, and the indifference with which he was listened to appeared in the fact that when he closed no one was found ready to move the customary vote of thanks. The Colonel's lecture, semi-Buddhistic, and wholly infidel, does not seem to have been very luminous, especially in the statement of his theosophic vagaries. In Dublin a gentleman rose in the audience, and after listening intently to the lecturer, and asked the Colonel to state in brief what he had been talking about, as he had utterly failed to understand him. There was no response.

An important secret meeting of the members of the order of Modern Woodmen of America was held in Des Moines, Iowa, at which about fifteen camps from different parts of the State were represented. The meeting was held in accordance with a call emanating from the camp of which Head Banker Smith is a member, and was to consider the frauds perpetrated on the order by a spurious death certificate. Resolutions were passed unanimously condemning Head Consul Root, of Lyons, and Head Physician McKinnie, of Evanston, who are suspected of crooked work in the order, and who have been keeping up a quarrel through the official papers, and are hurting the order. The resolution called for the immediate resignation of these high officers, and unless they do so by Jan. 20 a demand for a special meeting of the head camp to oust them and investigate the frauds will be circulated.

If you have catarrh you are in danger, as the disease is liable to become chronic and affect your general health, or develop into consumption. Hood's Sarsaparilla cures catarrh by purifying and enriching the blood, and building up the system. Give it a trial.

THE AMERICAN ANTI-SECRECY LEAGUE.

The political branch of the N. C. A. work has had a steady growth in membership during the past month. Three more States have been added to our list during the same period.

Commendations received show that as fast as its work is understood, it will grow in favor with those who will not vote for lodgites. As the great mass of Prohibitionists are opposed to secret societies, so among them this movement finds most adherents and co-workers.

In some localities a good local membership exists. At the earliest practical moment such should organize on the League plan to free their county and village from lodge rule.

Have you realized and have you explained to your neighbors what splendid service the Christian Cynosure has done the American voters during the recent Clan-na-Gael and Mormon trials?

The copying and reprinting of its compilations by other papers, though often without giving credit, demonstrates the great value which the Cynosure and American Anti-secrecy League are in the movement to redeem the administration of justice and republican government.

Every opponent to organized secrecy should obtain their neighbor's subscription to the Cynosure, not only because it has no peer as an advocate of pure Christianity in opposition to secret lodge heathenism, but as an organ of political anti-secrecy the CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE is, without any doubt, the great store-house from which American newspapers and voters are drawing their facts for their political warfare against the combination of Freemasonry, Clan-na-Gael, Mormon and other secret orders, which now so largely control our government offices and courts.

A few weeks ago the Cynosure advertised a miniature parlor set for 95 cents, which some took for granted to mean a parlor set for adult use. It is a safe rule to go by in reference to all advertisements, that you will NOT get something for nothing. The firm of Lord & Thomas, who control the advertising space in the Cynosure, do not intend to admit any frauds, neither will the publisher of the Cynosure admit frauds if he can detect them, but the advertisements are not guaranteed. We use our best judgment, and buyers must do the same.

Take Hood's Sarsaparilla 100 Doses One Dollar

The Chief Reason for the marvellous success of Hood's Sarsaparilla is found in the fact that this medicine actually accomplishes all that is claimed for it. Its real merit has won for Hood's Sarsaparilla a popularity and sale greater than that of any other blood purifier. It cures Scrofula, all Humors, Dyspepsia, etc. Prepared only by C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

HOME AND HEALTH.

HOUSEHOLD HYGIENE.

The home is woman's citadel; it is here disease most often threatens; and who shall meet the foe at the threshold if not she? A thorough, theoretical and practical knowledge of the science of health should be considered as imperative a requisite of her education as any other branch of mental or moral culture. The gospel of health and the Gospel of Christ go hand in hand; indeed, the duty of properly caring for the body may be regarded as much a part of the Christian religion as any of the explicit commands of the Decalogue, and the mother who conscientiously and sacredly surrounds her loved ones with such companions and influences as will be most conducive to their moral growth and security, ought to manifest the same care to surround them with such conditions as will insure their physical well being.

Modern scientists have demonstrated the fact that among the most formidable enemies to life and health are the invisible, microscopical creatures called disease germs, which have their origin in filth, overcrowding, bad air, decaying vegetation, defective sewerage or draining, and the like conditions. They always abound in the atmosphere wherever decomposition and decay are taking place, and are usually accompanied by offensive or musty odors, although it is possible for the air to be swarming with disease germs without the presence of unpleasant smells. The contrary is seldom true, however, and we may safely assert that a foul odor is nature's warning of something dangerous that ought to be at once removed or escaped from. Diphtheria, malarial and other fevers so prevalent at this season of the year are occasioned by these insidious enemies of health, often born and bred within the very homes they make so sad and desolate through their destructive agency.

As briefly and informally as possible we wish to hint at a few of the nooks, in and about modern homes, where these enemies of life and health are most apt to hide, and which should claim the vigilant care of every housekeeper.

A fertile source for germs, and one which perhaps often escapes observation, because least frequented, is the cellar. Here are stored throughout the year, all manner of vegetable products, firkins of salted meats and pickles, barrels of soap, old boxes, bins of coal, refuse of various descriptions, and, indeed, almost every conceivable article. Many of the vegetables undergo decay, the brine of the meat and pickles becomes tainted, and frequently from lack of proper drainage, every heavy rain covers the floor with water, which becomes putrescent and odorous. The foul gases from these various sources penetrate through every crack and crevice of the floor and pass upward into the living rooms of the house, doing no end of mischief to its occupants. Many cellars, likewise, contain the cistern and sometimes even the well from which the family is supplied with drinking water, which are frequently contaminated by the foul water which soaks in through the cellar bottom.

Eminent sanitarians insist that cellars should never be constructed under dwelling houses; but if our houses are already built, and we must for convenience make use of the cellars, we should keep them scrupulously clear of all decaying substances, give their walls a frequent coat of whitewash, secure good drainage, and above all, open the outside door and windows wide every day during warm weather, and every week at least during winter, and effect a free interchange of air.

In many homes the kitchen sink is the avenue through which disease and suffering are admitted to the family circle. Bits of table waste left in the dish-water find their way into its pipes, which usually have a bend or trap before reaching the drain, and through which water containing no sediment would flow freely; but the greasy particles of food lodge by the way and gradually accumulate until the pipes are so blocked up that water passes through very slowly. This keeps the mass of solid matter constantly saturated, thus inducing decomposition, and at once becomes a hotbed for disease germs.

In another corner the kitchen wood-box is scarcely a less formidable enemy to health, used as it too frequently is as a catch-all for everything not otherwise disposed of. Several inches of decomposing wood, chips, bark moldy apple cores, and odds and ends of all sorts cover its bottom. This debris, when stirred up with each fresh armful of fuel placed therein, emits an odor which is accompanied by myriads of germs which modern scientific investigations have shown to be connected with the development of serious disease.

Many a housewife who does not appreciate the great value of sunlight, in damp weather allows mold and mildew to accumulate on her closet walls and in dark corners of her dwelling-rooms, never dreaming that any harm may come from it. Such are ignorant of the fact that every spot of this same mold is a forest of little plants, which are constantly throwing off millions of spores or germs in every direction, filling the air, getting into the food, making the bread to sour and doing mischief in a score of ways, besides being inhaled by the occupants of the house, and possibly conveying to them the seeds of disease. The guest-chamber and the parlors are the rooms most apt to be infected with this "leprosy of the household," as it is termed in the ancient Jewish code of health (for no doubt Lev. 14: 36-48 refers to a species of mold). Being seldom used, they are seldom disinfected by the sun's rays, and the air becomes close and fusty, laden with death-dealing properties, which are ready to exhibit their malign potency whenever a favorable opportunity occurs. —Mrs. Dr. J. H. Kellogg, in Union Signal.

CATARRH CURED.

A clergyman, after years of suffering from that loathsome disease, Catarrh, and vainly trying every known remedy, at last found a prescription which completely cured and saved him from death. Any sufferer from this dreadful disease sending a self-addressed stamped envelope to Prof. J. A. Lawrence, 88 Warren St., New York, will receive the recipe free of charge.

What You Need Spring and Fall

WHEN you feel "all run down" is Ayer's Sarsaparilla. For restoring strength after sickness, or toning up the system at any time, this is the medicine of all others. Don't waste time and money on worthless compounds, whatever their pretensions; but remember that Ayer's has been the standard Sarsaparilla for nearly half a century and has no equal.

"Sometime ago I found my system entirely run down. I had a feeling of constant fatigue and languor and very little ambition for any kind of effort. A friend advised me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which I did with the best results. It has done me more good than all other medicines I have ever used."—Frank Mellows, Chelsea, Mass.

"I was all run down before I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and now I am gaining in strength every day."—Mrs. Alice West, Jefferson, W. Va.

"I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla for several years. When I feel weary and worn out, it always helps me."—A. Grommet, Kingsville, Johnson Co., Mo.

"I was long troubled with nervous debility and severe headaches. By the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla I have been restored to health."—Anthony Louis, 55 Tremont St., Charlestown, Mass.

"As a safe and reliable spring and family medicine, I think sarsaparilla invaluable."—Wm. R. Ferree, 1 Chatham St., Boston, Mass.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Made by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Are always trying seasons to most constitutions, and unless the blood is purified and enriched, one becomes exposed to a variety of maladies. To make good blood, nothing is so effectual as Ayer's Sarsaparilla, the most celebrated tonic alternative in existence. Try it.

"I have found great relief from general debility in the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It tones and invigorates the system, regulates the action of the digestive and assimilative organs, and vitalizes the blood."—H. D. Johnson, Jr., 383 Atlantic Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla has a well-deserved reputation in this locality for restoring to healthy, vigorous action the vital organs when they have become weakened or exhausted. I have used it in my family for this purpose, especially after the system has become depleted from malarial attacks. I have advised its use among my neighbors in similar cases, and it has always proved invaluable."—C. C. Hamilton, Emberson, Tex.

FIFTY YEARS and BEYOND;

OR,

Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by

REV ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveler to the great beyond."—Witness.

PAGAN COUNTERFEITS

IN THE

Christian Church.

A pamphlet of 52 pages, by Chas. A. S. Temple.

The following from Rev. H. H. Hinman shows his estimate of its contents:

"I have read with great interest 'Pagan Counterfeits in the Christian Church' by Chas. A. S. Temple. I regard the subject discussed as important, and its presentation both able and timely. There is a most manifest drift in all our Protestant denominations towards unauthorized ritualism and the substitution of human inventions in place of the simplicity of the Gospel, as given by Christ and his apostles. In calling attention to this tidal wave of formalism, the author has conferred a lasting benefit on the church; es of Protestantism."

FARM NOTES.

POULTRY ON THE FARM.

The average price of eggs in large cities seems to justify the general impression that the poultry on the farm is the most neglected of all stock. A farmer will stable his horses and cows, provide pens for his sheep and pigs, and let the hens shift for themselves. Now, for the capital invested, there is no more profitable stock than a good flock of hens; but hens, like other stock, must be well cared for to be profitable.

THE HEN-HOUSE.

For a house, almost any kind of a building will do. In the winter a loft will answer the purpose, but there are a few requisites that the hen-house must be provided with in order to secure success; these are a tight roof—which insures a dry floor—warm walls and glazed windows. The tight roof can be made in the cheapest way the farmer chooses, either shingles, roofing-felt or anything that will effectually keep the water out; the walls can be made warm by lining them inside with tarred felt or building paper—and if this can be so placed as to leave an air space between it and the weatherboarding, so much the better—and straw walls, made by nailing laths or any old strips of boards on the stud-ding and filling in tightly with straw. I like this wall better than any other cheap wall I have seen. The window should front the south or south-east; two 3x6 feet hot-bed sash will give ample light and sun for one house. Cover the floor about a foot deep with straw, leaves or any kind of litter, so that the hens can scratch for their feed and get needed exercise in so doing.

FEED.

The question of feed is one about which hardly any two persons will agree, but I have noticed one thing in all directions given for feeding poultry, and that is, give them enough to eat. A hen cannot eat very much in one day, but when you have a flock of fifty the amount of feed required is more than is usually supposed—especially by the farmer who has been accustomed to throw a few handfuls of grain to his hens and expects them to hunt for the rest of their rations. When cold weather comes all the feed the hens need must be supplied to them in their houses; if they are expected to pick up a good part of their living in the barn-yard, they will do so cheerfully, but you will not be troubled to pick up many eggs. But, to come to the kind of feed: Corn, wheat, oats and buckwheat are the kinds of grain found on most farms, and these—or two or three of them—will be all that are needed. The best advice I can give as to quantity is to feed about all the hens will eat; there can be no definite rule, as the quantity will vary with the size of the hens and the state of the weather. I feed but twice a day, but aim to give them enough in the morning to last till well towards evening, then I give them all they will eat before they go to roost. At one time I used self-feeding boxes, and kept them supplied with corn. The hens did very well, and I thought ate more than if the feed was thrown to them daily.

MILK FOR HENS.

Hens require animal food of some kind, and in winter pork cracklings make a very cheap and good substitute for the summer insects. Fresh meat from the butcher is also good, but is more trouble to prepare, and costs more. I give my hens skimmed milk to drink during the whole year, and to this I think I owe many of the eggs laid.

PROFITS.

My "hen year" begins November 1, and I have just made up the account with sixty-four hens. The eggs and chickens sold and used, and the chickens on hand, amount to $166.07; feed for the year, $44.74; balance to credit, $121.33; or $1.89 to the credit of each hen; or over a dollar profit on each hen in eggs alone, after charging the hens with the feed for themselves and over a hundred chickens raised. This is not a large showing, but it is given to encourage others to make their hens a source of profit and pleasure instead of loss and vexation. Two dollars profit on each hen can be realized by any one who will take the time and trouble to care for them in the right way. Then there will be no complaint of a lack of eggs to sell or use. The farm implements will not be decorated with valuable fertilizer; the garden seeds will come up according to nature, and not with the help of the hens' feet (for I take it for granted you will make a henyard next spring); the old sow will miss her share of spring chickens; the hunt for eggs in loft, mow, stable and fence corner will cease, and perhaps you may have children who will get interested in poultry-keeping—seeing that it is profitable—and in a few years you may find that the hen account is of as much importance as that of any other product of the farm.

SUNDRIES.

Dry dust for the dry bath.
Pounded shells, bones, crockery, etc., for the grinding mill (gizzard).
Cabbages (are the best), onions, turnips, beets, or green rye for winter "pasture."
Kerosene emulsion or crude petroleum for lice.
Roosts on a level, and near the floor.
Hens never allowed to go out in bad weather.
No nest-eggs needed; hens can't help laying when the conditions are all right.
No cocks needed when no eggs are wanted for setting.
Clover hay for dry fodder.
A change of feed occasionally.
No "soft" messes required.
No "condition powders," no medicine, no patent "egg food," no "nothing" but the same common sense applied to the hen as to the cow.—A. L. Crosby.

When the blood is impure, thick, and sluggish, or thin and impoverished, there can be no health. With these conditions, all the functions of the body are impaired, and the result is a variety of dangerous complications. The best remedy is Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

For Bronchial, Asthmatic and Pulmonary Complaints, "BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES" have remarkable curative properties. 25c. a box.

A GREAT SUCCESS.

The Equitable Homestead Corporation, an association incorporated under the laws of California, has now ONE THOUSAND ACRES of the finest raisin land in Fresno county in process of cultivation.

SO MANY INQUIRIES

have been made about the organization of this colony, and the profits of raisin culture, and such a desire manifested to have the Equitable enlarged so as to admit more members, that I have decided to organize another colony association on the same plan.

NOTE THIS:

I have 2,000 ACRES of land which I will dispose of in the following manner: It is divided into five-acre lots and multiples of five. It will all be planted in raisin grapes and other fruits and cultivated at actual cost, the purchaser paying in cash just what it takes to plant and cultivate it, which he may do in small installments during three years' time, which brings

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

CHICAGO.

Members of the Personal Rights League, of Chicago, are moving for independence in the elections. They want officers who will preserve their rights to break the Sabbath.

Another packing and preserving company, to do business in Chicago, secured an incorporation license the other day at Springfield.

Rev. Dr. George C. Lorimer, pastor of Immanuel Baptist church, of this city, has received a call from the Warren Avenue Baptist church, of Boston, of which Rev. Dr. Gifford was until lately pastor.

F. H. Marsh, who was appointed Superintendent of Police last week, is spoken of as an excellent man for the place.

COUNTRY.

Advices to New York dealers indicate that the unsettled condition of affairs in Brazil is interfering with the gathering of rubber, the receipts of which have materially fallen off.

The national league for the protection of American institutions has been incorporated in New York. Its special object is to look after the interests of the common school system and to prevent sectarian interference.

Three-fourths of the inhabitants of Denver and Cheyenne are said to be suffering from Russian influenza.

A report from Jesup, Ga., says the jail was broken into early Thursday morning and two Negro prisoners were shot to death. It is also said that a large number of Negroes were taken from their homes and scourged, and that many others were compelled to quit the town.

Heavy wind, thunder, lightning and hail prevailed in New York State Thursday, causing loss of life and damage to property. A cyclone swept across Onondaga Lake at Syracuse, partly wrecking a street railway barn, killing Assistant Superintendent Charles A. Nichols, and severely wounding other employees.

Early Thursday morning the Western College at Toledo, Iowa, was totally destroyed by fire. The loss is $150,000, on which there is insurance of $22,500. The college belonged to the United Brethren church.

The Nadeau winery, near Los Angeles, Cal., was destroyed Wednesday by the breaking of a levee. Nearly $100,000 worth of wine was destroyed.

All the tramps in and around Boston were given a Christmas dinner by Mr. George Parker, who had for thirty-four years been "on the turf." The parable of the prodigal son and a temperance address were read after the dinner, and 330 of the diners walked up and signed the pledge for a year.

It has just been decided that the eight-hour law, which was placed on the statute books twenty-one years ago, is applicable to the departments of the Philadelphia city government.

Reports from Fort Sully, in South Dakota, are to the effect that the Indians at that place are not satisfied with the treaty, and are causing trouble. Several settlers have been killed.

A windstorm Thursday leveled hundreds of derricks in the McKean and Allegheny (Pa.) oil fields, and two houses at Bradford were wrecked. The damage will reach $40,000.

At Wilmette, Ill., Tuesday night, J. D. Revell, formerly station agent at that place, was killed, together with his wife and child, while crossing the tracks of the Chicago & Northwestern railroad.

In the Probate Court of Cooper county, Missouri, Tuesday, a Negress secured a decree for $700 against the estate of Joseph Hickham, who died three weeks ago. Hickham had bought the woman in a slave market twenty-five years ago, and since that had not permitted her to go beyond the bounds of the farm, and never told her of the results of the war. After Hickham's death she ran away, discovered that she was a free woman, and brought suit for wages with the result as previously stated.

FOREIGN.

It is reported that the dispute between England and Portugal regarding their African possessions will be submitted to Duke Ernest of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha for arbitration. The British minister has had several long interviews with Senhor Gomes, the Portuguese foreign minister, on the questions at issue. The Portuguese corvet Mindello has been ordered to remain in Delagoa Bay.

Herr Guttentstein, the public prosecutor of the grand duchy of Baden, speaking at a public meeting here, declared himself a socialist, and proceeded to develop the socialist theory and to advocate the socialist political program. The meeting was immediately suspended and the hall closed by the police.

The Mexican Government is considering plans for the suppression of gambling.

Private telegrams from Montevideo confirm the news of recent disorder and riots in Brazil. They also say that the situation of the present Brazilian Government is critical. The Daily News says that Germany will send an ironclad to Brazil to protect the German colonists on the Rio Grande.

The Pope received the college of cardinals Dec. 24. In addressing them he said: "In these times, when the church is assailed and persecuted because it is the great stronghold of faith and truth, it is a consolation to know that among the children of the church themselves there is perfect unity." His holiness announced that he would shortly issue an encyclical letter defining the duties of Catholics in this crisis.

Mme. Bonnemain, an enthusiastic supporter of Gen. Boulanger, has just inherited $1,500,000, the bulk of which she will devote to the general's cause.

The Vossische Zeitung has an interesting article on the German attitude toward Stanley, in which it says that if the German enthusiasts for colonial development should attempt to follow lame attacks upon England by assailing Stanley they would prove themselves mean-spirited people in the lowest sense of the word. In the reception of Stanley the people at Berlin should not allow themselves to be influenced by any other feelings than those of admiration for his courage, his resolution and his achievements. They must honor him at once as the guest of the emperor, and as the greatest living African explorer.

Dr. Schweinfurth, in a letter from Cairo, urges the German Government to secure the services of Emin Pasha and send him to the interior of Africa to conciliate the Arabs and create a commercial center at Lake Tanganyika.

Judge Brewer was confirmed as member of the Supreme Court before a protest could be heard from the people. Some of the ablest Senators voted against him for the reason that his most celebrated decision was revoked by the Supreme Court. That decision was in favor of the liquor dealers and manufacturers of Kansas. His appointment was received by all liquordom with delight. They provided him a banquet at Leavenworth which threatened to be a disgraceful drinking affair until the city authorities interfered and enforced the law against the new Justice and his friends. Mr. Harrison cannot afford such appointments as this seems to be.

Reports from Rome on the first two days of the year must not be passed by. The first is that the Pope has appointed bishops for Russia, where Catholics enjoy equal rights with Armenians. The other is that England desires a kind of Catholic patriarchate erected at Malta, to preside not only over Malta, but also over Egypt and the English possessions in Africa. France, which already possesses the see of Algiers, with jurisdiction over all Africa through Cardinal Lavigerie, cannot now revoke this protectorate. In connection with this report, it is said that the Pope will accept the offer of having a stable English representative at the Vatican. This harmonizing conflicting interests of Greek and Latin churches in Russia, and resumption of some of the forms of past material power, are significant movements on the part of Rome.

The Italian government has taken another turn of the screw for the repression of the Jesuits. The Chamber of Deputies lately passed a bill "depriving the clergy of the direction of all charities," that is, of charities maintained by public funds. It is a remarkable fact in history, that while the whole world is tending toward a greater freedom, civil and individual, there is one class which cannot be trusted. The Jesuit is driven from Germany and then from France within a few years. His presence is insupportable. In France all priests, we believe, are prohibited from taking part in elections. On the face of it this seems an unwarrantable and despotic action on the part of a republic. But as a measure of self-preservation, it is defensible. It would be greatly for the cause of domestic peace if such laws were enforced here also; not for the restriction of the Jesuits only, but of all who have sworn allegiance to the secret lodge system.

Those who dread the invasion of foreign laborers, office seekers and languages, make one positive exception. The Welshmen in America are a quiet, religious people; loving independence in church government, and so readily assimilating with our ideas; and as for insinuating their language into our public schools and elsewhere—why, the most intense American could do no more than wish all the rest might be like it. Last week Chicago entertained a grand National Eisteddfod or Welsh festival, the first of the kind. Local gatherings of the name are held annually in several cities. It was attended by intelligent, cultured men and women, and music, poesy and patriotic sentiment filled the program of the meeting.

General Morgan, the first Commissioner of Indian Affairs whose independence and integrity promises to make the Government schools a benefit to the tribes, is under accusation. His appointment has never been confirmed, and there is a movement to prevent it not to be despised. The Government schools have been notoriously ill-managed, the play-thing of politicians, so that the church schools only were of any benefit to the Indian children, and of the public money given to the latter the priests got the largest share. The resolution of the Commissioner means a restriction of the allowance to Romanists, and the hierarchy are determined he shall be rejected. They claim he has been discriminating against Romanists in government employ. He has removed some who deserved it; and every good citizen should rally to his support and let the Senate hear them in this cause. In such a case the objection of the Jesuit priesthood should be an excellent reason for his confirmation.

We have noticed the fact that the pride of Chicago, the Auditorium building, was constructed without the interference of secret labor unions; and these were bitterly hostile to the enterprise on that account. After the building was completed the Freemasons were permitted to go through their mummery over a small stone on the sidewalk, which was no part of the structure. Following this performance came the opening of a gin-palace at the main entrance of the Auditorium; and if the labor unions showed little wisdom in their previous objections they now make amends by a manly protest against this liquor shop. They say, in their remonstrance to the president of the Auditorium company: "We look upon this place, designed for the mental and moral debauchery of man, and then turn to your repeated declarations of the lofty ideals and pure and beneficent purposes for which this structure was erected and dedicated; that this was not a commercial enterprise; that dividends were not expected or sought for; that stock subscribed was a donation rather than an investment; that the fundamental object was to humanize the rich and elevate the poor." They regard it as a violation of public confidence, and make an honorable request that this vile place be closed. May the managers have the good sense to heed it.

Protestant missionaries in Brazil are crying urgently to the churches that the new Brazil be saved from infidelity. The priest has long had control, and the labor of the messenger of Christ has been to bring men out of idolatry and superstition, into the light of life. The political changes have brought another power to the front—infidel Freemasonry. Already they tell us that a fully equipped academy in Campinas, called "Culto a Sciencia," is under notoriously infidel direction. The law and medical, and technological schools, are hot-beds of positivism and unbelief. Materialism is already intrenched in the redoubts. Left to itself, ere 1900 dawns on Brazil, it will have routed completely the spurious Christianity which now prevails. The question for the missionaries is now a new one. Will they have the faith and courage to meet it at the lodge door? Will they proclaim a Saviour who in secret said nothing, and call upon these infidels to leave their lodges? The case presents a new issue in missionary work. Will the American churches heed the call from Brazil, and support an effort which must antagonize the lodge if it is effectual in saving the new republic?

SOME LODGE DOGMAS EXAMINED.

BY REV. DAVID MCKEE.

The qualifications of a candidate for Masonic honors are said by Sickels, in his Masonic Monitor, to be two, one internal and the other external. "The external are those that refer to his outward fitness for initiation, and are based on his moral and religious character, the frame of his body, the constitution of his mind, and his social position." "He must be a man...at least twenty-one years of age [all below that are excluded], of good moral character...capable of earning an honest living." If helpless he is excluded. It is a strange way of cultivating liberality, to confine it to those who are never likely to need it, and exclude all who may need it. It is directly the opposite of that taught by our Saviour. He directed the self-righteous Pharisee, "When thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, and the blind, and thou shalt be blessed; for they cannot recompense thee." He does not say, Call the able-bodied and wealthy, who can pay a large initiatory fee, from which you can return a small moiety in the case of need, while you appropriate the principal part for your own advantage.

The same remarks apply to brotherly love. Christ makes this co-extensive with the human family. The second great commandment is, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." In his parable of the wounded Samaritan, he defines a "neighbor" to be one who gives help immediately to the needy, irrespective of nationality or race. To enter into an association that confines brotherhood to its own members, and excludes all others, is not the best way of cultivating brotherly love among men. That charity that suffers long and is kind, that delights to do good, does not need to have its light concealed under the bushel of rites and ceremonies, in order to cultivate its exercise.

These remarks apply with equal force to all secret societies. If the objects published to the world are the sole objects for which they are organized, they could all be attained much better in open than in secret meetings. The human constitution is such that it attributes sinister motives to works of darkness. It cannot be persuaded that there are not things done in secret that will not bear the light, and this view is strengthened by the promises and oaths that are taken, always to conceal and never reveal any thing that is done. The history of secret, oath-bound societies, from the Inquisition of Spain to the Commune of Paris, strengthens our suspicions. The object publicly announced by the Inquisition was the salvation of the soul of the individual; but in carrying out that object they perpetrated, in secret, those deeds of cruelty, which being laid open to public view, horrified the world. The Commune of Paris, under the banner of liberty and equality, made its streets run with blood. Those who seek to accomplish a good object by the means that bad men always use to accomplish their wicked designs, expose it to reproach and suspicion. They disregard the Scriptural injunction, "Let not your good be evil spoken of." Paul, when performing a work of charity in sending alms to the poor in Judea, was careful to do it in such an open manner that his honesty might be apparent to all men. "Providing for honest things, not only in the sight of God, but also in the sight of men." If the ostensible objects are not the real objects of these societies, they are acting the part of pirates on the great sea of human life, by holding out false colors to allure the unsuspecting and deprive them of their liberty.

ACKNOWLEDGING GOD.

BY REV. GEORGE THOMPSON.

"In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he shall direct thy paths." Prov. 3: 6.

This is a most precious promise. We all need divine guidance. Would that we felt more deeply such need, so that we would heartily fulfill the conditions and secure the rich blessing.

We are to acknowledge our unworthiness, and weakness, and liability to go astray, so that we will not trust in ourselves. Also our obligations to, and dependence on, God for all needed wisdom, and strength, and guidance. And that we are his servants, and rejoice to confess his name, and goodness, and worthiness, to the world. So in all places, and among all people, and at all times, we should clearly own God as the holy and righteous "Governor among the nations." And, if we truly desire to know and do only his will, and that he may be glorified, he will fulfill his promises and "direct our paths" in the right and best way—for our good and his glory.

This truth was exemplified in the case of Joseph. It is evident that he stood for God and righteousness when a lad, for he brought to his father a report of the evil deeds of his brethren (Gen. 37: 1), and thereby secured their envy and hatred.

He must have acknowledged God in his bondage, for it is said, "The Lord was with Joseph." Gen. 39: 2, 21, 23. "And his master saw that the Lord was with him." Gen. 39: 3.

When tempted to commit a great sin, he had the fear of God before him, and said, "How can I do this great wickedness, and sin against God!" Gen. 39: 9. He thereby owned his obligations to God, and his purpose to obey and honor him "in all his ways." True, he was thrown into prison for his steadfastness; but never mind, wait a little, and it will be seen that God was "directing his paths" to bring about the greatest good.

Next, while in the prison, when the king's officers were troubled about their dreams, he was not ashamed of his God, but said, "Do not interpretations belong to God?" Noble Joseph! And God honored him by giving the wisdom needful for the interpretation.

Two years after this Pharaoh dreamed, and could find no interpreter until Joseph was sent for. How grandly he appears before a heathen and idolatrous despot, who holds the power of life and death! But he wavers not, nor is abashed in the least, and acknowledges the true and living God as his God, and gives all glory to him.

Now see how God "directed his steps." The king confesses the superiority of Joseph's God, and the fitness of Joseph, above all others, for the office of supervising the affairs of Egypt during the years of plenty and of famine; and appointed him governor.

When Joseph saw his brother Benjamin, he exclaimed, "God be gracious unto thee, my son," thus acknowledging his God before these strangers, teaching us that in our business intercourse with our fellows we should confess our God. When he had made himself known to his brethren, while he did not cover the fact that they sold him, he said, "God did send me before you to preserve life." "God sent me before you to preserve you a posterity in the earth, and to save your lives by a great deliverance." "So now it was not you that sent me hither, but God." "Haste to my father, and tell him God hath made me Lord of all Egypt." How beautiful! See what is meant by "acknowledging God in all our ways." Not only in the blessings, but in the afflictions and sufferings of life should his fatherly and loving hand be confessed, with sweet submission to his will, and hearty delight in all his ways. Then will he "direct our steps."

Finally, as Joseph was dying, he remembered the God of his fathers, and the covenant with Abraham, and said, "I die, and God will surely visit you and bring you out of this land, unto the land which he sware to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. . . . God will surely visit you, and ye shall carry up my bones from hence." Gen. 50: 24, 25. Says Kitto, "It was this constant reference to God, in all things, before all things, and for all things, that forms the real character of Joseph's history, and is the true secret of all his glory and success."

Joseph fulfilled the conditions, and God fulfilled his promise. And God is the same to-day, and his promises are as true and faithful now as ever, to all who fulfill the conditions, and trust him, and delight in his will and way. "Commit thy way unto the Lord, trust also in him, and he will bring it to pass."

LESSON OF THE CRONIN TRIAL.

The murder of Dr. Cronin and the trial of his murderers have once more called attention to the evils and dangers arising from secret societies. There is no excuse for the maintenance of such societies in our land. Those who enter them put their very lives in the hands of the higher magnates and inner circles, and they are compelled to obey the will of their superiors, even though obedience demands the violation of the laws of God and man; they are no longer their own masters. How any intelligent man is willing to accept such humiliation is passing strange.

These societies threaten the safety of society and government. This Chicago trial reveals the fact that there are men among us who regard their obligation to a voluntary association as of more binding force than their obligation to the state. If, at the command of their self-constituted rulers, they take human life, it is not too much to suppose that at the same command they will commit perjury or any other crime, which may be thought for the good of their order. If in their opinion the laws of the society are superior to the laws of the state, the laws of the church and the home will have no higher place. Those who put the Clan-na-Gael, or any other society, above the state, home and church, are undesirable and dangerous citizens.

It may be that the facts brought out at this trial will emphasize the dangers of secretism. There is need of an awakening. There are so many secret orders, large and small, that familiarity with them creates indifference. Just now we are speaking only of the way in which they interfere with the duties of citizens in the state and the home, though we do not forget that to some of them there is the graver objection than they teach a Christless religion. If the murder of Dr. Cronin would arouse the excitement and bring about the results occasioned by the abduction of Morgan half a century ago, his death would not be in vain.—United Presbyterian.

There have been celebrated trials in this country which have lasted longer than this, and there has been at least one which more profoundly interested a greater number of intelligent persons, but perhaps there was never another criminal case so full of complications, so abounding in dramatic disclosures, and so fundamentally significant. It began in mystery, and it is common belief that only a small part of its mysterious ramifications have yet been discovered. The trial has proceeded under the natural difficulties which invest a prosecution for conspiracy, and, if a tithe of all the reports which have filled the air can be trusted, artificial obstacles have been raised which only unsleeping vigilance could have avoided.

The question of prime significance to the country was whether or not there did exist a secret organization whose inner circle assumed, and in reality exercised, authority over the lives of persons obnoxious to them. Around that central point, whatever convictions have fastened upon the popular mind, there is still more obscurity than light; and this is not the time to grow weary and consider the affair happily ended. It has been reported, among the countless rumors to which the trial has given birth, that startling revelations would certainly follow a verdict convicting the defendants. The prospects of imprisonment for life may be so much less terrifying than a sentence of death as to falsify this prediction. If this chance fails some other may offer. It will be a universal misfortune if, from this starting point, the whole truth is not traced, wherever it may lead.—New York Tribune.

A New York newspaper publishes the following concerning Chicago:

"We, here in New York, have no idea of the peculiar interest that the power and strength of the Clan-na-Gael, as brought out by the various witnesses in the famous trial, has aroused there, and the feeling of suspicion and fear that seems to pervade all classes in regard to it."

This would be important if true, but it happens to be stuff and nonsense. It is difficult to understand what Chicago has to fear from that precious society any more than New York and other cities. The Clan-na-Gael is a national organization which is at least as powerful in New York, Philadelphia, San Francisco and elsewhere, as it is in Chicago. The people of this city openly denounce the oath-bound organization. They are now complaining loudly because three of its influential members have escaped the noose to go to prison for life. But New York is not saying a word about the Clan-na-Gael camps existing in its midst.

The city in which Mr. Patrick Ford is a politician of note and Gen. Kerwin is one of the chief federal officers makes a singular spectacle of itself when it begins to hurl stones from its battlements of glass.—Chicago News.

THE JESUITS WANT A STATE.

The late developments in Brazil should teach Americans to fear the Jesuits as well as Freemasons, and labor unceasingly for the overthrow of their secret system. The following secret circular, issued by the Roman Catholic church in New Mexico, has been sent to the Pittsburgh Christian Advocate by its correspondent in that territory. It will be remembered that New Mexico is making an effort to secure admission into the Union. The circular, which was issued by the Romish church for the purpose of controlling the new State, especially against the public school system, reads:

IN CONFIDENCE.

All faithful members of the Holy Catholic church, and especially all of our people of Mexican blood, to whom this sign shall come, are invoked to read with much care, and to weigh well its contents.

We ask of you to respect all that is contained in this paper as something told in strict confidence. You are called on by this because we believe you are a faithful son of the church, and we know that you are a man of considerable influence.

A convention to make a constitution of the new State of New Mexico will be held in the town of Santa Fe, September 3d, next. It is the declared intention of the enemies of our religion to send delegates to that convention who will so form the organic law as to force you to deny your children all kinds of education excepting that of the world. The plan is to provide in that constitution that you be obliged to pay taxes to sustain public schools, notwithstanding you can not, on account of conscientious scruples, permit your children to be educated in said places. No faithful son of the church, nor any man of the Mexican caste, who understands what he owes to himself and to the traditions of his fathers, will submit to this. The struggle in our last legislature proved that so great is the danger that this execrable wicked education will be forced upon us. The escape, then, was barely an escape on a board.

Now we have it in our power to avoid this calamity, taking the matter in good time, and working well and hard for the right.

The election for delegates is ordered for the fifth of August. We have to organize and work together and untiringly, so that our own people and men of our faith shall govern in that convention. We solicit you to join other friends who are in sympathy with our sentiments. Show these, in confidence one with another, this invocation: Work in silence! Choose faithful men to be nominated as delegates, men on whom we can depend, and who will agree in secret to defend our church and our people always against the spirit of sacrilege and arrogance, which now is threatening us. It is well to do it at once, but with care; keep the secret of your intentions. Do not permit personal ambition or preference to cause difficulties one with another. Ever have in view the design to defend our religion and our people from the usurpations of men who have the declared intention to swindle and subject us.

What they call progress is progress to perdition. Their boastful energy is what they are relying on to take our houses and possessions from us.

But by means of a united effort now, we can secure the adoption of a constitution recognizing our most holy religion, and having safe-guards against usurpations of these adventurers.

Again we say, keep all in secret, and work with vigilance. Manage well your preliminary meetings, and see that the delegates to this convention are men who will recognize the demands of their religion, and of the Mexican caste.

A TERRIBLE PICTURE.

Rev. John Boyle, a missionary of the Southern Presbyterian church to Brazil, publishes in the St. Louis Presbyterian a terrible indictment of the Roman Catholic priests of that country. The following is a sample paragraph, the more general statements of which have been preceded by details which fully support them:

"What a glorious, happy day it will be when these chaste old bachelors (the priests) come to have full sway in the United States! when they can have their families around them and own them publicly! when their children can call them 'papa' instead of 'Father!' when they can have sons-in-law and daughters-in-law and grandchildren! when the perjured old bachelor grandpapas can have two or three families, with at least one young wife, even though she be his own niece or cousin! when they can steal the good-looking wives of their poor parishioners! when they can perform a marriage ceremony, and then buy the bride for a few days for thirty-five dollars, as was lately done by a vicar in a town in this province, a fact sworn to by a public official as a notorious fact, and published in O Piaç, of Rio de Janeiro, the newspaper of widest circulation in South America; when any chaste old priest can perform the marriage ceremony of a young brother, and then carry off the young bride and keep her as long as he wishes, which happened in S Jose de Tocantins, Goyaz, some years ago! The young brother is now a member of the provincial legislature of Goyaz, and I got well acquainted with him there last year. It will be a jolly day for Americans when rich planters or farmers call for their spiritual guides to administer the sacraments of the church to their families, and then run them out of the house and off the place with a revolver, for improper language used to the mother of the family, as lately happened to a vicar in Goyaz, who is a man of education; or when the people must gather and drive their spiritual adviser out of the town and parish, as lately happened to 'Father' Tristoo de Mendonca, vicar of the town of Santa Rita, in Goyaz, as he himself published in one of the Goyaz papers. And this vicar is a man of more than ordinary ability, and so scathing a writer that the Bishop is thoroughly afraid of his pen, as he has learned to be from experience."

"Sabbath observance is undeniably gaining ground, and is showing itself in some very practical results, both in America and abroad. It has been announced that on various railroads in this land Sunday freight trains will for the future be discontinued. This is really a great move, as it is far easier for platform advocates of Sabbath observance to talk about it, than for a complicated railroad system to put it into operation. But even at the risk of disobligng some of their connections, the roads have determined on this much-needed reform. Even in France, with its notorious 'Continental Sunday,' a movement in the same direction is noticed. At a recent meeting of the shareholders of the Paris-Lyons Railway, one of the most powerful French corporations, some very strong speaking in favor of doing away with Sunday trains took place. The manager of the railway was especially disposed to favor the reform, and said that the company would grudge no expense it might entail. Another good sign is that there is a movement to get the foreign exhibitors at the great exhibition to close their sections on Sunday, and so, as the circular that requests this co-operation puts it, 'teach our French brethren one good lesson.' It is much to be hoped that this proposal will meet with general support, as its adoption would be a sign of respect for the Lord's Day which even Parisians could not ignore. All these indications point to a growing sense of the need of the day of rest being made what its name implies.—Interior.

MORMONISM A DISLOYAL, SECRET, OATH-BOUND ORDER.

ADDRESS OF REV. D. M'ALLISTER, D.D. LL. D., BEFORE THE BOSTON CONGRESS.

Until recently Mormonism has been opposed chiefly because of its polygamy. This has been regarded as the most threatening danger of the system. We have jealously guarded the entrance to the sisterhood of States against Utah, lest, being admitted, she might make polygamy a State institution in defiance of the statutes of the National Government. Congressional legislation and judicial decisions and public discussions have, therefore, had special regard to the evil of polygamy. But within a short time another aspect of Mormonism has been demanding more serious attention. It is coming to be understood that polygamy is only incidental to the system; that with or without polygamy Mormonism is a menace to American institutions. If it were completely stripped of the abominations of plural or celestial marriages, it would still be a secret, oath-bound order, hostile to our government and subversive of the rights and liberties of our citizens. The startling exposure of the system with the last month, before the United States District Court for the third judicial district of Utah, at Salt Lake City, Judge Thomas J. Anderson presiding, has compelled public attention to it as such an order. Can we fail to mark the Providence which has poured such a flood of light on this iniquity since the arrangements for this convention were made? Let me present a brief summary of the case:

A number of alien Mormons applied to the court for citizenship, with a view to the carrying of a local election in the interest of their church. Objection was made by alert Liberals, now well organized, on the ground that the obligations which Mormons were required to take in the Endowment House, and similar obligations outside that house, unfitted them for citizenship. The court took testimony on these points. A number of gray-haired Mormons, officers and members of the church, were sworn, and it is said that the characteristic feature of all the testimony was the earnest and emphatic manner in which it was given. After a full hearing on both sides, the decision of Judge Anderson was rendered as follows: "The evidence in this case establishes unquestionably that the teachings, practices and aims of the Mormon church, are antagonistic to the government of the United States, utterly subversive of the good morals and the well-being of society, and that its members are animated by a feeling of hostility toward the government and its laws; and, therefore, an alien who is a member of said church, is not a fit person to be made a citizen of the United States."

Now, what are the grounds of this important decision? Why is it that connection with the system of Mormonism unfits a man to become a citizen of the United States? Let us try to discover the essential points in this case, and we shall see that this decision by Judge Anderson is one of the most momentous and far-reaching ever rendered in the history of our country.

1. This decision is just, because Mormonism asserts an authority and claims an obedience hostile to the sovereignty and laws of our country. The evidence, drawn from the writings and sermons of the Mormon rulers and leaders, and published under the direction of the church, proves conclusively that the priesthood claim and exercise the right to dictate to the members in all temporal or civil matters. They assert an authority which is practically the sovereign authority of civil government itself. Even if this authority asserted and obedience claimed were in harmony with the laws of the land, in reference to things lawful and right in themselves, the simple assertion and claim would be an attack upon the sovereignty of the nation. It would be a rival sovereign power in the same domain, with the possibility of collision at any time. It would be the essence of a rebellion, an imperium in imperio in respect to civil affairs. But Mormon authority is asserted and obedience required in matters which the laws of our country condemn. The two chief of these matters, though incidental, are of vast moment. Monogamy is the law of the land. Mormonism sets itself up against the nation, and proclaims polygamy lawful. The taking of human life, except in self-defense, is murder, according to the nation's laws. Mormonism makes these laws of no effect so far as possible, by its enactment of the law of "blood atonement." So with other matters like incest, which Mormonism adds to the abomination of polygamy.

An attempt was made by the counsel for the defence to break the force of this arraignment by showing that in the Mormon covenants and other church publications it is taught that the Constitution of the United States is an inspired instrument. But the evidence on this point further disclosed that the Constitution is considered by Mormons an inspired instrument because it is construed by them as prohibiting the enactment of any law against polygamy, or against any part of their religion. This, by the way, is a convincing proof of the religious defect of our National Constitution. Let our fundamental law speak out in unmistakable allegiance to Christ, the King of kings, whose law is "they twain shall be one flesh," and it will no longer from the foul disgrace of Mormon approbation. It did, indeed, appear in evidence that many individual Mormons were friendly to the government, but the proof was overwhelming that the church or system has persistently refused obedience to our laws, and asserted an antagonistic authority, while it fastened its shackles upon many who would have broken away from the despotism had they dared. A Mormon is therefore an alien. His allegiance is pledged to another power, and not to this country. Nor is he an alien at peace with us, but one in active opposition to the sovereignty of our nation.

2. Mormonism stands justly condemned before our National court because it assumes to enforce obedience to its authority by the sanctions of an oath. The oath is a divine ordinance provided for the best possible administration of righteous government among men. God himself has given it to mankind to further the aims and interests of justice. It is at once the instrument of investigation in courts of law, for the eliciting of the truth, as the witnesses shall answer before God himself; and a most solemn bond to official integrity, as the officer-elect pledges himself in the sight of God to the faithful performance of duty. Hence no one may presume to administer an oath in civil matters except those authorized to do so by law, and substantially for the purposes above specified. For private persons, or societies that are not part of the government, to assume to administer a civil oath or its equivalent, is not only to degrade the ordinance and weaken or destroy its obligation, but it is also to usurp the functions of civil government. Our wisest statesmen have uttered their emphatic testimony against extra-judicial oaths, and with warnings that the public would do well to heed. It is with such administration of oaths that Mormonism has attempted to bind the consciences of its devotees to itself in defiance of the rightful authority. It brings the awful sanctions of another life and a judgment to come to bear upon the souls of its dupes and slaves. It compels them to surrender their free will, to abjure all exercise of their reason in matters over which it claims control, and to swear obedience to commands yet secret and unknown. What is the true name for such an oath-bound association? Is it not a conspiracy against both human freedom and righteous law? A just government, seeking to protect the rights and liberties of all citizens and subjects, must lay the heavy hand of law on such an oath-bound order. No state or nation can accomplish the great ends for which the author and source of all legitimate power gave the oath if it permits citizens to be bound, by the sanctions of a blasphemous counterfeit of God's ordinance, to injustice to other citizens and to disloyalty to the state itself.

3. Judge Anderson's decision commends itself as just because Mormonism usurps the prerogative of prescribing and inflicting penalties for disobedience to its laws. Private revenge for wrongs which our laws define as crimes saps the foundations of good government. A company of men who attempt to put "Lynch law" into operation hide themselves in the consciousness of their iniquity from the light. It belongs to the accredited officers of government, and to them alone, to prescribe and to inflict punishment. No spiritual power or court may assume to wield the magistrate's sword. They may investigate and define and condemn in their own sphere, but they can have no temporal penalties to inflict. Yet here is Mormonism, assuming to be a temporal as well as a spiritual power, asserting an authority and claiming an obedience which can belong only to the state, binding its subjects to itself by the sanctions of an oath, and then, to crown all, threatening and actually inflicting penalties for disobedience to its sovereign will. And what penalties! It would be usurpation of a deep dye and crimson hue, if it were to inflict penalties which the civil law prescribes. But what savage cruelties, what infernal atrocities and mutilations of the image of God are these to which the witnesses testify! The throat to be cut from ear to ear; the heart to be cut out; the victim to be disemboweled! Eleven witnesses who had been members of the Mormon church, some of them gray-haired apostles, concurred in this testimony. The fourteen witnesses for the defense uniformly declined to answer, when on cross-examination they were asked about these penalties, and their stereotyped reply, "I decline to answer," came to have the form of the fullest and frankest confession.

Nor does the evidence stop here. Such penalties have not only been threatened. They have been inflicted. Mormons who left the church have been butchered in cold blood. How many have been murdered in the name of religion, the judgment of the great day alone will reveal. But this infliction of penalty has not been confined to so-called apostates. Others have suffered similar diabolical inflictions. It must suffice to cite the infamous Mountain Meadow massacre of the fall of 1857, when 130 men, women and children, a peaceful emigrant company on their way to California, were mercilessly butchered by command of Mormon leaders. Who will, for one moment, challenge the justice of a decision which condemns a bloodthirsty system like this? Claiming and exercising the prerogative to inflict penalties, and such penalties, in the land and upon the people where the United States government is, under God, the one rightful and responsible administrator of law, the system of Mormonism brands itself as a usurpation, and a cruel and savage despotism which the true ministers of God, given to be a terror to evil doers, should exterminate from the land.

4. The righteousness of the decision before us appears all the more clearly, because Mormonism is a great organized system, developing, intensifying and perpetuating its hostility to our government from generation to generation. It is bad enough to have a single traitor, or a small company of disloyalists to contend with. Even in such cases a great and beneficent government should act promptly and energetically. But when an order organizes, with its constitution and officers and perpetuated being like that of the state itself, so that the death of members, and even of leaders, leaves the system intact, or with the enmity fanned to a fiercer flame, we have a much graver danger to face. Let me quote just here quite fully from the decision of the court.

"The Mormon church teaches: First, That it is the actual and veritable kingdom of God on earth, not in its fullness, because Christ has not yet come to rule in person, but for the present he rules through the priesthood of the church, who are his vicegerents on earth.

"Second, That this kingdom is both a temporal and spiritual kingdom, and should rightfully control, and is entitled to the highest allegiance of men in all their affairs.

"Third, That this kingdom will overthrow the United States and all other governments, after which Christ will reign in person.

"Fourth, That the doctrine of 'blood atonement' is of God, and that under it certain sins which the blood of Christ cannot atone for, may be remitted by shedding the blood of the transgressor.

"Fifth, That polygamy is a command of God, which, if a member obeys, he will be exalted in the future life above those who do not.

"Sixth, That the Congress of the United States has no right, under the Constitution, to pass any law interfering with the practices of the Mormon religion, and that the acts of Congress against polygamy, and disfranchising those who practice it, are unwarrantable interferences with their religion."

This is the organized system which is perpetuating itself in the national domain, and under the aegis of the nation's laws. Well may it be asked in the weighty words of the judge, "Can men be made true and loyal citizens by such teachings, or are they likely to remain so when surrounded by such influences? It would be as unreasonable to expect such a result as it would be to expect to gather grapes from thorns, or figs from thistles." It is high time to tear up such a system by the roots, and to cast it all, roots, stock and branches, out to the burning, instead of permitting it to develop and perpetuate itself for the nation's destruction.

5. It remains to consider one further ground of the righteous decision in view, and that is, because Mormonism conducts its oath-bound conspiracy under the veil of secrecy. If every enemy of good government were known, he could be watched in time of danger. Even if many enemies are bound by oath to aims and purposes hostile to our nation, the openness of the enemy would rob it of half its terrors. But when there is a secret conspiracy, how shall we defend ourselves? When we may be suspicious, but do not certainly know whence the blow may come, how much graver and more alarming becomes our peril? And let it not be forgotten that the horrible oaths already referred to bind to secrecy. Had it not been providentially ordered that witnesses who had been Mormons were ready to testify, how impotent would have been the District Court of Utah with all the resources of our National Government behind it? With its hidden works of darkness, Mormonism belongs to the secret empire of Satan, the prince of moral and spiritual night. It comes under the condemnation of the Sun of Righteousness, whose command is to walk in the light as children of the day. The secrets of the Endowment House, with its graded apartments and symbolical garments and washings and anointings, like all other ceremonies of lodges of the domain of secrecy, are practices that will not bear the inspection of good government, or the application of righteous laws. When Mormon secrecy tries to cover from the eyes of justice anything that pertains to civil affairs, or that affects the rights and liberties of men, as secret orders from their very nature are led to do, and as Mormonism has ever done, and most manifestly in the case before us, let all loyal citizens unite in proclaiming the righteousness of Judge Anderson's decision that "an alien who is a member of said church is not a fit person to be made a citizen of the United States."

And now it must be asked, what are the logical sequences of this judicial rendering? How far does it reach? What is involved in the application, without fear or favor, of the principles here laid down? I repeat the affirmation, that this decision is one of the most momentous ever given from the bench. It lays hold of the fundamental principles that underlie some of the most profound interests and most vexed questions of our social life. Providence moves forward slowly, but surely, and in this decision can be clearly discerned the first step in a course that leads us inevitably to more tremendous conclusions than perhaps the judge himself perceived. The court did not base its decision on the grounds enumerated, but it is believed that these are all necessarily involved, and that they lie at the logical basis of the judgment rendered. And from this logical basis we pass to the equally logical deductions.

[Concluded in next number.]

He who puts himself, by secret alliances, beyond the observation of the church, and where he is not at liberty to tell what transpires in the "doings and business" of the lodge in which he shares, and for which he is responsible, puts himself beyond church watch-care and legitimate church judgment as to his secret life of fellowship with unholy men, and hence has no reasonable right to ask or claim membership in the church of Christ. Only those who "come out from among them" are legitimate candidates for church membership.—Wesleyan Methodist.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

A standard-bearer fallen—Some New Year thoughts—New Hampshire's brave governor—An incident in the life of an early reformer of New England—A deserved honor to a young Boston colored woman—The doings of the secret empire.

The year that has closed has made many gaps in the N. C. A. Last Sunday Rev. David McFall received the summons to "go up higher," and thus New England loses one of her leading standard-bearers in the anti-secret reform. One must look back to the Boston mob and compare the courteous treatment which our late congress of churches received with the howling pandemonium which greeted that early gathering, and consider farther, that then Dr. McFall stood alone among the ministry of Boston in public opposition to the lodge, before they can appreciate the change that those few years have worked. But our Boston meeting gave promise that as death depletes our ranks, they will be filled up by worthy successors. God grant it.

Even the most unthinking must, it would seem, feel thoughtful for a moment as they write 1890 for the first time, and realize that we are on the last decade of this century. How many of us will write 1900, and see its opening? Will it be ushered in with the red storm-clouds of war and civil commotion that foretell the coming of the Son of Man? Sphinx-like, with veiled face, the Future propounds her enigmas that she alone can answer.

Solemn and interesting services were held at the watch-meetings in Boston, and at the First African Methodist Episcopal church the congregation was so great that an hour before the close of service it was necessary to lock the doors. Another very large meeting was held at Tremont Temple, and it was an impressive sight to see the whole company kneel as the mid-night hour struck. Only the highest can know how many solemn vows and resolutions were made in those kneeling congregations; but though some will be broken, some will be kept, and the custom of watching the Old Year out and the New Year in is a beautiful one, and if it was more common in all our churches, it would be none the worse for our religious life.

While the prevailing epidemic, la grippe, which numbers 40,000 victims in Boston alone, has its humorous side, there are some things in connection with this prevailing disorder to make one thoughtful. If there is, as good authorities assert, a subtle connection between epidemics of influenza and epidemics of cholera, it may be only the prelude to a worse visitation with which our guilty land is to be scourged. Still, there are some cheering indications of a return to national righteousness. The late proclamation of Governor Goodell, of New Hampshire, against the liquor traffic stands alone, a unique and extraordinary document. He "warns all persons engaged in this illegal and deadly traffic to desist therefrom immediately, and calls upon all the officers of the law throughout the State, and all good citizens of every party, sect and faith," to unite in one supreme effort for the suppression of the saloon within the State borders. All honor to this true and sterling patriot. Such a proclamation marks an era, and sets forward the sign on the dial-plate of temperance never to go backward. The New Hampshire Supreme Court has also decided that "the nuisance act," passed in 1889, which declared that any building used for the illegal sale of liquor, came under this head, is constitutional. The liquor sellers of the Granite State, between this decision and a prohibition governor who evidently means business, are driven to the wall, and may as well have saved the money which they spent fighting the constitutional amendment, and emigrated to another State.

"I believe New England people have a lease on life," said a lady from the West to me the other day; and certainly the numerous notices of men and women of New England birth, still living hale and hearty at the age of one hundred and over, would seem to imply that in spite of all the abuse heaped upon our climate, it is a favorable one for longevity. Very few of the early Abolitionists and temperance advocates who did such noble work for God and man when this century was in its youth, are now living. A life spent in the heat of fierce moral conflicts is too wearing to soul and body to expect that scarcely any of these old war horses will survive to see the opening of another hundred years. At the same time, their labors and their experience reach to the limits of two or three ordinary lives. The venerable Theodore D. Weld, of Hyde Park, is an instance. He assisted as early as 1826 in forming the first temperance society in Oneida county. At that time the "iron-clad" pledge was unknown. It only prohibited strong spirits, such as whisky, rum and brandy. While Mr. Weld was lecturing on temperance and getting signers to the pledge, a confirmed drunkard with a large family, whom drink had reduced to poverty, confronted him, and for awhile stood out against all pleading and argument. Finally he said, "You offer a constitution to me against strong drink, and you take wine and cider. I can't purchase expensive drinks, but I can go to the still and buy a quart of whisky for five cents. Whisky is my wine." Mr. Weld, who knew him to be a man of iron will, and believed that if he once signed the pledge he would keep it, immediately replied that he would exclude all alcoholic drinks from the pledge and sign it himself. But this did not satisfy the man, who called again on the following day and renewed the conversation, saying: "Mr. Weld, you drink tea and coffee; whisky is my tea and coffee. I want to put you on my level; will you give up your tea and coffee?" "I will never drink either," was the reply, "if you will sign the full pledge." The man immediately affixed his name, kept his pledge, regained his character and property, and restored happiness in his home. This incident occurred in 1826, and Mr. Weld has never tasted tea or coffee since. A commentary on the words of Paul, "I will eat no meat while the world standeth, lest I make my brother to offend," that is better than a thousand sermons.

The Massachusetts State Grange closed its annual meeting last week at Northampton without doing very much to advance the cause of the farmers, but a good deal to set it back. It was quite in keeping that an association officered and controlled by the Masonic lodge should vote to send delegates to Boston to try to secure a repeal of the present cider law. And it was certainly consistent with lodge selfishness that it should oppose with all its might and main the plan for national irrigation of waste Western land, on the ground that "the farmers have cheap land enough now to compete against." The Henry George doctrine, which would restore to the laborer his original birth-right in the land, and make it cheaper, instead of dearer, has more common sense in it and more Christianity. But this is simply a specimen of what will always be the character of lodge action. Never the good of the many, but always the advantage of the few.

REFORM NEWS.

BRO. HINMAN IN CENTRAL KENTUCKY.

BEREA, Ky., Jan. 1, 1890.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—"A Happy New Year!" Here in Central Kentucky japonicas, peach trees, and violets are in bloom, and the air is as balmy as May. Is this a late fall or an early spring? Hardly the latter. I reached here on the 27th ult, having on my way visited Dr. Carson of Xenia, Dr. L. Davis, Bishop Milton Wright, and Rev. William Dillon of Dayton, and found them, especially the Dayton brethren, "strong in the Lord." Kentucky railroads are models of inconvenience, so that, although I left Cincinnati on Thursday afternoon, I did not reach here till Friday night. I found Bro. Fee in more than usual health, and was surprised at the clearness and vigor with which he preached on Sabbath evening. Bro. J. F. Browne, known to nearly all readers of the Cynosure, closed his winter school on Friday night with an exhibition that was very creditable to the young people. He leaves to do pastoral work in Ohio, and his address will be Yellow Springs, O.

I found the College in about its usual prosperity, but still looking for a president. A good many students are away during the brief vacation, but I was pleased to see last night the chapel well filled to listen to some readings by a lady elocutionist. By request I preached Sabbath morning, and had expected to start on Monday, 30th, for Atlanta, Ga., but as the apostles, after preaching in Phrygia and Galatia, were "forbidden of the Holy Spirit to go into Asia," so I found my journey suddenly arrested, and am constrained to believe that the Lord would have me remain here and labor for the pure Gospel of Christ. Indeed, the Macedonian cry comes from several feeble churches, both in the mountains and on the plains, asking for help in their conflict with iniquity. All of these churches have a positive testimony against the lodge system, and mean to maintain it. The question arises whether our reform has not more to hope for from the establishment and growth of such churches than from desultory and sporadic efforts.

Meanwhile the work in Ohio, where I have given six months of work, will not be neglected, and I trust a younger and abler man will be found to take the field. I desire to express my gratitude to the many friends that I have met in that State, and especially to those who have contributed to my support. I hope to aid somewhat in the support of a lecturer. A few friends are indebted to me for prepayment of the Cynosure. As my income has been inadequate to the support of my family, they will not, I trust, neglect to remit to me here or to my family at Oberlin, Ohio. Yours for righteousness,

H. H. HINMAN.

SCHOOLS AND MINES OF NORTHERN ALABAMA.

TALLADEGA, Ala., Jan. 2, 1890.

Leaving Little Rock on the 9th of December, I went to Pine Bluff, Ark., and visited the branch Normal School, which is supported by the State. This is a branch of the State University, established by law for training colored teachers for the schools of the colored population in the State. The president is J. C. Corbin, A. M., a graduate, I think, of Fisk, and a thorough instructor and manager. The school seemed to be moving on in fine order, the advanced pupils learning to teach by teaching. There are, according to the catalogue, 175 students. I arranged to send this school the $5 anti-secrecy library and some temperance tracts.

While I was at Pine Bluff I experienced an attack of malarial weakness, which led me to leave the low lands of Arkansas, and pass at once to the hills of northern Alabama. Passing through Birmingham, I arrived in Talladega on the 12th of December, and called on President Henry S. DeForest, who introduced me to others of the faculty. Prof. and Mrs. G. W. Andrews, with true Christian hospitality, gave me for a season a home in their household, and my health in consequence is greatly improved, while I have continued my labors. On the shelves of the library I found the Carpenter donation of anti-secrecy books in good condition.

On Sabbath morning, the 15th, I preached before the faculty and students in the College chapel, and introduced the reforms of the N. C. A., which appeared to be well received. On Wednesday I went to Jenifer at the invitation of the Rev. I. Barbour Grant, pastor of the Congregational church, where I spoke to a crowded house on the work of the N. C. A. Mr. Grant is a graduate of the Talladega Theological Department, which is in charge of Dr. Andrews. Miss Smith and her sister are at work here teaching an industrial school, and carrying on a volunteer mission "without money and without price," which they came from Northern homes to do. The next day Mr. Grant took me over the hills eight or nine miles to Ironton, and I preached a reform discourse to his other charge there. A few white people were present.

On the Sabbath following, I spoke twice to the African Congregational church at Anniston, of which Rev. H. W. Conley, another graduate of Talladega, is pastor. Here, in the basement of the church, is the Beard Industrial Training School, established by the A. M. A. The principal is Miss Mary McLean, assisted by Miss Isabel Kimball. Returning to Talladega, I preached on Monday evening in the Mount Canaan Baptist church, Rev. Mr. Rivers, pastor, who is also a graduate of the Theological Department here. We had a large and attentive audience. On Wednesday evening I had another appointment in the Peace Baptist church of Talladega. The pastor, Rev. J. P. Barton, is also a graduate of the Theological Department of the college here. We had a pleasant time, although it was Christmas night, and there was a good deal of merry-making in the city.

On Saturday I paid a visit to Shelby, and was kindly entertained. By invitation of the pastor, Rev. I. R. Sims, another Talladega student, I preached on the Sabbath in the morning and evening, to the African Congregational church, and introduced the reform work of the N. C. A., and there was a large attendance. There is a white church here called the "Evangelical Union Church" of Shelby, with a fine meeting-house and a comfortable parsonage. The pastor, Rev. J. S. Upton, was, I believe, formerly a student of Oberlin, Ohio. But the way did not seem to be open for any effort there. This place is usually spoken of as Shelby iron works, on account of the furnaces and iron mines there.

There is very little cotton raised in northern Alabama, and indeed but little farming of any kind. The great industry is mining and manufacturing iron. The coal measures are large and numerous, and iron ore is found near the surface in almost all of the hills in the northern part of the State. Southerners, Eastern men, Pennsylvanians and Englishmen are running the iron works in different places. The manager at Shelby iron works is from Vermont. Here in Talladega, the furnace is run by an Englishman, who is said to have made $20,000 on their output of iron by waiting a few days for the bid of an English steel company from the old country. Now, around every furnace there gathers a busy crowd of laborers. The larger proportion of wage workers are Freedmen. They receive, they tell me, $1 to $1.50 a day for common labor; for mechanical work they receive more. In this manner a large population is sustained, and trained up in habits of industry and Christian civilization, living in comfortable cottages, and having schools and churches.

To prepare and furnish teachers for the schools and pastors for the churches is the great and noble work of Talladega College, and nobly has this work been done, as my experience among the churches above reported proves. According to the last catalogue, there are 427 students enrolled, about equally divided between the sexes; and including the Primary, Intermediate, Grammar and Normal courses, besides the Preparatory and Theological departments. There are four fine college halls in use by the various literary classes. Graves' hall is set apart to the Theological work, in charge of Rev. George W. Andrews, D. D., who is also pastor of the large College church. Then there are seven or eight Sabbath-schools in the vicinity taught mainly by the students, under the care of Prof. Reed, as Sunday-school missionary. In all this faithful Christian work of Talladega College, the seed has been sown which will bring forth, I am persuaded, large harvests in coming ages. I expect to-morrow (D. V.), to visit Selma. I remain, as ever, yours in the Gospel of Christ,

S. F. PORTER.

—The aggregate amount of the year's British contributions for foreign missions is estimated to be £1,334,491. This is £105,000 more than the previous year's total.

MEMPHIS LETTER.

THE GOOD WORK CONTINUES—ONE MORE CHURCH FALLS OUT WITH SECRET SOCIETIES—TAKING THE PLEDGE—OUR SCHOOL WORK.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Dec. 30, 1889.

I returned home from Boston one week ago to-day, and have been confined to my room and bed for three days since my return; yet I can praise the Lord, for the good work of reform continues, and the members of my church whom I had began to think were growing dormant, have, by some means, been thoroughly aroused during my absence, and have gone to work with the zeal that characterized them shortly after our heated campaign of 1885, and they are loud in their condemnation of the lodge and its anti-Christian influences.

Their mode of operation may be interesting to many of our readers. Last September I organized a band of Christian workers composed of the young people of the church. We have nearly a hundred. These young people organized four Sabbath-schools in different parts of our city, and gathered children from the streets. Many of these little ones were found to be orphans, who lived on the charity of some of their poverty-stricken kin. Thinly clad, bare-footed little ones were brought in, clothes and shoes were begged and put upon them; and after they were thus cared for, others in better circumstances sent their children, and finally some of their parents came, and one of the teachers said to me: "I thought it an excellent opportunity for me to give away some of the facts I had learned from you concerning the anti-Christian influences of secret societies, and I began to talk the same more and more each Sunday, and the news went out; others came in and heard, and many have come out of the lodge."

Yesterday (Sabbath) all of these mission schools attended the quarterly review at our church, and there were ten or twelve of the little ones without shoes. I gave one of the boys who came to my room this morning a coat and a pair of shoes; the little fellow, about nine years of age, started to thank me, but broke down to tears. Before he had gone, a brother from the St. John's Baptist church came to see, and greeted me, saying:

"WE ARE ON YOUR SIDE!"

I finally learned that the St. John's church had resolved to leave the world, and in order to do so had, at their last business meeting, resolved to care for their own sick, and bury their own dead. The most significant thing about this action on the part of the St. John's church, is that the man who made the motion that the church should do this work, is a man who has been for years at the head of a number of prominent secret societies, and no one knows when he severed his connection from them, or had any idea of so doing. The church people, or at least some of them, are very jubilant over the action of this brother.

This church has recently called as pastor, Elder McMichael, of Sommerville, Tenn., who left the lodge when they shot me, and has been outspoken ever since. This church opened its doors when Bro. Brinkley and I were in the heat of the fray, and called in the society folks to join them, and they went. The brother now urging the church to the work being done by societies, was one who left Elder Brinkley's church at that time. For one year they have been without a pastor, and the church has been almost demoralized. Under Elder McMichael and the separation of secret society persons from among its membership, they are hoping to rise again. We are praying for them.

TAKING THE PLEDGE.

"Christmas comes but once a year," and many turn it into a general day of debauch. I have taken pride in saying in my talks at various places that in our church, numbering 325, only four men used tobacco, and none of them were addicted to the use of intoxicants. I was in the prayer meeting at five A. M. last Wednesday morning. Our house was packed. Seven or eight hundred persons were present, and at the conclusion of a most excellent conference and testimony meeting, I asked the entire congregation if they were willing to take the pledge as a body, and to my astonishment they all arose and took the pledge. I believe that the bulk of those taking the pledge were sincere.

OUR SCHOOL.

The first term closed Dec. 24. We had 254 pupils in attendance. Our nurse-training class is a very important part of our school work. Instruction in the Bible is given twice a day; and as you are aware, the school stands on the broad and grand rock of faith in the Lord Jesus. We are the only school of the kind in this South-land that stands opposed to secret societies, rum and tobacco. More and more is the influence of the alcohol being felt. The good work being done is changing many of its foes to friends. We have now a cooking department, and a little carpentry is added to the manual training. Our expenses are $463 per month; of this amount we have been raising among ourselves about $275 per month on an average in one year. We have raised among ourselves $3,005. We are very much troubled about our finances just now, owing to the shortness of crops. Our efforts in collecting do not pay very well, because the platform on which we are built does not tickle the popular purse. Whenever we tell of our opposition to secret societies, cold water seems to fall on all of our efforts. We are doing all we can among ourselves, and are determined to fight on this line,

God helping us. I have received from the readers of the Cynosure, since my last letter to you, $12, for which I desire to return them my thanks, and the thanks of our entire board. We would be very grateful for old books for our library, books of reference, old papers for free distribution, and barrels of old clothing for boys and girls. We can appeal to none only those who are with us in this work of reform. Yours in the faith,

R. N. COUNTEE.

THE SILENT LECTURER IN THE SOUTH.

SELMA, Ala., Dec. 27, 1889.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The work of reform goes slowly, but steadily on. The Cynosure is silently doing its work. A few days ago a preacher who was at the time in an argument with another preacher, hailed me as I was passing, and asked my opinion on a point pertaining to the lodge. I assured him that a true Christian, when once enlightened with regard to the true character of the lodge, could not remain in it; for Christianity and the lodge are incompatible.

The brother with whom the preacher was arguing confessed that he had not carefully studied the question. Like many others, he had gone into the lodge blind, intellectually so, as well as literally "hoodwinked." He said he would study the subject. He said he was open to conviction on any point if it were proved from the Word of God that he was in error. I promised to send him the Cynosure. His friend is a reader of the Cynosure, and his testimony is that no sincere Christian can be a student of the principles taught in that paper, and still cling to the lodge. He must either quit the lodge or the church.

Thus, this good paper is doing its good work in the South. There is much need of giving it a wide circulation in this section. It should go into every home. It should be in every reading-room and in every minister's study. It does its own work wherever it goes. It is a silent lecturer in this South-land. I desire to see the fund for sending it to colored preachers constantly increasing. I am sure that many remain in fellowship with the lodge because they do not know its true spirit and character. May God enlarge the circulation of the Cynosure in the South!

G. M. ELLIOTT.

KEEP AN EYE ON BRAZIL.

YORK, Pa., Dec. 26, 1889.

EDITORS CYNOSURE:—It will be interesting to the readers of the Cynosure to watch the movements now being made in Brazil. South America is well supplied with Jesuits and Romish machinery; and there will certainly be much trouble in Brazil. Dom Pedro was a good and great man, from all accounts; but he was a Roman Catholic monarchist, and perhaps controlled by the Jesuits.

The Republicans of Brazil are perhaps Freemasons and members of other Jesuitic cat-paw orders; but probably none of them understand Jesuitism well enough to keep from being "outwitted and discomfited."

The crafty Jesuits will be likely to bring European influences to bear upon the Brazilian Republicans; and we may have to get our old Monroe doctrine down and brushed off, for use, or else take a new departure and let the Jesuits of Europe aid those in South America.

Stirring times are coming, if we can read all the signs correctly; and we should all do our best at once.

EDWARD J. CHALFANT.

PITH AND POINT.

SURE MARKS OF A RELIGION.

Do you not find that ministers fail to recognize the lodge as the temple of a false religion? Few of them I apprehend feel like saying what I did yesterday, in a sermon which did not contain the word Masonry, but under which my deacon said he would have "writhed" if he had ever "committed himself." I pressed the point that whatever had a temple, altar, priesthood, creed and ritual, was a religion. In so far as the temple was frequented by none but devotees of that religion, the priesthood officiating for these alone at an altar accessible to no others, the ritual used by none but admitted members, it was a separate and distinct religion. If it was not a religion that taught its adherents that God was manifest in the flesh, that Jesus Christ bore our sins in his own body on the tree, in short, the essentials that constitute the Christian system, it was not the Christian religion. If not the Christian religion, it was a false religion, with which a Christian man could have nothing to do.—NEW ENGLAND PASTOR.

WASHINGTON PRAYER.

My grandfather Lawrence was on Washington's body-guard. He said that Washington could be seen nearly every morning, before sun-up, on his knees with his big white hat standing by his side, with his Bible open before his eyes, repeating the 91st Psalm; and if he was so situated that he could not repeat that chapter on his knees before sun-up, that he would not go into battle on that day; that he would suffer a retreat first. I heard my father relate the above many a time; and about the last word I heard him say, when my brother and I started for the wilds of the West in 1855, was, "Repeat the 91st Psalm often." It is a fact that this chapter contains more promises for the godly and their safety, and all those that fully trust in God's Word, than any other chapter in the whole Bible. It is all "yea and amen," to the true believer. Even the devil quoted from the 11th and 12th verses of this chapter to Christ, when he had him "on a pinnacle of the temple." Of course he was liberal enough to leave out the best, "to keep thee in all thy ways." See Matt. 4: 6.—D. K. LAWRENCE.

LITERATURE.

OUR PRESENT DUTY is the title of the sermon preached at the opening of the last Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian church, by Rev. J. W. Sproull, D. D., of Allegheny, Pa. By the request of the Synod the discourse has been published in pamphlet form. It is a powerful appeal in behalf of an awakened zeal in the church, especially for the home missionary cause.

In the January Century, the next to the last installment of "The Life of Lincoln" appears. This installment contains a graphic account of Lincoln's last day and his assassination, also a chapter on the fate of the assassins and a description of the mourning pageant. There is a portrait of Andrew Johnson, a diagram of the box in Ford's Theater, a fac-simile of a play-bill found in the President's box, a picture of the funeral car and of the monument at Springfield. Supplementary papers by other hands are printed on the pursuit and death of John Wilkes Booth. The latter papers are by two Confederate officers who met Booth and Herold in their flight, and by a Union officer who commanded the cavalry that captured the fugitives. The frontispiece of this number is a portrait of Prof. James Bryce, the English author of "The American Commonwealth." Accompanying the portrait is a sketch of Professor Bryce's life. A notable paper is Miss Amelia B. Edwards's account of the recent very extraordinary discoveries at Bubastis, in Egypt. One stone of these ruins is almost sixty-one centuries old, and Bubastis is as ancient as the earth used to be considered. All the monuments reproduced in this article are now for the first time published. The second of the "Present-Day Papers" is by Rev. Dr. Dike, and has to do with "Problems of the Family." Incidentally some startling statistics with regard to divorce in the United States are presented. Professor Fisher publishes a paper on "The Gradualness of Revelation." A curious and valuable paper is that by Prof. Edward S. Holden, of the Lick Observatory, telling of a recent discovery of his concerning "The Real Shape of the Spiral Nebulae."

The January St. Nicholas frontispiece is a beautiful engraving showing a lovely child whose bright face shows her to be "Ready for a New Year." A story of New-Mexican life, by Charles F. Lummis, gives the legend of the now inaccessible "Enchanted Mesa," upon which, tradition says, there is a deserted village just as it was left hundreds of years ago. A photograph of the Mesa from nature is one of the illustrations. A short biographical sketch of Helen Thayer Hutcheson and four of her poems—two of which are worthy of any pen—will be gladly read by those who have been eager to learn more of this young genius. Another paper on "The Routine of the Republic," by Edmond Alton, describes the method of foreign intercourse. Pilot-boat "Torching" is described by J. O. Davidson and handsomely illustrated. The celebrated ostrich farm near Los Angeles, Cal., is given several entertaining pages. There are a large variety of stories, etc., some of which are not only not useful, but hardly even ornamental.

One of the most important reports of the Government this year is that of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs which is ready for circulation from the Interior Department. Besides giving a full exhibition of the Indian schools and attachments of farms and hospitals, Commissioner Morgan, in a supplemental report, gives a systematic plan for the enlargement and improvement of these Indian schools, whereby he proposes to take the charge of them out of politics and provide teachers who shall know and heed their business.

The International Committee of Young Men's Christian Associations, 40 East Twenty-third Street, New York City, has issued its annual "Topics for Young Men's Meetings and Bible Classes," for 1890. The collection contains 175 topics for Young Men's meetings, 58 for Boys' meetings, and 52 for Bible Classes. It may be had on application to the committee for 5 cents per copy.

OBITUARY.

REV. W. J. WHITE died at his home in Worcester, Mass., during the last of October, 1889.

He was born in the year 1810 of pious parents, whose earnest wish that some of their sons might enter the ministry was answered by this one only. He was converted at Middlebury, Vt., under the preaching of Dr. Merrill, and studied for his work at that place, at Phillips Academy, Brown University, Williams College and Andover Seminary. He was afterward in 1842 engaged in preaching in Huntingdon, Canada, and in Illinois and Michigan, and in the latter State succumbed to the malarial influences of the malarial climate, and a severe attack of fever disabled him from missionary effort. He returned to his father's house in Massachusetts and remained there in feeble health for about a year.

In the autumn of 1845 he went to Whiting in the eastern part of Maine and supplied the pulpit of the church during the winter. He had already taken his stand as an Abolitionist (a name as opprobrious in the opinion of some good people as infidel) and found it difficult to maintain his views on slavery and live harmoniously. So in the spring of 1847 he went to Fairfax in northern Vermont, and remained nearly two years supplying the pulpits of the churches in Fairfax and the adjoining town of Fletcher on alternate Sundays. At the end of that time his health failed again, and in order to regain it he engaged in secular business in Worcester, Mass. This was in 1849. His health improved. In 1850 he married Harriet R. Ames of West Boylston, who survives him. He continued in business nearly fifteen years, having in that time by economy and industry acquired a few thousand dollars and maintained a reputation for strict honesty. The remainder of his life was spent in retirement at his home in Worcester. During a part of this time he taught a Bible class every Sabbath at the county jail in Worcester. In all he was a teacher at the jail for over twenty years and a Sabbath school teacher at the church to which he belonged over twenty-five years. His convictions as a Christian reformer led him naturally into the ranks of those who testify against the lodge, and he maintained this reform to the end of life.

ALBERT CARLTON died Nov. 11, 1889, at the home of his son, Gordon Carlton, at Hillsdale, Mich., aged about 83 years.

He was a man of noble character; generous, hospitable, a true and sympathetic friend, of sterling honesty, and for over sixty years an earnest and devoted Christian. No man placed a higher estimate upon human virtues or practiced them more sedulously than this sainted man. He was therefore much opposed to the secret orders and their operations, and sustained the reform which sets the church against them. A local paper says of his excellent character: "Of unselfish instincts, and with all his aspirations and purposes founded on just principle, it was impossible for him to wrong his fellow, or do an act of injustice to any man. And thus he marched on through his long life, distributing kindly words and deeds to those in need of encouragement and help, and facing clouds and storms without murmur or complaint." He had resided for over thirty-five years in Kalamazoo county, Mich. Rev. J. W. Warner of Ligonier, Ind., preached the funeral sermon by the special request of the deceased.

ANDREW DORCAS, of Scranton, Iowa, died Nov. 6, 1889.

Bro. Dorcas was a quiet farmer, but a man of deep and earnest convictions. He was strongly opposed to the lodge, and maintained his principles to the last. He has at different times given freely to aid the reform work, and with his brother John has resisted the liberalizing faction in the United Brethren church, of which he was a member.

A GREAT SUCCESS.

The Equitable Homestead Corporation, an association incorporated under the laws of California, has now ONE THOUSAND ACRES of the finest raisin land in Fresno county in process of cultivation.

SO MANY INQUIRIES

have been made about the organization of this colony, and the profits of raisin culture, and such a desire manifested to have the Equitable enlarged so as to admit more members, that I have decided to organize another colony association on the same plan.

NOTE THIS:

I have 2,000 ACRES of land which I will dispose of in the following manner: It is divided into five-acre lots and multiples of five. It will all be planted in raisin grapes and other fruits and cultivated at actual cost, the purchaser paying in cash just what it takes to plant and cultivate it, which he may do in small installments during three years' time, which brings of good habits, however poor he may be. No better opportunity ever was offered to get a valuable piece of property on such easy terms. Write to me. I court investigation and will abundantly prove all I say.

FIFTY YEARS and BEYOND;

OR,

Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help to those who are to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the old man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

THE N. C. A. FUNDS.

The General Fund is that from which the running expenses of the Association are paid. From it the agents on the field are supported.

The Foreign Fund is that from which the foreign demand for literature against the lodge is supplied to missionaries.

The Free Tract Fund clearly states by its name the object for which contributions are solicited. Millions of pages have been distributed by means of this fund.

The Cynosure Ministers' Fund. The donations to this fund have enabled the Association to send many copies of the Cynosure to the ministers of the South, especially to pastors of colored churches. The result has been a blessing to them and their churches.

Contributions to any or all these funds are urgently solicited.

FORM OF BEQUEST.—I give and bequeath to the National Christian Association, incorporated and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, the sum of — dollars for the purposes of said Association, and for which the receipt of its Treasurer for the time being shall be sufficient discharge.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JANUARY 9, 1890.

THE CLAN-NA-GAEL DIES HARD.

The attempted revival of the Clan-na-Gael a few weeks ago in Philadelphia, was regarded by intelligent Irishmen as little better than a farce. The Philadelphia meeting attempted to draw the line on the "triangles" and their abettors in the Cronin murder. They even refused admission to Edward Spellman of Peoria, their former chief, and the head of the whisky trust. The order numbers 23,000 in its most prosperous days. The reformers could get the endorsement of but 10,000. Alexander Sullivan in Chicago and Pat. Egan, President Harrison's representative (not of America) in Chili, made this city and Nebraska the centers of the "triangle" influence and kept some 5,000 followers. The Philadelphia meeting was regarded by the most intelligent and really patriotic Irishmen, as an unwise attempt to galvanize a corpse. Mr. Sullivan, one of the editors of the Chicago Tribune, said that Irishmen have no more use for secret societies in promoting the freedom of their native land; and the Clan-na-Gael is dead. No man who respects himself as an American would have anything more to do with it. Mr. Hynes, the able Irish lawyer who assisted in the Cronin trial, is reported as saying: "The murder of Dr. Cronin has, in my opinion, given the Clan-na-Gael its death-blow in this country. It is a good thing it has, for the society has been a great hindrance to Parnell in his work, and he will no doubt be glad to hear of its dissolution." As one of the founders of the Clan-na-Gael, who knows the society, and is a careful observer of public sentiment, his opinion has great weight with the better class of his countrymen.

"Pat Grant," the brilliant Irish journalist, whose reviews of the Cronin case gave him a national reputation and a place on the Inter-Ocean staff, wrote thus in that paper Jan. 1st:

"However I may be blamed, I deem it my duty to state that I have not the slightest confidence in secret societies to effect the redemption of Ireland, and unless they are run by noble souls, and by great and magnanimous minds, I regard them as a curse to the people in whose interests they are founded, as recent experiences in this city abundantly prove. I know of no such men directing Irish secret societies to-day, and hence I denounce secret societies and all their belongings, and I agree with the sentiments which Mr. Hynes is reported as uttering at Philadelphia, that the murder of Dr. Cronin has given the death knell to the Clan-na-Gael organization in this country. I do not say that the Clan-na-Gael is guilty, as a society, of the murder of Dr. Cronin; in fact, I know it is not, and on the contrary I appreciate many of its old members for the heroic part which they have taken in rescuing Ireland and Irishmen from the stain of this foul crime. But I do say that in the eyes of the American people the I. N. B. and the U. B. and Clan-na-Gael society mean one and the same thing, and they, in the hurry of their avocations, are not going to make any nice distinctions between one organization and the other in order to please the fastidious notions of political Irishmen. I also know that no one at the present time is sufficiently powerful to control the national ear, and no secret society in France or Italy, or elsewhere, was ever yet successful or even respectable, that had not a man of genius behind it. There is no such man to plead with the people for secret societies here, and all such men are dead against them, both here and in Ireland. These secret societies have carried on a hide-and-go-seek policy in this country long enough, and neither the Irish people in Ireland who follow Mr. Parnell, nor the Americans here are in such a temper as to stand much more of their vagaries."

But every lodge seems to have a snake's life. Its head may be smashed, but its tail wriggles. The papers tell us that the notorious Camp 20, of which Beggs was "Senior Guardian," got a sum of money that was raised for a widow of Detroit, whose husband was a Clan-na-Gael sacrifice, having gone on a "secret mission" to England, and was never heard from. The same notorious Camp 20 is now raising its head with a hiss and demanding its records which were taken by legal process, and are in the hands of the court. A weak and spiritless judge may give them up. It is said, too, that the followers of Alexander Sullivan are again at work in the city politics of Chicago with the boycott and the black list. Had the death sentence fallen upon the Cronin murderers they would hardly dare to be so bold. But their very audacity may yet destroy them by uncovering the whole Cronin secret and sending the chief conspirator to a merited doom.

—The January Christian Witness, of New Market, N. H., prints a fine portrait of the evangelist, E. P. Telford, who is laboring successfully in New England.

THE MASONIC RECORD OF MORMONISM.

Since the decision of Judge Anderson in the United States court of Salt Lake City, refusing citizenship to alien Mormons, the leaders of that apostate church have been in grave distress. An official declaration has been published in their papers, setting forth the injustice of their treatment by the court and by the press of the country. It is prepared and signed by all the Mormon hierarchy, from the first president, Wilford Woodruff, to the counselors John Young and Daniel Wells. They denounce as untrue the allegations of murder; claim to abhor bloodshed; declare that opinion is free and political rights untrammelled in Utah by Mormonism; and that there is nothing in the Endowment ceremony or in any doctrine or obligation of the sect which is hostile, or intended to be hostile, to the U. S. government. On the contrary Mormons are "under Divine commandment to revere the Constitution as a heaven-inspired instrument." This official declaration is ostensibly addressed to the world at large. It is probably intended only for the Mormon readers. For only those stupefied by the falsehoods of what they hold to be religion would presume that the few bare assertions of this document would weigh against the deliberate judgment of a court established upon abundant testimony. The declaration is followed by a call for a day of fasting and prayer, which is issued in terms of great humility, quite in contrast with the bravado and lofty imprecation universally heard a few years ago. Another election transpires in February, and the Mormons fear it is already lost to them unless they can persuade many already backslidden to vote once more for the hierarchy.

But in connection with the powerful arraignment of Mormonism, as a part of the secret order system, by Rev. Dr. McAllister at the Boston congress, of which the first part appears this week, we have a further statement of facts respecting the Masonic record of Mormonism.

In the "History of the M. W. Grand Lodge of Illinois," by John C. Reynolds, written and published by the authority of the Masonic Grand Lodge, there is given in chapters XV., XVI. and XVII. the record of the Mormon connection with Illinois Freemasons,—a matter of such moment that it should be preserved for future reference.

From this history it appears that the first lodge of Masons was founded in Illinois in 1805 at Kaskaskia. The history of Masonry in the State was the history of this lodge, which seldom had a dozen members present, until about 1820, when other lodges began to be formed, and a Grand Lodge was organized in December, 1822, seven lodges uniting in it. In 1827 the records began to fail, and Masonry seemed to be dead in 1829, nor is there any account of it until 1835. In that year Bodley lodge of Quincy was granted a dispensation from Kentucky. In a few years the Grand Lodge was reorganized, and Stephen A. Douglas was first Grand Orator. In 1842 there were five chartered lodges and three working under permit or "dispensation." One of the latter was at Nauvoo, to which town the Mormons had removed in 1838, when driven from Missouri. The Grand Lodge met this year at Jacksonville, Oct. 3. The number of Masons reported in the State was 480, and of this number the single lodge at Nauvoo furnished two hundred and eighty-three (283), or more than one half the whole, showing Mormonism to be an exceedingly fertile soil for the lodge.

But Bodley lodge at Quincy, at a special meeting July 16th preceding, had entertained charges against the Nauvoo Masons, though numbering not one-tenth as many members. A report was unanimously adopted that Nauvoo lodge was being "conducted in a manner un-Masonic," and that the Grand Master be requested to stop them. Also it was voted to ask the Grand Lodge to make inquiry—

"By what authority the Grand Master initiated, passed, and raised Messrs. Smith and Rigdon to the degrees of Entered Apprentice Fellow Craft and Master Mason at one and the same time."

The Grand Lodge took up the case and appointed a committee of investigation, which reported in favor of continuing the dispensation to the Nauvoo Masons, among whom Jo Smith and Sidney Rigdon were shining lights, having taken the three degrees at one time by permission of the Grand Master, and Hyrum Smith and Heber C. Kimball were respectively senior warden and junior deacon. We name these men especially, since they were the Mormon leaders.

In 1843, Oct. 2, the Grand Lodge was again in session at Jacksonville with seven chartered lodges and ten under dispensation. Among the latter were Nauvoo, Helm and Nye lodges of Nauvoo and Eagle of Keokuk, Iowa. Of these lodges the history says, page 202:

"Nauvoo, Helm and Nye Lodges were located at Nauvoo, and were composed mainly of Mormons. Eagle Lodge, at Keokuk, was of the same character. These lodges were the result of a division of Nauvoo lodge and were never chartered."

The case of these lodges came up under the report of the Grand Master and another protest of the Quincy Masons. There were 480 Masons in the State, aside from the four Mormon lodges which were on trial. Their number is not given, but if the proportion held good from the year before, it must have been about 500. The Grand Master in his report recommends that, if a charter is granted, Nauvoo lodge be divided into four or more distinct lodges. The committee of examination reported no objection to the Mormon lodges because of immorality or vicious doctrines, but simply and only because they made Masons too fast and gave them the degrees, one after the other, too rapidly. These are the sole objections entertained (See pages 195 and 199 of the History). The Grand Lodge adopted the report of the committee revoking the dispensation and refusing charters.

In the Grand Lodge meeting, Oct. 7, 1844, Eagle Lodge, which had not disbanded, made another futile effort to get a charter. The action of the body also showed that the Grand Master had sent a messenger to Nauvoo to demand the dispensations already granted. The Mormons treated the message with contempt, refused to obey, and expressed a determination to continue to work Masonry on their own account, as they were probably the Masonic majority in the State. They kept their word, as it appears that a member of St. Clair lodge, Bellville, Ill., went to Nauvoo and participated in the Masonic ceremonies connected with the dedication of a lodge hall. Charges were brought against him for violating that part of his oath which forbids holding communication with clandestine Masons. The member was condemned by the lodge in these words:

"Resolved, That as Bro. — has acted unmasonically, as is shown by the above report, and expressed in the resolution preceding this, the lodge deal with him according to Masonic usages in the Fraternity."

"The sentence, as assessed, WAS THEN CARRIED INTO EXECUTION," says the History, page 257.

WAS THIS ANOTHER MORGAN CASE.

The disobedient Mason was ordered to be dealt with "according to Masonic usages." The sentence is then carried into execution. Was his throat cut and his blood caught in a pail? Did the Masons serve him as they did William Miller in Belfast; David Brownlee at Little York, Ill., or the unknown victim at Bristol, Penn? It is for them to explain. They have given us the record. We know their oaths, and that the penalties of those oaths have been executed. They conceal the name of this condemned man with great care; and with the single statement that the sentence was executed on the spot the history stops. There are no doubt men living who can finish the story.

The Masonic record of the Mormons as Masons also stops with this mysterious case, to be taken up in other volumes and the records of the courts of Salt Lake City, as the Cynosure has explained at length in late issues. We regard the narrative herewith presented from the official documents of the Grand Lodge of Illinois to be a vastly important link in the chain that binds Mormonism to the great Secret Lodge system.

—The January number of the Independent Christian, formerly of Littleton, N. H., comes from its new office at Wellesley, Mass. Miss E. E. Flagg, our New England correspondent, has become office editor and business agent, and gives an introductory word to the readers of the Christian. These new editorial duties will not seriously increase her labors, and may facilitate in some respects her efforts for the New England Association.

—It was lately noticed in an editorial on Mormonism that Solomon Spaulding, who wrote the romance, which Jo Smith and Rigdon stole and made into the Book of Mormon, lived in the Morgan days. This was an error. He died in 1816, and the manuscript of his book was obtained from his relatives. His condemnation of the lodge is just as good, however, as if written to-day.

—Mrs. J. S. Collins, of Pittsburgh, who with her husband, Rev. Dr. Samuel Collins, is deeply interested in the N. C. A. and its work, is State Superintendent for the department of National Reform in the Pennsylvania W. C. T. U. She has issued a circular to her sister workers in reform, informing them of the scope of her topic, and exhorting them to personal efforts in behalf of the principles involved in it. In her appeal to mothers, she says: "As conservators of the home, keep ever in view that God instituted first the family, then the church and state. Government is an aggregation of all. It is therefore important, that all reform shall begin in the family; that the principles inculcated there be safe and purifying, so that social, political and civil affairs shall all be brought into harmony with the laws of Christ. The temperance reform, labor and political reforms, will all be solved when we bow to Christ's authority in the state, and in his law in all the relations of life. Let us learn our duty to our King and Ruler, always remembering 'that righteousness exalteth a nation, while sin is a reproach to any people.'"

—A correspondent, "F. R.," of the United Presbyterian, reports the Boston Congress at some length in a tone of critical friendliness. It was wise management, he believes, to omit United Presbyterians from the program, since activity on their part would have appeared to proceed from a proselyting or sectarian spirit. We cannot believe this apology sufficient. It is very like what may have been said by the men of a city named Meroz, who came not up to the help of the Lord against the mighty lodges overthrown by Deborah. They may have objected, because with a woman to lead, the victory was not "regular." This brother says the members of the convention and speakers "must be accorded the high praise of having meant well." And he adds, "Sometime method will be harmonized with intention." There seems to be a sinister reflection in the words. Perhaps there were too many Baptists and Congregationalists in the Tremont Temple meeting to allow of the adoption of a proper method. We are all willing to sit at the feet of Bro. F. R. and learn wisdom, but if his method gives no better results against the lodge than his letter promises, the Lord would have to make the stones cry out for want of men.

PERSONAL NOTES.

—The Cedar Rapids Republican of Dec. 28th, announces the death of Nathaniel Bourne, of that city, one of the most influential of our reformers in Iowa. He has served the State association as treasurer for several terms, and his loss will be most serious to the friends in that State.

—Bro. Enos W. Shaw came over from Michigan last week to spend a few days with friends at home at Nora, Ill. He returned to Grand Rapids Friday night last, and expects soon to visit Coopersville, Allendale, Howell, Jackson and Brighton. He is much encouraged with the Michigan work.

—Rev. Dr. Wardner, of the Free-will Baptist church of Milton Junction, Wis., was united in marriage on the 4th ult. to Miss Mattie S. Harvey, of the same place. Miss Harvey has become well known to the Wisconsin brethren for her zeal in reform, and their congratulations will be joined with ours to Dr. Wardner in securing a help-meet for him.

—Rev. William W. Patton, D.D., late President of Howard University, at Washington, died suddenly at Westfield, N. J. Dr. Patton was the first editor of the Advance in this city, and closed his relation to that paper about the time of the great fire. He lately resigned his position at Howard University, and Rev. Dr. J. E. Rankin was chosen to succeed him.

—The death of Rev. David McFall, mentioned in our New England letter, has not been unexpected for some weeks, but will be no less sincerely lamented everywhere by all who knew him. As a man of courage, faith, friendliness, integrity, devotion and piety, there are few to rival him in virtue. The church to which he has so long ministered has lost more than a friend; and the denomination to which he belonged more than a leader. The church of God on earth has need of more such men; why they are taken from us with their work half done we can seldom understand, but wait for the revelations of the last day.

—President and Mrs. J. Blanchard started Monday evening for San Diego, California. They expect to spend several months in San Diego, Los Angeles and San Francisco with acquaintances and relatives. The journey is taken chiefly for the sake of their health, and their friends hope they may return in due time with every expectation more than realized.

—Rev. J. W. Hiatt died a few days since at Summer Hill, Ill., where he was pastor of the Congregational church. Bro. Hiatt was formerly a Wesleyan minister, and at an earlier date still, a member of the Masonic lodge. His renunciation of Masonry appeared in the Cynosure of July 27, 1869. He was for some time pastor of the Wesleyan church at Westfield, Ind. Dr. A. H. Hiatt, of this city, is an older brother.

THE UNCHRISTIAN LODGES.

BRIEF ADDRESS OF REV. ROLAND F. GRANT OF BEVERLY, MASS., AT THE BOSTON CONGRESS.

The subject of secret societies is one of such importance that it cannot be discussed with hot words,—though it is nevertheless a hot subject. I speak as an American citizen on a subject which is honey-combing our American institutions, and on which, therefore, with all who have an interest in the country's welfare, I have serious opinions. There is on every hand to-day an uprising against trusts. If a combination in oil or sugar be feared, the people are quick to take alarm at the danger to their pockets. But when we have proposed to us a trust in morals, or in the matter of fair dealing of man with man, how much more should it be feared and abhorred! In a sense it is a simple question of majorities whether a little knot or circle of men can shut up certain privileges to themselves and exclude the mass of their fellow-beings. I protest that every secret order is a menace to mankind. They are all joined together to promote self-interest at the expense of other men.

Again, as a Christian man I recognize certain relations, a certain fellowship I owe to other Christian men. But as I pass down the street some morning I am accosted, "Good morning, brother!" I look up to see a stranger, or possibly some one not reputed for his fondness for the Christian church. "Who are you?" I challenge. "O, I'm a member of such-and-such secret society." Now, I ask every Christian man in this audience, Are you a "brother" to another man not a Christian? You will not dare to use a word so consecrated by our Lord, and which belongs to us only by the purchase of his blood.

Another point in this discussion is the emphasis that must be put on the principle that every good thing is public property. No man has a right to shut away a good from his fellow man. He tries to rob God who attempts it. Principles must not be kept secret. God allows no patent right to be put upon them. They are made to be like the air, free to all men. These are sentiments that I do not here assert for the first time. I speak them freely to my congregation, though possibly some members of secret societies may not be pleased to hear them.

Freemasonry is a caricature of religion because of its ritual, with religious forms, prayers, burial rites, altars, chaplains, etc. But these have no Christ in them, and he it is who makes religion true. What would be thought of a man who should take an altar from some Masonic, or Odd-fellow, or Good Templar lodge, and set it up in his family and practice the lodge ceremonies about it for the salvation of his children? What an abomination to God must a lodge burial service be with its mock solemnities. I will never join in such a service with them; and I think I know what it is to take such a pledge. The only question for a minister of the Gospel of Jesus Christ to consider when asked to join them is, Is this a truly religious organization and ceremony or not? He has only to stand by his God and fear not.

I have heard in Masonic prayers the expression,

"The most holy place of prayer." What was this most holy place but the lodge, where were the altars and the priests of secrecy? As a minister of Christ I must protest against the use of such words. The lodge gives no place for Christ. Its prayers are not made with reference to him or his express commands. They are framed to suit all classes of men who may belong to that lodge. Now the Lord expressly says, "He that is not with me is against me." The lodge does not recognize Christ. He has no place there; no position. Though nine-tenths of the members be professed Christians, he cannot meet them in a body so organized and controlled. A week ago last Sabbath I asked my church, Have any of you taken an oath with a horrible penalty that you will practice this or that virtue, or refrain from this or that sin? If your oath is needed to make your word valuable your word is good for nothing.

Why are the women in the churches and the men in the lodges? The fact is universally recognized. Every pastor knows that men who should be taking their places in his church are reclining in perfect security with their lodge priests. They are satisfied with their "good-enough religion," and Christ is nothing to them.

To assume, as the members do, that the lodge is founded on the Bible, is another falsehood. Do they not know that the Good Samaritan did not ask for a grip before he would help the wounded man? The lodge rebukes the church for not helping the poor. Yes, and continues to jibe when we have sent to the front platoon after platoon to fall in the brave struggle for the world's redemption; when we are founding hospitals and industrial schools and colleges and missions in every quarter.

It is well for those of us who are opposing this evil to speak carefully and wisely, and not for the sake of mere bravado. We should present Christ in his beauty and loveliness. He is not the object of lodge affection. Do not speak either unless you have something to say. You may be snared into an exposure of your ignorance, and do more harm than good. Lay strong hold of some salient fact, and use it effectively. It is always safe to argue that it is not necessary for men to join together and swear to have their throats cut, if they wish to do good to their fellow-men.

May God bless this discussion and this conference; and may there arise a generation who shall turn back this dark system and overthrow it in the name of God.

Afterward Mr. Grant, having remarked that he thought it wise not to push the discussion of the lodge as anti-Christian, he explained, in reply to Rev. Wm. F. Davis, who objected, that in dealing with men of the lodge and laboring to bring them out of the orders, that he would aim to help them see the non-Christian character of the system. By beginning to show it anti-Christian their antagonism would be roused and the effort fail. But if the conference wished him to discuss the lodge as anti-Christian and would give him two or three hours, he could do it, for he had made careful study of the whole question.

The Central Baptist says most truly, and in common with many other journals, that "Before the Mormons can become loyal citizens of the United States, Mormonism must be destroyed root and branch." Now will these papers say that every society which makes its members swear to obey its officers and to ever conceal and never reveal its secrets under penalty of having their throats cut from ear to ear and their hearts cut out from their bodies, are un-American; and that before the members can be loyal citizens of the nation the society must be destroyed root and branch, or its members must secede and renounce their allegiance to it? What is the difference between Mormonism and any other society which has its form of religion, its oaths of secrecy and obedience, and its penalties which are in conflict with the laws of the country?—The Midland.

He who advocates secret societies is in no way advocating the Gospel of Christ in such endeavor, for the Gospel of Christ does not teach or in any way sanction secret societies. This is so universally felt to be true that no one dares come forward and claim Christ as the organizer and propagator of the secret lodge system.—Wesleyan Methodist.

THE HOME.

A LAST PRAYER.

Father, I scarcely dare to pray,
So clear I see, now it is done,
That I have wasted half my day,
And left my work but just begun;
So clear I see that things I thought
Were right or harmless were a sin:
So clear I see that I have sought
Unconscious, selfish aims to win;
So clear I see that I have hurt
Souls I might have helped to save,
That I have slothful been, inert,
Deaf to the calls Thy leaders gave.
In outskirts of Thy kingdom vast,
Father, the humblest spot give me;
Set me the lowliest task Thou hast,
Let me repentant work for Thee!

—Written by Helen Hunt Jackson, four days before her death.

A DANGEROUS POSITION ON THE DANCE QUESTION.

On a certain Sunday, in one of our large cities, a minister of the — church received fifty new members. While reading the rules of the church, and especially the portion relating to popular amusements, he said "that if a young man and a young woman attended a parlor-dance, and were conscientious about it—that is, were not condemned by their consciences—he would not 'church' them." Upon this an aged member of the congregation arose and asked the pastor: "Brother —, would Jesus Christ dance?" The minister retorted: "Do you pretend to say that Baptists, Presbyterians, Episcopalians and others who attend dances, will not go to heaven? It is preposterous for any one to presume such a thing. It is the abuse which constitutes the sin, and the time and place have also something to do with it." The preacher then reiterated his statement that he would not discipline a lady and gentleman for innocent enjoyment in dancing at a parlor party.

While the remarks of this clergyman may seem plausible to some, they nevertheless have a very weak side and are open to severe criticism. On such an important occasion as the reception of so many new members, would it not have been far better not to have said anything giving the least countenance to dancing—a generally acknowledged worldly amusement? How much more appropriate would have been advice to these new members to "abstain from all appearance of evil." How much better to have earnestly exhorted them to and fascinations of all so-called innocent amusements, lest they be led from the supposed innocent to the harmful! How much more proper would have been advice always to give their souls the benefit of a doubt in reference to popular but questionable indulgences!

Perhaps some of those fifty new members had had a great and prolonged struggle to gain the victory over the besetting sins of dancing and kindred diversions. And now to hear their spiritual guide talk thus lightly about dancing might be the means of their re-enslavement, and possibly even the loss of the souls of some. Surely he would have done them a vastly greater service, and one far more creditable to himself, as a professed minister of Jesus to have urged them to

CONSTANT WATCHFULNESS AND PRAYER

—to holy living and zeal in trying to save souls. Doubtless even some of his unconverted auditors would have thought this more commendable, and more consistent with his holy calling.

But suppose this preacher would not "discipline" his parlor-dancing members, and say nothing to them that it might lead to spiritual declension, and thus leave them under the impression that he regarded it as altogether harmless, is it not likely that some of his members would soon dance in places less "innocent" than the parlor? And might not some of them, knowing his sentiments on parlor-dancing, conclude that he would hardly "church" them for dancing at other places and thus be led to "abuse" the practice both as to "time" and "place?"

BISHOP PIERCE'S OPINION.

In referring to the time, place, and the kind of company with which one mingles in dancing, as also of the different kinds of dancing, the sainted

Bishop Pierce, of the M. E. church South, said: "The truth is, they (the various styles of dancing) are all related—blood-kin. The family is one. Private dancing is the prelude and preparation for public dancing. The simple leads to complex, and the delicate to the gross. The passions grow by indulgence. For this reason I include those Christian parents who teach their children to dance in the same condemnation with the more open transgressors who misrepresent their Master, outrage the moral sentiments of the church, and herd promiscuously with the world of the ungodly. The knowledge of the art involves the temptation to practice it. Indeed, this schooling is a preparation for it—a provision for the flesh to fulfill the lusts thereof."

Again, this preacher talks about engaging in parlor-dancing conscientiously. His attitude to this question, it seems to me, would have the tendency to make the

CONSCIENCE LESS TENDER.

Is conscience, biased by the love of worldly amusements, a safe guide? I fear many who think they are following conscience, are influenced by carnal desires and appetites. What use was there in that minister reading the discipline of the church, supposed to be based on God's Word, if he were willing that his people should be guided only by their consciences? Is conscience infallible? Does it not need enlightening and purifying?

It's all right for the heathen mother to throw her babe into the jaws of the crocodile because her conscience does not condemn her—is it? Why, then, do we send the Gospel to the heathen if no higher guide than conscience is needed? Thousands of people, not deemed heathen, are constantly indulging in improper and sinful things on the plea that their consciences do not condemn them. But may not many of them have violated and seared and so much as to make it the most unreliable thing in the world? Thousands upon thousands seem to pay very little attention to the cultivation of conscience. How few, comparatively, from the bottom of their hearts pray,

"Quick as the apple of an eye,
O God, my CONSCIENCE make!
Awake my soul when SIN is nigh,
And keep it still awake."

I was greatly astonished at the question by the minister alluded to, when he asked: "Do you pretend to say that Baptists, Presbyterians, Episcopalians, and others who attend dances will not go to heaven?" Doubtless thousands of the more pious belonging to these churches would not thank the reverend gentleman for referring to their denominations as favoring dancing. Many members of these churches look upon dancing as one of the

to lead souls astray from God. Those belonging to the denominations mentioned, or to any other church, who dance, are certainly not the ones usually engaged in all kinds of Christian work—not the ones who specially love the prayer meeting and the Bible—not the ones who constantly strive to lead souls to Christ and to promote holy living in their churches.

And then what a low motive to which to appeal in justification of church members dancing, namely, that they will not fail to get to heaven. Is that all Christians are to work for, simply to get to heaven—simply to get there themselves, no matter what becomes of others? Is there not much selfishness at the bottom of such a position? Certainly the conception of Christian duty and privilege is very groveling in those who have no higher ambition than only to secure their own safety. And can such really have a sure and joyful hope of heaven? Surely the work to be done by Christians is great and urgent. And it is well known that the defender and lover of the dance does very little of this work, and many such none at all. And whom do the sick and distressed and dying generally send for to impart consolation—the dancing professor of religion, or the one not addicted to this beguiling evil?

TWO SAD INCIDENTS.

A young lady who once had religious convictions and desires allowed the dance to stifle them to her ruin. Becoming very sick, and realizing that death was near and she unprepared for it, exclaimed in her last moments, "Tell my friends that I danced my soul into hell!"

During Mr. Moody's first great meeting in Cleveland a young lady acquaintance of mine was convicted of sin and repaired to the inquiry room as a seeker of salvation. While the meeting was still in progress, and she was still interested in her soul, some friends invited her to a parlor-dance. She hesitated, believing such a diversion unbecoming and dangerous to her, at least at such a time. But her companions pressed her to consent to go. In her dilemma she consulted her pastor, who told her there could be no harm in a social parlor-dance. She yielded to the solicitation of her friends and went to the dance. The company was frivolous and worldly, and she in a degree imbibed their spirit and grieved away the Holy Spirit. That evening her convictions for sin left her. She no longer sought the inquiry room, gave up her efforts to become a Christian, and plunged deeply in the pleasures of the world. —Evangelical Messenger.

SHATTERED.

The owner of the famous Wedgewood Potteries, in the beginning of this century, was not only a man of remarkable mechanical skill, but a most devout and reverent Christian. On one occasion, a nobleman of dissolute habits and an avowed atheist, was going through the works, accompanied by Mr. W., and by a young lad who was employed in them, the son of pious parents. Lord C—— sought early opportunity to speak contemptuously of religion. The boy at first looked amazed, then listened with interest, and at last burst into a loud, jeering laugh.

Mr. Wedgewood made no comment, but soon found occasion to show to his guest the process of making a fine vase; how with infinite care the delicate paste was moulded into a shape of rare beauty and fragile texture, how it was painted by a skilful artist, and finally passed through the furnace, coming out perfect in form and pure in quality. The nobleman exclaimed with delight and stretched out his hand for it, but the potter threw it on the ground, shattering it into a thousand pieces.

"That was unpardonable carelessness!" said Lord C——, angrily. "I wished to take that cup home for my collection! Nothing can restore it again."

"No. Yet you forget, my lord," said Mr. Wedgewood, "that the soul of that lad who has just left us came pure into the world. That his parents, friends, all good influences have been at work during his whole life to make him a vessel fit for his Master's use; that you, with your impious touch, have undone all the work of years. No human hand can bind together again what you have broken."

Lord C——, who had never before received a rebuke from an inferior, stared at him in silence. Then, "You are an honest man," he said frankly, holding out his hand. "I never thought of the effect of my words."

There is no subject which young men in college are more fond of discussing than religion, too often parading the crude, half-comprehended atheistic arguments which they have heard or read before boys to whom such doubts are new.

Like Lord C——, they "do not think." They do not probably believe these arguments themselves, and they forget that they are infusing poison into healthy souls which no other efforts of theirs can ever remove. A moment's carelessness may destroy the work of years. —Selected.

There is an old legend of the Middle Ages to the effect that once upon a time a church member died at a ball. Satan came along and took his soul, and was flying off with it, when St. Peter finding it out, put after him and demanded restoration. "He was a Christian," said St. Peter, "and you must give him up." "Christian!" exclaimed Satan, "why, I found him on my premises." "If that is the case," said St. Peter, "I give it up." We commend the above to all professing Christians who attend theatres, balls, and other places of questionable amusement. —Standard.

What I admire in Columbus is not his having discovered a world, but his having gone to search for it on the faith of an opinion. —Turgot.

CHILD-LOVE.

Oh, to recall the days when, on the road
That led me, cheerful or depressed, toward home,
My little timid son was wont to come
Within my ken not far from my abode!
On seeing me his eager joy he curbed,
Uncertain of my mood. He peeled his stick
With anxious mean, while casting glances quick
To learn my humor; if I seemed disturbed
As I drew near, he loitered by my side—
A thought behind—and looked intent on work;
But if I smiled—then, with a sudden jerk,
His stick flew far, and such a whelming tide
Of love burst forth, in smiles and misty tears,
And pressure of his loving little hand, and eager confidence of hopes and fears.

Oh, that we did not fail so oft to find
God's angels in our children! How our eyes
Are holden, while we deem that we are wise.
Whereas we are but very dull and blind!
For what are trifling faults—a noisy tone,
A broken platter, or a missing hat?
Can we not foster love so passionate,
Yet gently chide? Alas! why be so prone
To silence lips so loving, or to make
The little heart e'en for a moment ache
Because our nerves are jarred? How soon we lose
Perception of the treasure of its love!
Shock our fastidious sense, and we refuse
The love that fills the little heart with joy—the solace that could half our griefs remove. —Spectator.

MARCUS AURELIUS.

A SKETCH FROM LIFE FOR BOYS AND GIRLS.

There is an old-fashioned saying that some persons are born with silver spoons in their mouths; and this might well have been applied to the birth of one of Rome's great emperors, who is also counted among the greatest philosophers that the world has ever known.

Marcus Antoninus, or Marcus Aurelius, as he is generally called, was of royal blood. Perfect in physique, and possessing great personal beauty, he forms a direct contrast to Epictetus, the crippled slave boy of whom we read some weeks ago. Yet, like Epictetus, his most striking characteristic in early boyhood, was a strong love of purity and truth. At the age of six years, the sweetness and innocence of his character so affected the sinful Emperor Hadrian, that, looking down upon the child's upturned face, he called him by a new name, "Verissimus"—the most true.

Like young Moses of the Bible, Marcus Aurelius was brought up amid the splendor, the luxury, and the temptations of court life. Early perceiving the unmanliness of giving one's self to luxury, gluttony, and all those self-indulgences to which the Roman youth of his day were addicted, he set himself diligently to practice the sternest self-denial. Self-denial, abstinence and hardness, a plank bed, and the Stoic dress—these all became a part of his very life at the age of twelve. (See Archdeacon Farrar's "Seekers after God.")

As Epictetus rose above his poverty, so Marcus Aurelius rose above his wealth. As Epictetus, amid the low and degraded surroundings of a slave-life, soared to exalted heights of purity and strength, so did Marcus Aurelius, lifted by circumstances above the millions of his fellow-men, bring down his spirit to a gentleness and humility which have been the wonder and admiration of succeeding ages. Indeed, the writings of the lowly Epictetus were the beloved companions and instructors of Marcus Aurelius during all his life of royal splendor.

Although loaded with distinctions from his infancy, it was not until he reached the age of seventeen that Aurelius saw himself the acknowledged heir to the empire of the world. Then, instead of growing in pride with his worldly advancement, we find our young hero becoming more humble and truly great in spirit, manifesting his nobility of mind by a disposition of the most unaffected simplicity and modesty.

Fond as he was of literary pursuits, Aurelius did not despise a good game played upon the field. Boxing, wrestling, running—all these he loved. He was an admirable player at ball, and fond of the perilous excitement of hunting the wild boar.

Of course you will want to know when he began to reign. It was in the year of our Lord 161 that he succeeded to the imperial throne.

Though he became a powerful emperor and a successful warrior, it is, however, as an author that Marcus Aurelius is best known to us. His famous "Meditations" were written for his own private use, and possibly with a view to the instruction of his son, Commodus. The son cared nothing for his father's philosophy, but succeeding generations have placed a high value upon the work which happily has been preserved to the present time. It seems to breathe the spirit of Christianity, yet, strange to say, the chief blot upon the memory of Aurelius lies in his persecutions of the Christians, of whom he speaks slightly in this very book.

Most of his writing was done amid the distractions of a war in which he was forced to engage against his will. The cruelty of war, and all its bloody detail, were most distasteful to him, and full often would he steal quietly to his tent at nightfall, after a fierce encounter with the enemy; and while his soldiers were feasting and shouting over his glorious victory, he would calm his spirits by reflection and composition.

The first part of his "Meditations" tells of the teachers of his youth and their instructions. I will copy a few of his written precepts in which their teachings still live. These may be of help to any boy who will take the pains to commit them to memory:

"Avoid factions. Work hard. Avoid listening to slander. Practice self-denial. Learn undeviating steadiness of purpose, and endurance of misfortune. Tolerate the ignorant. Be benevolent of heart, and learn to receive favors without being humbled by them. Learn delicacy in correcting others. Write with simplicity. Be accurate. Be easily pacified."

In reading of Marcus Aurelius, we are compelled to admire his many virtues, which we may well strive to imitate. Yet how much nobler would he have been had he become a follower of Jesus of Nazareth—had he accepted the faith which he attempted to destroy!

Another thought comes in examining his wonderful book. Though valuable indeed, and inspiring in many ways, yet it serves to show us how far the highest human philosophy falls short of the doctrine of Him who spoke words of wisdom such as never man spake.—Christian Intelligencer.

TEMPERANCE.

DR. CHARLES JEWETT ON THE SECRET TEMPERANCE ORDERS.

[From his book, "Forty Years' Fight with the Drink Demon," 1872, pp. 146, 152, 155.]

Another movement, which lost us the active co-operation of thousands of excellent and able men, was the substitution of close for open organizations. Prior to the formation of the order of Sons of Temperance, all our public meetings were open to the world. There was no ritual to control the order of public services which was determined by surrounding circumstances. The opening exercises, after the president of the society had called the meeting to order, were generally prayer, the reading of the minutes, or the record of the last meeting and the reading of reports, if special duties had been assigned to committees. These services did not usually consume more than twenty minutes of the evening. The remainder was devoted to a free discussion of the subject of temperance by interested parties, unless provision had been made for a regular lecture, in which case, of course, that service had precedence. But whether the evening hours were occupied with the lecture or a general discussion, all was in the hearing of the masses.

I have worked in good faith for years with and for Sons of Temperance and Good Templars, believing, all the while, that open societies would serve our purpose better, and that their re-establishment, with the addition of a proper financial feature, would be found to be a necessity before a triumph can be reached. I saw, however, that close organizations must have a trial, and a thorough one, before the earnest and excellent brethren, working in and through them, could be made to see the necessity of other forms. They have been tried for nearly twice the period during which we worked in open organizations, and for one, I think it time to look at the facts as they are, and, instead of an obstinate adherence to existing and partial methods only, see if some measures cannot be devised for bringing our whole force into the field.

Seven-eighths of our weekly temperance meetings are now held in private rooms. Few of the aged are there to give the proceedings the dignity and gravity which their presence generally confers, and the children are left at home; and worst of all, the drinking portion of the community, the very portion which we wish to influence by our arguments and appeals, are excluded. They have not the password.

What a blow would be struck at Christianity, if, from the regular meetings of the sanctuary or the weekly meeting for religious conference, sinners were excluded, unless they came with the password, or would declare beforehand their readiness to join the church. At the close of the exercises in open societies you can take advantage of any good impressions made to get men to join the society, which they can do on the spot by signing the pledge of abstinence, it being a part of the constitution, and from that moment the pledged man is a member. In close organizations considerable time must elapse and certain ceremonies intervene before membership is attained.

Once more. Those petty rivalries which are now frequently occurring between the different orders, where they exist in the same community, and often between subordinate and neighboring organizations of the same order; and those unbrotherly strifes for offices and honors, which too often occur now, were unknown in the open organizations, absolutely unknown. No doubt, my brethren who have embraced the cause within the last twenty-five years, and never worked in open societies at all, will be surprised at these utterances; but men, past fifty, who worked in the open societies which existed in New England by thousands before the year 1840, will fully understand me; such men as Senator Wilson, of Massachusetts, Gov. Buckingham, of Connecticut, Neal Dow, of Maine, and Amos C. Barstow, of Rhode Island, and thousands of others past the age of fifty. Let our younger brethren, before they express their unbelief in the historical truth of my statements, ask such men, and I am willing that their statements shall stand, whether for my justification or condemnation. How far they were effective, let the facts tell. In less than fifteen years the style of operations I have described so far revolutionized the public opinion of Massachusetts that the license system was abolished in more than three-fourths of the counties of the State. The old style of operating gave place, in the years 1840, '41 and '42, to the Washingtonian System, and that very soon to the Sons of Temperance and other forms of close organization, and they have had the field almost exclusively for over twenty-five years; and what is the present status of temperance in that State as compared with what it was in 1843? It may be doubted whether we are stronger at the polls now than we were twenty-five years ago. If we have gained at all, it is but a slight gain to have been secured by twenty-five years of labor, even with whatever of hindrance may have fallen in our path. For myself, I believe as firmly as I believe any fact that I cannot absolutely demonstrate, that, had the work of reform been prosecuted for the last twenty-five years in New England in open organizations, with such added provisions as experience might have suggested, the liquor traffic would have been crushed before the public attention could have been diverted from that issue by the great struggle for the preservation of the Union.

THE OVERMASTERING APPETITE.

A case strikingly illustrating the horrible hold which the appetite for strong drink may acquire over a man is reported in a press dispatch from Columbus, Ohio. Years ago one Samuel White, while intoxicated, slew a man. His character otherwise than in the matter of intemperance was good, and his family connections were the best. For these and other considerations a strong effort was made, after his conviction and sentence to imprisonment for life, to induce the Governor to pardon him. Finally a conditional pardon was obtained, the condition being that ever afterward he should abstain from intoxicants. October 25, on the occasion of his daughter's marriage, after eighteen years of abstinence, he violated the condition of his pardon, and was carried back to prison for the rest of his natural life. Eighteen years of sobriety had not quenched his thirst for liquor, and imprisonment for life was not sufficient to deter him from indulging this insatiable appetite!

NEW HAMPSHIRE'S LIQUOR LAW.

Governor Godell on Saturday, Dec. 28, issued the following proclamation extraordinary: "In view of various heinous crimes which have been committed in our State within the last few weeks, directly traceable to the use of intoxicating liquors, in the sale of which the criminal laws have been flagrantly violated, now, therefore, I warn all persons engaged in this illegal and deadly traffic to desist therefrom immediately, and I call upon the Attorney-General of the State, the solicitors and sheriffs of the counties, the mayors of the cities, and selectmen, and all other officers of the State, and upon all good citizens of every party, to unite in a supreme effort to close up and suppress every liquor saloon of every description within our borders. 'Let no guilty man escape.' Numerous decisions of our Supreme Court attest the constitutionality of our prohibitory liquor laws. Let them be vigorously enforced, that the people may enjoy the great benefits which are sure to follow. And I cannot refrain from urging all churches, temperance organizations, and all persons who desire the best good of our commonwealth to redouble their efforts to promote personal sobriety and temperance among our people."

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON III.—First Quarter.—Jan. 19.

SUBJECT.—The Song of Zacharias.—Luke 1: 67-80.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Thou shalt go before the face of the Lord to prepare his ways.—Luke 1: 76.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

DAILY READINGS.—M.—Luke 1: 59-66. T.—Luke 1: 67-80. W.—Isa. 40: 1-11. T.—Matt. 11: 2-14. F.—Gen. 22: 1-18. S.—Isa. 60: 1-22. S.—Isa. 62: 1-12.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. God's covenant fulfilled, vs. 67-75. Zacharias' song was directly inspired of the Holy Ghost. This was in accord with Joel's prophecy (2: 28). Now, as then, the Holy Ghost power is needed before we can praise God aright, much less convert sinners to him. Faith is the primary condition for receiving the Spirit. We must believe there is such a power, and that it is for us. Zacharias' song goes back, like Mary's, to the ancient covenant. The Psalmist says, "I will remember the times of old." God's providence in the past is the key by which we understand his divine purposes in the present. Zacharias, like Mary, uses the past tense as if all the promises were already accomplished. This is the privilege of the Christian. As soon as he grasps in faith all that God means him to have, he possesses all, even eternal life itself. God cannot forget his chosen people. He will be sure to "visit and redeem them," though the tarrying time may be long. Four thousand years the world waited for a Saviour, and now it has waited nearly two thousand years for his second coming. But it is no less—it is more—the duty of the church to continue in the attitude of patient expectancy, because he tarries. As God was faithful to Abraham, so he will be faithful to every true child of Abraham. The fact of Christ's first coming is the guarantee of his second appearing. Zacharias evidently believed that an epoch of temporal deliverance had come for his race; that the time was at hand when they would be delivered from the yoke of Rome, and be once more a nation, tributary to no foreign power, but the heathen subject to them, as painted in the glowing colors of Isaiah. He failed to comprehend that it was a spiritual Israel before whose footstool the Gentile nations were to bend with their choicest offerings. So many sincere believers may hold very mistaken ideas about Christ's second coming. Some believe in a millennial golden age, when all our present evils will be banished, and an era of Edenic innocence prevail. They may comprehend as little of the real scope and meaning of prophecy as did Zacharias; but this does not alter the glorious fact that when Christ does come it will be an era of redemption for all his saints.

"Might serve him without fear," etc. In Christ we are loosed from the spirit of bondage, or rather every Christian ought to be loosed, and would be if all accepted their high privilege. To be freed from superstition and the bonds of ceremonial observances is only a partial liberty, and if it stops there not liberty at all. We need to be free from the fear of man. It stunts Christian growth. No one can be a man in Christ Jesus and be afraid to express, or act in accordance with, his honest convictions. This is the kind of fear that our modern life especially induces. Custom is always most powerful in the most highly-cultivated conditions of society. A sad illustration of this fact may be found in the excuse given for Vice President Morton's keeping a licensed bar-room in his new hotel: that "the customs of Washington made it a necessity." Popular custom never makes it necessary to do wrong, but it often makes it very hard to do right. When Christians everywhere, pastors and people, "serve God without fear," the lodge power will have to go down, for it is largely this "fear," so dishonoring both to their Lord and to themselves, which keeps it up.

2. The mission of the child, vs. 76-80. No other prophet ever had a mission so closely connected with the work of Christ, or was sent to preach such glad and glorious tidings. Yet every Christian, man, woman, or child, is a herald sent before his face to prepare for his coming. Every movement for holier living, and deeper revivals of pure religion, is a sign of his speedy appearing; and a witness to the world of that new and perfect day which is yet to dawn for our race.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—A conference of all Christians, who sincerely desire the real and visible union of all true followers of Christ, is called to meet at Dayton, Ohio, on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, May 21, 22 and 23, 1890, to seek Divine guidance and devise ways and means for effecting the actual visible union of all true believers in Christ. "That they may be one: as thou, Father, art in me and I in thee; that they may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." John 17: 21. In calling for this conference the subscribers do not propose to start a new sect, nor to try to merge all small sects into one large sect, nor to unite with or seek to reform any existing sect or denomination. Nor do they intend to discuss doctrinal views, but do propose union in Christ; and as promotive of this end they advocate the dropping of all sect affiliations and the names that designate them. They advocate the actual visible union of all true believers in any given locality, as far as practicable, as the one church of that locality; not as a party in but as a part of, the one great body of believers in and followers of the Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God, and the only one and true head of the church, "which is his body." Among the names to this call are: Rev. C. C. Foote, of Detroit, J. Franklin Browne, Rev. Wm. Burr, Oberlin, O., Rev. David Vant, Bolivar, O., and R. W. Lyman, Yorkshire, N. Y. Among the speakers announced are John G. Fee, H. H. Hinman, O. D. Cotton, Morgan Park, Ill., C. S. Bullock, Evanston, Ill., C. E. Hulbert, Detroit, Mich.

—Bishop Cheney, of the Reformed Episcopal church, Chicago, proposes to take a new departure in appointing a second service at 4:15 in the afternoon, beginning with Jan. 5. At the present time there is no Protestant church on the South Side that is open for regular worship and preaching on the afternoon of the Sabbath day. It has become almost the universal custom to hold the second service in the evening. By this innovation Bishop Cheney believes that two advantages will be secured. Many parents do not like to have their children absent after dark. The new arrangement by which a short service and a brief sermon will be given just at the hour when most of the Sunday-schools are dismissed will enable both teachers and children to attend without the journey to and from home. Another reason is that there are many persons who now find that age or infirmity or distance from their own place of worship prevents them from attending after dark. These will be glad of an opportunity to go to church in the latter part of the afternoon.

—It is reported that the illness of Rev. Charles H. Spurgeon has taken a serious turn, and that it is feared that his work is over. This news will be received with sorrow by a large number of followers and admirers of the great preacher, who holds a unique place in the English pulpit of to-day, and whose career has been one of long usefulness.

—An interesting statement is announced from Constantinople, that the Sultan has sanctioned the erection, at Bethlehem, of a chapel for Protestant pilgrims. It is stated that this decision is most gratifying to the German Empress, who has had the scheme particularly at heart.

—Switzerland has 1,162 Sunday-schools, with 5,459 teachers and 84,000 scholars. Sweden has 3,340 Sunday-schools, with 15,000 teachers and 220,000 scholars. Austria has 140 Sunday-schools, with 312 teachers and 4,519 scholars.

—The Brahmins of India are familiar with the Scriptures, if for no other reason than that they may oppose their teachings. In the course of a conversation on Christianity, a missionary asked a well-known Brahmin in Calcutta whether he had ever read our Bible. The man looked at him, and calmly and slowly answered: "I have read the New Testament eighty-three times, and the Old Testament twenty-seven."

—Rev. W. H. Barnes, Honolulu, says that there are 20,000 Chinese in the Sandwich Islands; that two congregations of them are connected with the English Church Mission, and that they make good Christians.

—Two thousand one hundred and twenty nine converts were received into the churches of the American Board in Japan during the year ending April 30, an average of more than 43 to each church. Forty-three of the 49 churches are self-supporting.

—Mr. Kelzo Koyano, a young Japanese who left his country fifteen years ago, having completed full courses of study at Amherst and Andover, is to return to his country and preach there Christianity. He is to be supported by the Shawmut Congregational church, Boston.

—By special permission of the Sultan a chapel will be erected at Bethlehem for the use of Protestant pilgrims. If only the Turkish yoke could be thrown off, every town and village in Palestine would have a Protestant chapel, and that ancient land would once more prosper.

—The Canadian Baptist, Reformed Dutch, Reformed Presbyterian, United Presbyterian, Friends, Christian and Lutheran mission societies all have unsalaried secretaries. They have other employment, and conduct their missionary correspondence without charge.

—Christian people in the United States ought not to lose sight of the fact that Brazilian society is passing through a period of change, and that all social changes are crises—that the fate of this nation hangs upon the manner in which Christian people do their duty during the next ten years. The forces of Rome are being trained to meet the crisis with that far-seeing, patient cunning for which Rome is noted. Shall the church of Christ in North America let this ripening grain fall ungathered? Young, strong men and women are wanted who can preach and teach and sing of a purer, better Christinity than is known here.—Brazilian Missions.

—The last year of the French Missionary Society has been one of great progress. Eight new missionaries, of whom three are married, have entered the field; and the French Congo Mission has been created. In Lessouto, 514 new members have been admitted into the church; 3,332 catechumens are preparing for membership; 9,875 persons belong to the mission church, which has 110 outposts (fourteen more than in 1887). The Tahitians who came to Paris for the Exposition were present at the annual meeting. One read a speech of thanks to the French churches, and all sang a hymn in their native tongue.

—Dr. George E. Post, in an article on the outlook in Syria, says: Little by little the light is stealing in. Men of all religious opinions are inclining to toleration. The Bible is being circulated among the masses. The number of readers is multiplied. Those who believe are bolder, but at the same time more discreet. Those who do not believe are forced to concede that the Bible is the source of religious knowledge and the referee in all cases of doubt or dispute. Those who are far from the spirit of the New Testament claim to be evangelical. Everything is opening for a grand demonstration of the power of the Holy Spirit. The Syrian mission in 1827 had only secured 20 converts; to-day its church roll exceeds 1,500. The mission in Egypt reports an addition last year to the membership of 365, one for each day of the year. The mission press at Beirut employs forty-eight persons, and during the past year has printed 1,900 volumes, the total number of pages being nearly twenty-nine millions. Of these eighteen millions were pages of Scripture. Since the press was established it has turned out a grand total of 394 million pages.

—At a meeting of the Congregational ministers of Chicago, Dec. 30, the following figures relative to the growth of Congregational churches and Sabbath-schools in the city were submitted by Superintendent J. C. Armstrong:

	1879	1889
Number of churches	13	42
" Sabbath-schools	16	64
church members	4,150	8,275
" Sabbath-school scholars	5,730	18,310

—According to the Statistical Year Book of Germany, for 1889, the latest data on the religious status of the country are these: 29,369,847 Evangelicals, 16,785,734 Catholics, 125,673 other Christians, 562,172 Jews, 11,278 confessors of other religions or professing no religion at all. The Evangelicals include Lutherans, Reformed, and the United Church, i. e., the union formed in 1817 in Prussia and some other states between the two Protestant confessions; the Catholics include Roman Catholics, Greek Catholics and Old Catholics. In 1871 the proportions were these: 25,581,685 Evangelicals, 14,869,292 Catholics, 82,158 other Christians, 512,853 Jews, 17,156 of other or no religion. The most noteworthy feature of these figures is that while the Evangelicals and the Catholics have grown in equal proportion, the number of "other" Christians has increased in much larger proportion.

LODGE NOTES.

The Masonic Chronicle of Columbus, O., says: "In 1777, the Convention of Virginia Lodges recommended Washington as a suitable person to be elected Grand Master of the Independent Grand Lodge of that Commonwealth, an honor which he felt compelled to decline."

The Knights of Honor is strictly a fraternal order, according to the organ of that lodge, and not a life insurance company or association. Their methods differ from old line life insurance as well as from so-called assessment companies. It unites in its plans and system all the features of such orders as the Masons, Odd-fellows, Knights of Pythias, and the like, with a protective feature added.

A "Past Master" having written to the Victoria Freeman condemning the drinking habits of his lodge companions, the editor replies: "We publish this extraordinary effusion of a P. M., as showing how fanaticism blinds men's judgments. Freemasonry has no connection in its incidental obligations and duties with teetotalism or its kindred 'isms.' A P. M. has much to learn of the theory of Masonry."

Dr. Darius Wilson, 10 Temple Place, Boston, beside being at the head of the so-called "Royal Masonic Rite," lately known as Egyptian Masonry, also claims to be a member in good standing in Younondis Lodge, A. F. and A. M., Rochester, N. Y.; Mt. Zion R. A. Chapter; Union Council, Royal and Select Masters; York Commandery K. T., all of New York city. He is founder of the Royal Arcanum and Royal Society of Good Fellows.

The New York Sunday Times states: A number of small "Mutual Benefit Associations" are sprouting out, and the gettters-up of many of them are persons wholly unknown and without any responsible financial backing. The "Benefit Associations" are the latest craze. A great many people will be duped, and some others will abscond with the funds, as was demonstrated in one particular instance last week. Others will follow in due time. Take no stock in these catch-penny affairs.

The "Sovereign Sanctuary Royal Masonic Rite of the United States of America," of which Dr. Darius Wilson, of Boston, is the exalted head, embraces orders and degrees as follows: The Ancient and Honorable Order of Royal Ark Mariners; the Royal Oriental Order of Sikha and Sat B' Hai (Order of the Crescent or Original Mystic Shrine); the Ancient and Primitive Oriental and Egyptian Reformed Rites, 4° to 33°; Rite of Mizraim, 4° to 90°; the Supreme Rite of Memphis and the Egyptian Masonic Rite of Memphis, 4° to 96°.

One of the phenomenal manifestations of recent years, says the New York Sun, has been the growth of mutual benefit or benevolent societies. These are most commonly known as orders, and are founded on the system of the Masonic Order in constitution, ritual and the like. But they are confederated like the Masons. They have their supreme, grand and local chiefs and past chiefs, called by different titles but signifying the same thing; and equally with their prototypes they seek to surround themselves with the charm of mystery, and veil their proceedings from the eye of an inquisitive world.

PIONEERS WANTED.

Cosy little log cabins. Nice to get out West here and see those rustic monuments of the pioneers who opened up for us this new empire. Specially pleasant to me, reminding me of hard and happy pioneer mission work in Missouri, Arkansas, etc., over twenty years ago.

Pioneer settlers, teachers, preachers, etc., lay the foundation of nations. The true spirit of Christianity is aggressive. Every real Christian wants to see the glorious Gospel spread out into "all the world." The stay-at-home, do-nothing, hide-your-light-under-a-bushel religion comes not from Gethsemane but from Gehenna.

"Why stand ye here all the day idle?" the Lord of the harvest is saying to thousands of young Christians in this land. "Because no man hath hired us,—no offers of $2,500 a year from city churches, no offers of $1,000 for mission work, not even $600 for country circuits!" Well, if you can't get a heavy armor, go out giant-killing with the shepherd-boy outfit. If the modern ecclesiastical machinery does not need you, go back to the New Testament plan.

"GO!" saith the Lord. The heathen need you, whether the church does or not. The happiest life in all the world is to labor for the good of others where it is the most sorely needed. Does not that point you toward the thousand million of heathen? Who will go? Who will send?

HOME AND HEALTH.

VALUE OF EXERCISE OF THE ARM AND LEG.

If there is one general physical difference between the country-bred and the city-bred man it lies in the size and strength of the muscles of the shoulder and arm. It is almost impossible for a man to live in the country without using the arms far more than the average city man. This use of the arm has, in both men and women, an important bearing on the general health, since it increases the capacity of the chest, and thereby the surface of lung-tissue, where the blood is spread out in thin-walled vessels, through which the oxygen and carbonic acid easily pass in opposite directions, serving thus the double purpose of feeding the body more abundantly and of removing a constantly accumulating waste product.

This richer blood is again driven with greater force by increased heart and arterial action through its circuit. The vital organs are better nourished, and the power to produce work is increased. Few will deny that a well-nourished body can be trained to do more and better mental work than the same organism in a feeble state. Walking on an even surface, the only variety of physical exercise which most business and professional men get in town is well known to be a poor substitute for arm exertion. The reason is partially plain, since walking is almost automatic and involuntary. The walking mechanism is set in motion as we would turn an hour-glass, and requires little attention, much less volition and separate discharges of force from the brain surface with each muscular contraction, as in the case with the great majority of arm movements. The arm-user is a higher animal than the leg-user. Arm motions are more nearly associated with mental action than leg movements. A man's lower limbs merely carry his higher centers to his food or work. The latter must be executed with his arms and hands.

A third way in which arm-exercise benefits the organism is through the nervous system. Whether this is due to an increased supply of richer, purer blood, or whether the continual discharge of motor impulses in some way stores up another variety of force, we do not know. One thing is certain, the victim of neurasthenia is very seldom an individual who daily uses his arms for muscular work; with this the limit of hurtful mental work is seldom reached. It seems evident that arm, rather than leg, movements are essential to increased productive power. If these are neglected the man, as a social factor, degenerates and falls a prey to his stronger fellow-man in the race for supremacy and productiveness. It may be remarked that American gout, that condition of the blood which causes our English cousins pain in the feet, and Americans universal pains and increased irritability, has one sovereign remedy so simple that few will take it, and this is daily systematic arm-exercise. It is nature's sedative, for which she charges nothing the next day, but gives us sleep instead of insomnia, and cheerfulness in place of discontent.

A man may walk in an hour four miles on a city sidewalk and reach his desk tired, exhausted of force, and better only for the open air and a slight increase of the circulation. Had he spent half the time in a well-ordered gymnasium, using chest and rowing weights, and, after a sponge-bath, if he had gone by rapid transit to his office, he would have found his work of a very different color, easier to do, and taking less time to perform it. The view for some time held by Hartwell of the Johns Hopkins University, Sargent of Harvard, and others, that arm-exercise prevents, or does away with, nervous irritability, and at the same time increases the absolute capacity for mental work, has not been sufficiently urged or accepted. The remedy for this state of things is to cause every man and woman to realize the importance of arm-exercise. Make it compulsory in schools, and popular after leaving school. If one's occupation does not require it in itself, muscular exertion of some kind ought to be taken daily, with the same regularity as

WHY COUGH,

WHEN a few doses of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral will relieve you? Try it. Keep it in the house. You are liable to have a cough at any time, and no other remedy is so effective as this world-renowned preparation. No household, with young children, should be without it. Scores of lives are saved every year by its timely use.

Amanda B. Jenner, Northampton, Mass., writes: "Common gratitude impels me to acknowledge the great benefits I have derived for my children from the use of Ayer's most excellent Cherry Pectoral. I had lost two dear children from croup and consumption, and had the greatest fear of losing my only remaining daughter and son, as they were delicate. Happily, I find that by giving them Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, on the first symptoms of throat or lung trouble, they are relieved from danger, and are becoming robust, healthy children."

"In the winter of 1885 I took a bad cold which, in spite of every known remedy, grew worse, so that the family physician considered me incurable, supposing me to be in consumption. As a last resort I tried Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and, in a short time, the cure was complete. Since then I have never been without this medicine. I am fifty years of age, weigh over 180 pounds, and attribute my good health to the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral."—G.W. Youker, Salem, N. J.

"Last winter I contracted a severe cold, which by repeated exposure, became quite obstinate. I was much troubled with hoarseness and bronchial irritation. After trying various medicines, without relief, I at last purchased a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. On taking this medicine, my cough ceased almost immediately, and I have been well ever since."—Rev. Thos. B. Russell, Secretary Holston Conference and P. E. of the Greenville District, M. E. C., Jonesboro, Tenn.

DESERVING OF CONFIDENCE.

There is no article which so richly deserves the entire confidence of the community as BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES. Those suffering from Asthmatic and Bronchial Diseases, Coughs and Colds should try them. They are universally considered superior to all other articles used for similar purposes. The late Rev. Henry Ward Beecher said of them: "I have never changed my mind respecting them from the first, except I think yet better of that which I began by thinking well of. I have also commended them to friends, and they have proved extremely serviceable."

Masonic Salvation, as taught by its standard authors. This pamphlet is a compilation from standard Masonic works, in proof of the following proposition: Freemasonry claims to be a religion that saves men from all sin, and purifies them for heaven. 111 pages, price, postpaid, 20 cents.

Freemasonry at a Glance illustrates every sign, grip and ceremony of the first three degrees. Paper cover, 32 pages. Single copy, six cents.

Masonic Outrages. Compiled by Rev. H. H. Hinman. Showing Masonic assault on lives of seceders, on reputation, and on free speech; its interference with justice in courts, etc. Postpaid, 20 cents.

Prof. J. G. Carson, D. D., on Secret Societies. A most convincing argument against fellowshipping Freemasons in the Christian church. 10 cents each.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Pres. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents. Paper cover, 35 cents.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; or FREEMASONRY SELF-CONVICTED. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. 207 pages. Postpaid, 40 cents each.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. 15 cents each.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the GRAND LODGE OF ILLINOIS. Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. H. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each.

History of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. 25 cents each.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' LETTERS on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Price, cloth, $1.00. Paper, 35 cents.

Hon. Thurlow Weed on the Morgan ABDUCTION. This is the legally attested statement of this eminent Christian journalist and statesman concerning the unlawful seizure and confinement of Capt. Morgan in Canandaigua jail, his removal to Fort Niagara and subsequent drowning in Lake Ontario. 5 cents each.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene. In cloth, 75 cents. Paper covers, 40 cents.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Pres't J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen 50 cents.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. James W. Hams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District North western Iowa Conference, M. E. Church.—A seceding Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion. A clear, cutting argument against the lodge, from a Christian standpoint. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. W. P. M'Nary, pastor United Presbyterian Church, Bloomington, Ind. This is a very clear, thorough, candid and remarkably concise Scriptural argument on the character of Freemasonry. Five cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Stearns' Inquiry into the Nature and Tendency of Freemasonry. With an Appendix treating on the truth of Morgan's Exposition and containing remarks on various points in the character of Masonry, and a Dialogue on the necessity of exposing the lodge. 338 pages; cloth, 60 cents each; per dozen, $5.00. Paper covers, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.00.

FARM NOTES.

MOUNTAIN HOMES.

The French government has placed in the great exhibition at Paris a very interesting series of methods and plans for the restoration of waste lands, and particularly for the transformation of barren mountain-sides into fertile farms, by means of terraces, rising one above another. A lofty and barren mountain may, by these methods, be changed into a beautiful and fertile pyramid, encircled by scores of belts of narrow, green fields, watered from reservoirs placed near the summit.

Thus the waste and lonely mountain may become the home of a numerous population. In short, an entire great range like the Alleghanies, with hundreds on hundreds of peaks, can be converted into a chain of populous towns.

Those persons who, with Dr. Malthus, have feared that the earth may become over-peopled, would do well to study the capacities of mountain ranges, in the light of these recent French engineering enterprises.

For example, a mountain six thousand feet in height may be surrounded by a hundred terraces of stone work, each supporting level belts of fertile soil, one above another, varying in width from twenty yards upwards, according to the steepness of the mountain-side.

Water for irrigation is brought down in pipes from the reservoirs above, or hoisted by wind power or solar engines, from streams below.

Mountains thus "restored" offer most picturesque and healthy sites for homes upon the terraces, and the drainage and other sanitary works can easily be rendered almost perfect. Such improved mountain-sides, too, are capable of producing a very wide range of foods, from sub-tropical fruits at the base, or lower-most terraces, to the hardiest of cereals and vegetables near the summit, and these products can be readily exchanged by the people on the different terraces, one with another.

Flights of steps and even inclined railways may lead upward from one stage of gardens to another, and it is easy to see how a single mountain, not very large and not very high, may become the prosperous home of a healthy, self-supporting population of many thousand people.—Youth's Companion.

HABITS OF INDUSTRY.

Don't think the children too young. As soon as they can understand and perform some slight tasks insist upon their doing them. Have some daily tasks suitable to the age of the child, and see that they are performed. It sometimes becomes monotonous and requires time and patience, but it begets habits of industry and self-reliance. I once heard a Christian minister state that he owed his success in life to his mother, who taught him when a child to be industrious. Among other things he was required every night to pick up a basket of chips. His mother reminded him of it for several nights, when she left it for him to recollect himself, which he did for some time. One night, getting very much interested in play, he forgot it until after dark. Beginning to prepare for bed, his mother remarked: "Willie, you will have to pick your chips." "But it's dark, mother," he replied. "You must pick up your chips, my son," was the rejoinder, in such a tone that he knew resistance to be useless. He went out and picked the chips, and "never after that," said he, "did Willie forget his chips." To carry out the rules as this mother did made a self-reliant, industrious man. Many of us are too indulgent and our children suffer thereby. I have in mind a mother who thought her boy too young to work until almost in his teens, when she found, to her astonishment, that it was impossible to set him at any thing and keep him at it. He hadn't the habit of working, and hasn't to this day acquired it, though he has arrived at manhood. An idle boy will make a shiftless man.—Western Rural.

The Fall of the Christians: An Historical Romance of Japan in the 17th Century. By Prof. W. C. Kitchin, Ph. D.

"The Fall of the Christians" is a history of the desperate struggle of Christianity against Paganism in Japan over two hundred and fifty years ago, as related in ancient manuscripts discovered by the author. There were then several thousands of Christians in Japan, and the attempt to exterminate them led to one of the most sanguinary struggles recorded in history. The heroism of the Christians, both men and women, and their fortitude under the most appalling dangers, as portrayed by Professor Kitchin, will enlist the sympathies of the civilized world.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

Herbert Ward, Stanley's Companion.

Herbert Ward, the companion of Stanley in his explorations in Africa, is one of the few men connected with Stanley's African explorations who has ever returned alive from the "Dark Continent." Mr. Ward's articles running through eight numbers of the "Ledger" are of the most intensely interesting description, and cover five years of his adventures in Africa, and they will be illustrated by sketches made by Mr. Ward, and by the reproduction of photographs taken by him in Africa. These pictures will throw much light upon the manners and customs of the hitherto unknown cannibal tribes of Africa.

Life in British America, By Rev. E. R. Young.

Being the adventures and experiences of Rev. E. R. Young, the celebrated missionary, and his wife during their residence in the Polar region twelve hundred miles north of St. Paul, in which Dr. Young narrates how he tamed and taught the native wild Indians of the Northwest; how he equipped himself for and how he made his perilous sledging and hazardous canoe trips when visiting all the Indian settlements within five hundred miles of his home.

Nihilism in Russia, By Leo Hartmann, Nihilist.

Leo Hartmann, a fugitive from Russian authorities, has been connected with the most daring feats of the Russian Nihilists. Mr. Hartmann shows how the intelligent people of Russia are becoming Nihilists in consequence of the despotism of the form of government. A participant in plots to kill the Czar, such as the blowing up of the Winter Palace, he is able to give true information as to how this and other great schemes were accomplished. The situation in Russia is sufficient to increase the love of every true American for our form of government.

Into Mischief and Out, By Elizabeth Stuart Phelps.

This is a story of college life. It describes, in a graphic manner, the troubles which overtake bright students who get into mischief, and their skillful manoeuvres to evade the consequences of their conduct.

The Character of the New York Ledger.

The New York Ledger directs its efforts towards crowding out that trashy and injurious literature which is poisoning the minds of American youth. The Ledger appeals to the intelligence of the people, and depends for its support on that taste which prevails for innocent and amusing entertainment and healthful instruction. The Ledger will contain the best Serial and Short Stories, Historical and Biographical Sketches, Travels, Wit and Humor, and everything interesting to the Household.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

CHICAGO.

The three expert witnesses who testified for the state in the Cronin case on the subject of blood corpuscles, present bills calling for $150, $275, and $260.

The Woman's Alliance decided to attend the meeting of the city council in a body and introduce a petition for the erection of thirty new school buildings during the coming year and an official enumeration of the children of school age, and asking for a more stringent enforcement of the law against the sale of tobacco and cigarettes to minors. The reasons given for the erection of the new school buildings are that 14,000 children in the city can now attend school but one session a day, and that the board of education cannot enforce compulsory education.

The police authorities are at last moving for the suppression of gambling, which has been unrestricted since Mayor Cregier came into office. But the effort is begun in such a half-hearted way that it does little credit to the new superintendent of police.

COUNTRY.

During 1889 immigrants to the number of 315,228 landed at Castle Garden, or 68,367 less than the previous year. The class of immigrants in '89 is said to be superior to that of '88. This report is gratifying.

During the year 1889 failures in the United States numbered 10,882, with liabilities of $148,784,337. The failures during the last seven days numbered 322.

A meeting of prominent colored men of the State was held Thursday night at Columbia, S. C., at which resolutions were passed condemning the Barnwell massacre, but advising Negroes to remain quiet and let the authorities vindicate the law. The colored people were advised to abandon Barnwell county and the lawless sections and move to other parts of the State.

Hon. George H. Boker, poet and playwright, who was minister to Turkey during General Grant's second Presidential term, died Thursday morning in his residence at Philadelphia.

A storm at St. Louis Wednesday night blew down an electric light wire. A dog and a horse that touched it were instantly killed, and three or four persons who came slightly in contact with it were knocked insensible.

An ordinance has been passed at Frankfort, Ky., prohibiting the sale of cigarettes within the corporation limits.

Milwaukee takes especial pride, alas, in the brewing industry. There was an increase of 85,283 barrels over last year, the product of '88 being 500,016 barrels. One sixth of the beer drank in Chicago is furnished by Milwaukee.

At a secret meeting on Monday of Democratic editors at Baltimore, Md., it was decided to oppose the adoption of the Australian ballot system. Senator Gorman, who was present, strongly opposed the system, declaring that it was "a bill to throw the Democratic party in the rear."

Alexander Hamilton, a grandson of the first Secretary of the Treasury, died Monday morning at his home at Irving-on-the-Hudson in his 79th year.

A fatal and destructive snowslide occurred at Sierra City, Cal., Jan. 3, whereby nine people lost their lives—seven women and one boy and an unknown Chinaman. Four houses were almost entirely wrecked, including the Roman Catholic church. The snowslide commenced at Sierra Buttes peak and swept with terrific force, carrying everything before it.

Eighteen carloads of provisions and clothing left Wichita, Kan., Wednesday, for distribution among the sufferers in Stevens, Morton and Hodgman counties.

The government gauge records the lowest state of the Mississippi that has ever been known here, registering a foot below the low-water mark, and river men assert that the stream could be waded here at almost any point.

While suffering from influenza Wednesday at Canton, Ohio, Paul Young, aged 20, committed suicide with a revolver. He was a son of Col. J. J. Young, President of the Bolton Steel Company.

Edward Smith was shot and fatally wounded by Charles Self at a saloon dance at Hanna, Ind., Tuesday night. The crowd drove Self and his wife out of town and destroyed his saloon.

Dr. Paul Hoffman, Assistant Superintendent of Schools, in New York city, was taken to Bellevue Hospital Saturday morning a raving maniac from the effects of an attack of the grippe, from which he had been suffering for the past three days.

Six German families of Waltham, Mower county, Minn., numbering between twenty-five and thirty persons, are down with trichiniasis. One death has resulted, and several of the other sufferers are not expected to live.

FOREIGN.

A sudden change in temperature at Paris last week greatly increased the number of cases and deaths from influenza. Streets were deserted in the evening, theaters were empty, and shops were closed two hours earlier than usual. Few wealthy people remain in the city. There were 422 deaths Jan. 2. The Chicago News says: Persons in robust health can ignore the approach of the unpleasant epidemic if they like, but those to whom existence at best is a struggle, cannot take too great care of themselves at this time.

The American colony of London have decided to present a testimonial to Henry M. Stanley on his arrival. The testimonial will be an electro-silver shield, having the coat of arms of the United States for its center, around which will be grouped panels bearing representations of incidents in the explorer's career.

From letters and documents found concealed in the clothing of the notorious nihilist, Pierra Gross, recently arrested at Warsaw, evidence is obtained against many persons high in imperial favor and authority, contemplating not the assassination of the Czar alone, but the murder of the entire reigning family of Russia as well. Already many of the conspirators have been taken into custody. Several of the implicated persons were apprehended while attempting to leave the country.

The Vatican is reported in receipt of a handsome windfall in the shape of a legacy of $3,400,000 left to the Pope by Baron Lilienthal, an eccentric banker of Jewish origin.

At a fireman's exhibit at Havana, Cuba, Sunday, twenty-two firemen were injured, three of them fatally. After a wooden structure which had been erected for the occasion had been set on fire it was found that the water supply had been tampered with, and the men were obliged to jump for their lives.

Princess Bismarck and Princess Rottenburg are seriously ill with "la grippe." Many deaths are reported at Berlin. The Dowager Empress Augusta is suffering with influenza. The influenza is spreading in the provinces. Business is partially suspended, and in many places the school-houses have been converted into hospitals.

The African Lake company has petitioned Lord Salisbury to take instant measures to protect the interests of British subjects in Nyassa land. This will probably precipitate active measures against Portugal, as the period of delay accorded to that country to give satisfactory explanation regarding the outrages to the British flag expires on Jan. 12, when a full apology will be demanded.

London dispatches say that the country from which the most startling rumors are launched just now is Spain. Two or three new ministries are formed there daily, if one can believe correspondents, and revolutions are kept on tap to be produced when a sensation is demanded. The last story is that the late fire at the Opera House, supposedly due to the mismanagement of the electrical lighting apparatus, was a murderous plot to create a panic, during which the Queen Regent and the Infanta Isabella were to be gotten rid of by personal endeavor, if fire and smoke proved insufficient.

"La grippe," the epidemic influenza, seems equally prevalent and more destructive of life than did a similar scourge in 1843. It was then called "the Tyler grip," and served to emphasize the unpopularity of the chief magistrate John Tyler. Many have thought that epidemic influenza is a presage of cholera; but this idea seems to rest on no solid foundation. In any case it is to be regarded as a Divine visitation, and ought to lead us to humiliation and repentance of individual and national sins.

The unseemly scramble for the United States senatorship in Ohio, which has for weeks absorbed the attention of politicians and almost filled the papers of that State, has doubtless resulted in the election of Mr. Brice, who resides in New York, but owns property in Lima, Ohio. Of six or eight candidates, none had special claims for fitness other than a devotion to his party. Several are millionaires, but Brice is thought to be richest. It indicates an unhealthy state of society when election to an important office is either dictated by the saloon, determined in the lodge, or bought by money, as it is generally believed this election to be. Indeed, there are but few elections in which some of these influences do not have an important bearing.

The title, "Father of the House," has long been borne by Judge Kelley, of Pennsylvania, from his long continuous service in Congress. Last week he gave up his title and his life to tobacco cancer. He has been for some time in feeble health, but his real condition was made public but a few days before his death. He had been suffering, it is said, for five years from an irritation on the inside of the right lower jaw caused by incessant use of tobacco. Several years since a severe operation was performed in Paris, which promised to give permanent relief, but last spring the fatal disease reappeared, and his health steadily failed. Mr. Kelley often admitted the effect of his tobacco habit, and once told a friend that for twenty years he had never retired without a quid of tobacco in his mouth. The conspicuous examples of the fatality of the tobacco habit, first among whom are General Grant and Emperor Frederick, should begin to have their influence upon young men. But first of all the Christian church should be astir to inform men of this evil, arouse their consciences, and separate it from the communion table.

The long agony of securing juries in the Cronin and anarchist cases, incline the Chicago people to hail an innovation by Judge Horton last week in one of our courts. Believing that the laws of the State give the privilege, he astonished the lawyers in a case by announcing that he would examine the jury himself and if the lawyers had any questions to suggest they could be given to him. In the first case he had a jury sworn in in fifteen minutes. Judge Horton is satisfied, and so are the taxpayers, that there is a vast waste in giving lawyers unbounded liberties in questioning jurors. The celebrated case of Prof. Webster, who murdered Dr. Barker in Boston many years ago, was tried by a jury thus impanneled.

The falling off in immigration during 1889 of 68,367 is nearly one-sixth of the total number of arrivals the year before. While we are unwilling to withhold our traditional Yankee welcome to all who may be inclined to come into our citizenship, yet there is undoubted satisfaction in this news. The number of immigrants is not only less, but their character is better. From Italy the falling off was 15,000, and this is among a class that would live here in no better circumstances than in the old country. We still hold that the safest check to unwelcome immigration would be a thorough enforcement of our laws; and, if anything more was needed, to shut away the offices from foreigners for double the time now required.

One election cannot settle a question any more than one swallow can make a summer. The November State election in Iowa, because it placed a Democratic governor in the chair caused a trembling in the host, and men began to hedge on the temperance question and predict that Iowa would repeal her prohibition laws. But the State temperance convention in Des Moines last Thursday put iron into every spine. Over a thousand representatives came up from all parts of the State. Dr. Magoun of Grinnell College presented the resolutions. Rev. Dr. Emory Miller was temporary, and Judge Weaver permanent chairman. General J. B. Weaver, so long representative in Congress of the Greenback parties, said in his speech: "Lead on in this fight and I will be with you to the end. I am a prohibitionist, and always have been. When a man tells me there is more liquor sold in Iowa than under the old license law he takes me for a fool or a blind man." In the evening a spontaneous ovation was given to Governor Larrabee, who spoke briefly, charging the convention to stand firm and maintain the ground they had gained. He said that those who interpret the result of our late election as a verdict against prohibition make a terrible mistake. The law has been better enforced in Iowa than any high license law in any State.

The colored leagues of the United States hold a national convention in Chicago this week opening on Wednesday. The object of the convention is to suggest and put in execution some plan to benefit the colored people, and especially those in the South. The leagues embrace many of the most capable colored men in the country, and the convention discusses questions of National interest. Our Masonic Democratic mayor Cregier has been invited to extend a welcome to the delegates, but as his insincerity is now being acknowledged by all classes, the incongruity of the request is of little moment. T. Thomas Fortune of New York is reputed to be leading the present movement; but last October W. E. Mathews, a colored officeholder under the last administration, on his return from Europe addressed an open letter to Hon. John E. Langston, urging him to lead in the establishment of an Afro-American League to secure the protection and promote the interests of the colored race. Mr. Langston responded favorably, and Judge Tourgee and John R. Lynch, and other friends of the Negro, approved the plan. The Chicago meeting will probably put a movement into shape which will have great influence on the future of the race and of our country as well.

WHERE ART THOU?

BY MRS. MARIA L. COUCH.

To-day, Christian friend, while the battle against sin and error waxes hot, and great moral conflicts rage fiercely around us, the voice of God is echoing in your soul, Where art thou? Are you bravely marching in the front ranks of God's battalions, few in numbers though they may be? If so, you will not, like the primal pair, guiltily shrink from the voice that bids you stand for truth and right, however hopeless the cause may seem, however formidable the opposing forces, and plausible and specious their pleas.

Henry Clay Trumbull, editor of the Sunday-school Times, and one of our clearest and most lucid ethical writers, says: "Show to any one skilled in even the elements of geometry the segment of a circle, and the whole circle will at once stand before his mental vision in ideal completeness. To the prophetic, the reminiscent, the creative imagination, the acorn stands for the oak, the fossil for a world long dead, the segment for the circle of which it is but a part. To the clear-seeing spiritual vision, every moral act is the segment of an uncompleted circle. The completed circle belongs to the sphere of heaven, or to the sphere of the infernal. Let the moral act be seen in its true relations, and at once, to the spiritual imagination, the circle to which the act belongs stands completed. There is no question here of past, present, or future, of cause or effect. The future simply flashes out as the completed circle of which the present is but a segment; the act and its moral issues flash out together as one indivisible whole." Do we half realize that every moral act helps on the cause, either of Christ or of Satan?

Another writer has very beautifully and forcibly said: "The dewdrop kisses the fatness of His soil, and the breeze fans it, and the delicate fingers of light gather it up, and pack it away in the golden grain. Then the harvester harvests it; and the thresher threshes it. Now are the mills ready to grind it; and mothers are waiting to bake it; and children hungry to eat it." Here we have segments that circle around to the heavens.

"But the brewer comes; with his key of gold he opens the granary; he empties the bins; he extorts the life of the beautiful grain through the still, or poisons it in the vat, and from his tanks baptizes the world with death; while the mill stands still, and mothers wring their hands in agony, and starvelings wail in want." And here are segments of a circle that encompasses hell.

To-day, "the golden key" of the brewer has enhanced the price of some of our cereals, barley and rye, for instance, until to sell in the open market is but to pour them into the brewer's vat. Friend, where art thou, on this question? Having been co-workers with God in producing the beauteous fields of waving grain, will he hold you guiltless if you become a partner with the brewer or distiller in transferring the amber grain which his glorious sunlight and sparkling raindrops have fostered into a segment of that circle which takes hold upon the bottomless pit?

Again the fermented juice of the grape is presented as a temperance beverage, an antidote to the use of stronger alcoholic potions; of which doctrine Miss Kate Field has been an able exponent in many of our towns and cities, and has received from our present administration her reward in the appointment of some of her near relatives to lucrative offices.

But would you know of what circle the wine cup is a segment, let the morality of the towns embowered among the vine-clad hills of California answer! Sacramento, the capital of the wine-growing State, with a population of 30,000, is said to have four hundred saloons and eight churches, and four of these are without ministers.

One living among the thirty thousand acres of wine grapes in Sonoma county, in the Coast Range, reports as follows: "All the people here say that wine makes 'tremens' quicker and injures the mind more than whisky." Another in a different locality speaks of the "bloated, red-faced, gross-looking specimens of humanity" among the devotees of "pure, mild California wines." While a gentleman recently returned from a tour of investigation in the vineyard-surrounded towns, among the foothills of the Sierra Nevadas, says of wine: "It is a very devil's broth, that paralyzes and demoralizes everything it touches."

Then there is high license! Do you say it is impossible to enact prohibitory statutes now, therefore we will do the next best thing? - We will erect barriers; we will restrict and regulate with high license.

However much sophistry you may employ, the fact remains, you cannot restrict and regulate the traffic without legalizing it. To legalize means to authorize, to protect. Protection for the saloon, but none for the home! The saloonist having paid a stipulated sum for the privilege of selling, knows that so far he is intrenched behind the strong arm of the law, and in many instances uses his position to insolently defy every law. The Chicago Daily News of July 22 last, says that on the preceding Sabbath over four thousand saloons were wide open in high license Chicago, and entire districts in the heart of the city were described as "given over to liquor, to licentiousness and general iniquity." In short, "it was a Sunday of carousing, of dissipation, and general recklessness."

But does some one retort, "Prohibition does not prohibit?"

The secretary of the National Prison Association estimates that the census next year will show a prison population of 100,000, which is 30,000 more than was shown by the census of 1880. Kansas, Iowa and Maine are the only States which have not contributed to this increase. There crime has actually and steadily decreased, and in many places the jails of these three prohibition States are perfectly empty. This cannot be said of any of the high license States, which demonstrates the fact that, while prohibition does prohibit, your restrictive laws do not restrict. Police statistics show that Omaha, after eight years' experience under a rigidly enforced $1,000 high license law, has nearly twice as many arrests for drunkenness, and for other crimes per thousand inhabitants as has any low license city in the country, including New York, Buffalo, Cincinnati and New Orleans.

Perhaps you say these cities surpass others in wickedness and do not furnish a fair criterion. Well, we will take you to Puritan Boston. What has been her record? A recent correspondent of the Inn-keeper's Journal, a saloon organ, says: "Just as much liquor and beer is drank in Boston to-day, as before the high license law. The lucky men who obtained licenses are doing a thriving business, and their places are continually crowded." Which statement is corroborated by the criminal statistics of the city. Boston, under high license this year, had during the months of May, June and July, 732 more arrests for drunkenness than during the same months last year under low license. The Deputy Chief of Police of Lowell, the second city of the State of Massachusetts, reports that with the same police force as the previous year, the arrests have increased 12½ per cent, under the restrictive high license law. Lincoln, Nebraska; Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and many other towns, have a record equally damaging to high license. While the Quaker City of Brotherly Love has had, under a high license law, sixteen murders in four months, all traceable, directly or indirectly, to the use of intoxicants.

One of the strongest arguments of the press in favor of high license is that it diminishes the number of saloons. The New York Tribune of March 22 says, "The city of Joliet, Ill., is a shining example of the wisdom and effectiveness of high license," and further states that, since the $1,000 license went into effect, the number of saloons has decreased from 127 to 55. But the Tribune neglects to give statistics furnished by Charles F. Blood, Chief of Police of Joliet, showing that during the same period, the arrests for drunkenness have increased from 271 to 831, the ratio being more than threefold. Truly a shining example of the "effectiveness of high license" so far as aiding the liquor interest is concerned.

Then of what avail is a restrictive law that lessens only the number of saloons, but not the tide of ruin and of woe that they pour forth? It is like concentrating all the little rivulets in a given territory in one big reservoir. The pressure becomes too great for your high license dam, and like the pent-up waters of the Conemaugh valley, the accumulated flood breaks over, and sweeps and swirls onward with increased volume and accelerated velocity; a very besom of destruction, compared with which the Johnstown disaster sinks into insignificance.

You would shrink in horror at the thought of voting to let loose that flood, in which a few thousands of the devoted inhabitants of the Conemaugh valley found a watery grave; yet you vote for this other flood that carries three millions of our fellow Americans to a drunkard's grave, and far more terrible, to a drunkard's eternal doom. For when you give your vote to either of the dominant political parties, you sustain those whose only temperance policy is, on the one hand, to let this liquid stream of damnation flow unrestrained, and, on the other hand, over the dam of high license. A dam erected as a pretended step toward prohibition, but really as a delusive opiate for the consciences of temperance men, and to rejoice the hearts of the rumsellers by defeating prohibitory amendments, thus shrewdly retaining the votes of both factions. What other interpretation can you give to the large majorities against prohibitory amendments in the overwhelmingly Republican States of Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Pennsylvania? Rev. R. H. Colburn, of the M. E. church, says: "High license is Satan assuming the form of an angel of light that he may deceive the very elect. It is intended to give the saloon an influence and power in this country such as it never had before."

Again, Christian voter, where art thou? If you are voting with and for a political party that licenses drunkard-making, are not you a drunkard-maker? Look around you at the wrecked lives, the breaking hearts, the untold anguish entailed upon the innocent by drunkard-making. Think of the myriad of souls lost forever through the drink habit. Then may God flash upon your vision your ballot as a segment of this circle, and say if you can that it belongs to the sphere of the heavenly.

You say you believe prohibition is right, and you would vote for it if it were possible to carry it. Well, if every one who has said this should vote for it, it would be carried. While none of you are responsible for your neighbors' sins of omission or commission, you are responsible for your own individual acts. It is an axiom in both moral and civil law that every man is responsible for the results that naturally grow out of his own conduct.

But do you say you think it wrong to waste your vote? Yet you have for years voted with the Republicans or Democrats, and as one party or the other has suffered defeat each year, you have, as citizens of the State of New York, wasted a great many votes according to your definition of the term. And when your ballot has helped sustain one of the greatest sins of the age, it has been worse than wasted. Some of the anti-saloon Republicans of whom Albert Griffin, ex-editor of the New York Mail and Express, is a representative, are so appalled at the enormity of this sin that they propose to disfranchise themselves.

But no vote for a principle is ever lost. It is a segment of that circle which takes hold upon the throne of God. Though the immediate results may oftentimes seem discouraging, yet it is far more glorious to suffer defeat in a righteous cause, than to help the wicked to triumph. Who of you would not have preferred to be one of the Union army at her Bull Run rather than with the victorious rebels? Caleb and Joshua may be detained forty years in the wilderness by faint-hearted companions, but ultimately they will come into the Promised Land, because, when in a small minority they voted, "Let us go up and possess it, for we are well able to overcome it." But the sin of the delay, and all the evil growing out of it, is chargeable to the faithless ones who made their ballots say, "There be giants in the land, in whose sight we are but as grasshoppers," and who, in consequence of their sin, left their bones to bleach in the wilderness.

But do we hear some good Republican say, "To vote for prohibition is to commit the unpardonable sin of putting the Democrats in power?" Rev. Dr. I. J. Lansing, of Worcester, Mass., at a recent debate in the Brooklyn Academy of Music, said, "This is a specious argument. Under Republican rule free rum can not be shown to be better than under Democratic rule. For my part as a prohibition Republican I prefer to let it be Democratic rum. If the State is to be disgraced by such a record, by all means give the other party the infamy." Dr. Lansing also said, "If you vote the third party ticket you will be told you are 'defeating your friends.' If it comes to that, temperance men and prohibitionists in the Republican party are defeated already." And we add, if they continue to vote the same ticket with the saloonist they vote to prolong their own defeat." Canon Farrar says:

"We can help by that secret physical law which is called the super-imposition of small impacts. You have seen in some lecture room a vast beam of iron hanging over the ceiling, and the professor taking some tiny pellet of pith or of cork and throwing it at the great iron beam. Perhaps you have thought his efforts ridiculous and you have laughed at him, but he throws his tiny pellet of pith or of cork again and again, and at last the great iron mass begins to thrill, and then to tremble, and then to shiver, and then to sway and oscillate, and then swing to and fro, and in this rhythmic motion of force, derived from the aggregated and collective force of all those many single impacts, you have a force greater than could have been given to it by a giant arm."

Little band of prohibitionists, the liquor power is the great and apparently immovable iron beam; your ballots the tiny pellets of pith or of cork. But do not relax your efforts; though at present they may seem as futile as the first demonstrations of the professor, they are being felt. Already the saloon power begins to thrill and tremble beneath the force of your silent impacts.

Listen to the prophecy of good in this Balaam curse from the columns of the Chicago Champion—champion of the liquor dealers:

"If you would read your papers you would keep posted on and alarmed at the slow but constant, active and dangerous development of this slimy, venomous reptile, this prohibition anaconda, which ever seeks to wind its gigantic coils around the body of the liquor traffic closer and tighter, and unless stopped in its deadly work, will yet squeeze the life-blood, figuratively speaking, out of you, crush your bones into a pulpy mass, and, fattened on your carcasses, will raise its heads triumphantly, yes vindictively and threateningly over your distilleries, your breweries and your warehouses."

To which, omitting the word "vindictively," we say Amen. "With malice toward none" we pray, God speed the hour.

SPLENDID BLASPHEMY.

BY REV. A. K. DUFF.

A singular passage occurs in the annual address of the retiring High Priest of Chapter 183, Royal Arch Masons, Le Roy, N. Y. It is singular in that it exhibits a bold attempt to conciliate public sentiment in and about the memorable scene of the Morgan murder. The remarkable uprising of 1827 is not forgotten in these parts. It would be singular to know that the wild excitement which gave the Anti-mason party 33,000 votes in 1828, 70,000 in 1829, and 128,000 in 1830, electing their Governor in the Keystone State, and exposing their hideous outlawry all around the globe, would be so soon forgotten in the very center which gave rise and shape to the movement. The existence of the Le Roy order, since revival from the smouldering ashes of the ruined lodges in this section, has been less than a quarter century. They have struggled through these years under difficulties of the most trying nature. Now they muster out the usual effrontery common to other parts of the land and attempt to foist themselves upon the community as an institution coming down the corridor of many centuries fraught with blessing to civilization and to mankind. They hope their dark days here are all over, and only pleasant ones await them in the future. The High Priest (?) reminds the young that they are "now out of the rough waters and the breakers of the heavy and turbulent sea," (what a concession!) and exhorts them "to be vigilant in guiding the old ship safe into the harbor of all that is good and noble on earth." But the shade of the martyr of Batavia still rises up to rebuke the outrage, and there is to be rough sailing for Masonry in this section so long as a remembrance of its murderous plottings lingers on the brow of the closing generation. Where the recollections of the Morgan tragedy are so vivid and so current, the following is nothing short of splendid blasphemy:

"Hail Masonry, to noble deeds inclined,
Thy glorious march hath joined the march of mind.
From time remote thy glorious ark hath stood
The best asylum of the great and good.
Through years to come the glorious ark shall stand;
Through years to come shall march the brilliant band;
Till yon bright sun shall lose its radiant light,
And the whole universe shall sink in night."

"More than three thousand years have gone down the tide of time since Masonry began her glorious march. The whirlwinds of war have passed over the earth spreading desolation and death. Monuments of grandeur have crumbled into dust. The sceptre hath fallen from the palsied arm of the monarch, yea, kings have tumbled from their lofty thrones and empires have passed away, amidst the splendid drama of destruction, since the sublime edifice of Masonry first dipped its spire in the clouds and shed its brilliancy on the benighted bosom of the world. Hand in hand with science it has crossed the broad waters of the Atlantic and set its standard on the shore of Massachusetts. And now hand in hand with liberty, it unfurls the white banner of peace and innocence and establishes the empire of Christian benevolence where the Indian in his idolatry once bowed his knees to the setting sun and offered up his human sacrifice to the Great Spirit of storm and darkness. Aided by the light of Masonry, in conjunction with that of science and all those brilliant luminaries which illuminated Greece and Rome, America will ere long astonish mankind and outstrip the world in the glorious march of mind."

A NATIONAL CAUSE.

The main object of Christianity is to destroy the works of darkness by bringing them to the light, that all may see their hideousness. "Men loved darkness rather than light because their deeds were evil," and this is the great cause of their condemnation. It is time all Christians were led to see the utter inconsistency of fellowship with societies, whose work must be kept in the dark, with membership in the church of Christ, whose primary object is to destroy such modes of operation.

No doubt many good men, losing sight of the nature of that warfare which they have entered as Christians, have unwittingly by one pretense and another been inveigled into fellowship with some secret association. It is believed all such persons need is to have the truth set in its proper light. Thousands upon thousands were led into the Knights of Labor society by mistaken views of their best interests. When they became better informed by experience as to the workings of that society, and its objects, they abandoned it by the thousand. Yet the whole country suffers to-day by their very serious mistake. Those who cling to it, with the exception of a few leaders and salaried officers, are likely to suffer yet from their leap in the dark.

Now it becomes a most important part of Christian duty, if we love our neighbor as ourselves, to convince men before they enter into those combinations against their neighbors, of the evil and save them from temptation. It is better to save one from jumping into the fire than to pull him out. If we even succeed in doing the latter, which is very doubtful, it will be with great pain and risk.—Christian Instructor.

Secret societies are becoming so numerous as to have nearly exhausted the vocabulary of names. "The Ancient Order of Spiketails," gave an entertainment at the Opera House in Howell, Mich., New Year eve. It is stated that they raised nearly fifty dollars to "help the poor." Ah, yes! The devil is much better pleased that the poor be helped in the name of "Spiketails" than in the name of Christ.—Wesleyan Herald.

MORMONISM A DISLOYAL, SECRET, OATH-BOUND ORDER.

ADDRESS OF REV. D. M'ALLISTER, D.D. LL. D., BEFORE THE BOSTON CONGRESS.

[Concluded.]

1. The first and most manifest deduction from Judge Anderson's decision is that every native-born or naturalized Mormon, adhering to the system, should be disfranchised. The case tried before the United States Court for the Third Judicial District of Utah, was simply that of a number of aliens applying for naturalization and citizenship. The rendering of the court denied their application. They were regarded, on account of their adherence to Mormonism, as unfit to become American citizens. Now, it is anything but just to permit one man to enjoy the rights and privileges of citizenship when he is guilty of the very acts for which another man is excluded from the same rights and privileges. If the oaths and teachings and aims of the system, if the attitude of the system itself toward the government of the United States, were sufficient ground for the denial of the application of aliens for enfranchisement, the same reasons, by the simplest process of deduction, must constitute a sufficient ground for the disfranchisement of Mormons already enfranchised. And while this broader aspect of the subject did not come before the court in this particular case, the matter can not logically stop where it is at present. It is to be hoped that an appeal will be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States. The one bulwark behind which the Mormon leaders would intrench themselves in that case, would be the compact of the written Constitution. This is clear from the manifesto recently sent out. A dispatch from Salt Lake City says! "Wilfred Woodruff, George Q. Cannon and Joseph F. Smith, Apostles of the Mormon church, have issued another manifesto unqualifiedly denying all charges made against the church in the recent hearing before Judge Anderson. So far from any doctrine or teaching of the church being hostile to the United States Government, members of the church are under Divine command to revere the Constitution as a heaven-inspired instrument, and obey as Supreme all laws made in pursuance of its provisions." But defective as our written Constitution is, it is hardly doubtful as to what the decision of the Supreme Court would be. For our highest tribunal to do anything but sustain Judge Anderson would almost drive the loyal Christian citizens of Utah to despair. But no such day of gloom is to be apprehended. The Mormon leaders will probably not appeal. Whether they appeal or not, let the decision do its full work. Let the votes of enfranchised Mormons be challenged; or let their right of franchise be denied before the proper courts on the grounds of the present decision; or, better still, let a bill be introduced into Congress, denying to all Mormons adhering to the disloyal system, the prerogatives of American citizenship.

2. A second deduction from this decision is that Jesuitism and Romanism come under the same condemnation. Principles that are the same, demand the same condemnation, whether found in one system or another. Mormonism teaches, as has been already quoted from the language of the court, "that it is the actual and veritable kingdom of God on earth, not in its fullness, because Christ has not yet come to rule in person, but for the present he rules through the priesthood of the church, who are his vicegerents on earth." Compare the well-known teachings of Jesuitism and Romanism. Their claim is even more stupendous. They insert no qualifying clause "for the present." They make their claim absolute, both now and for all time, for the Pope as God's vicegerent on earth. Nor do they say "not in its fullness," but with unblushing effrontery the claim is made without a jot of abatement that Romanism is the actual kingdom of God on earth in all its fullness, with a Pope, infallible in all matters of faith and morals, ruling as God himself in person, and giving law to all individuals and nations on earth.

Let us quote once more another ground of this decision: "This kingdom is both a temporal and spiritual kingdom, and should rightfully control, and is entitled to the highest allegiance of men in all their affairs." Read this apart from its connection with this matter in hand, and ask what system it describes, and the answer by citizens everywhere, of ordinary intelligence, would be—Romanism. For this is the very description that Romanism gives authoritatively of itself. Witness the well-known articles 23, 24 and 42, of the Papal Syllabus of Errors of 1864. The first of these anathematizes all who say that "the Roman Pontiffs and ecumenical councils have exceeded the limits of their power, have usurped the rights of princes, and have even committed errors in defining matters of faith and morals." The next anathematizes all who say that "the church has not the power of availing herself of force, or any direct or indirect temporal power." Article 42 pronounces its curse upon all, saying that "in the case of conflicting laws between the two powers, the civil law ought to prevail." The recent Baltimore Congress reiterated and applauded with enthusiasm these same principles. The assembly pledged itself to the maintenance of a foreign temporal kingdom in this country. Besides, the administration of the Jesuit oath, and of the oath of all Roman Catholic officials, is the usurpation of the civil function of the state, and the oath binds to the highest allegiance to Romanism as a temporal power. From Rome's own most authoritative utterances, the system is a temporal kingdom set up in the territory of our sovereign nation. It is a system claiming the highest allegiance of subjects of the American government. It assumes to administer a civil oath, or an oath binding to allegiance to Romanism in moral affairs within the sphere of the State. It claims the right to inflict penalties in its inquisitorial procedures, in its persecuting policy generally, and its constant interference with the rights and liberties of American citizens. Multitudes of members of the Roman Catholic church are in reality not consenting members of this disloyal system. They are deluded. Light is kept from them. The penalties of Romanism are employed to drive them from our schools. All they need is a little more light to induce them to renounce the system. But sworn supporters of Romanism and all Jesuits stand condemned before the bar of this judicial decision. Let not loyal American citizens be deceived. Jesuitism and Romanism will be loud in their professions of loyalty. So are the Mormon leaders. But the loyalty that needs such affirmation as that of Mormon manifestoes, or that heard at Baltimore, is to be suspected. The system of Romanism is in its essence as disloyal as Mormonism, and the safety of the Republic demands that it and its sworn adherents be treated accordingly.

3. Another logical sequence is that all secret, oath-bound orders, should be subject to the investigations of our courts of justice, whenever the rights of the people are involved. The secrets of the Endowment House were proclaimed upon the house top. The United States Court asserted its right to know what had been done in those chambers of darkness. One witness who declined to answer was committed for contempt of court. In other instances, when witnesses declined to answer as to the nature of the penalties connected with the oaths which they had sworn, the inquiry was not pressed. The truth was clear without the answer. The essential point is evident. The court probed into the secrets of Mormonism in the interests of justice and the nation's welfare. The Clan-na-Gael conspiracy called for the same kind of investigation. Public justice demanded it. The blood of Dr. Cronin was crying from the ground. Precious rights and liberties were at stake. The oath-bound conspiracy of the assassins, with all the secrets of the clan, so far as they bear on the case in hand, should have been laid open to the gaze of the court and jury. But the secrets of the clan were too sacred to be inquired into by the court. Clues of testimony led up to bolted lodge doors, and were then abruptly cut short. Who can be safe if secret orders, with their blasphemous oaths and horrible penalties, can conspire against a citizen without fear of investigation into their deeds of darkness?

In the Jeannette case at Washington, we have still more recently had another illustration of the same pernicious ruling. The testimony involved secrets of the Universal Confederation of Labor. Justice demanded full investigation in open court. The defendants objected, saying they would rather stand convicted than have these secrets exposed. A compromise was agreed to, and the matters involved were communicated to the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Windom, in a private conference. In other similar cases the Judge has excused witnesses from testifying to anything which, by the obligations of their orders, they were bound to keep secret.

All this is a humiliating subordination of the sovereignty of the nation to another and rival sovereignty set up within its territory. It degrades the state with its oath of loyalty before secret orders, with their acknowledged higher sworn obligations. Men have only to unite in one of these orders and bind themselves by their extra-judicial or voluntary oaths, to keep certain matters secret, no matter how closely they may be related to the rights of fellow-citizens, and our courts of justice are barred from making a full and public investigation, and are therefore incompetent to render just judgment.

The rulings and decision of Judge Anderson, logically followed out, would correct these abuses. They would, in every case, assert the sovereignty of the civil authority. They would compel the witnesses, in spite of their sworn obligations to their secret orders, to testify on every point essential to the case in open court. They would let in the clear sunlight of truth. When lines of testimony led up to the bolted doors and barred windows of secret orders, this decision would burst these bolts and bars, and pour in the noon-tide brightness of the day. Is this not what a free and just government imperatively requires? All hail the dawning of the coming day!

4. The logic of this decision would put Freemasonry and any other similar secret oath-bound order under the ban of the law. In the preceding part of this discussion five essential characteristics were given of the system of Mormonism. Masonry wears every one of these ear-marks of the beast. It asserts itself as a rival sovereign power in our land. Such indisputable Masonic authorities as Mackey, Webb, Morris and A. T. C. Pierson, Sovereign Grand Inspector General of this order of high-titled American nobility, put this beyond all question. They all affirm the Masonic duty of unquestioning obedience to the laws of the order. Individual will and conscience must be surrendered. Says the last-named of the above authors, "If we would be Masons, we must yield private judgment." And this surrender to the sovereign power and authority of Masonry is all the more abject because the despotic commands are unknown. It is a pledge of unqualified slavish obedience to mandates before they are yet given. They may be as bad or worse than the commands of Mormonism, but the loyal Mason's will and judgment have been irrevocably yielded, and the despotism of the system must be obeyed. Such asserting of authority is setting up the most dangerous kind of a temporal kingdom in antagonism to the state, and such yielding to it is disloyalty and treason.

Like Mormonism, again Masonry and similar orders usurp the governmental function of administering an oath. They bind their deluded subjects to obedience by the prostitution of that ordinance which God has given for civil purposes to the state alone. And the same horrible penalties of the oaths of Mormonism are the very penalties of Masonic oaths. Indeed, in these blasphemous oaths, as well as in the garments and ceremonies of the Endowment House, Mormonism is the spawn of Masonry. The founders of the disloyal oath-bound Mormon church received their training in the Masonic lodge. Like Mormonism, too, Masonry perpetuates itself as an organized system, and covers its dark deeds with the same veil of sworn secrecy. Such a system is, in its nature, let its name be what it may, a deadly foe to the openness and candor of free speech, and all other free institutions of government. It honey-combs every department of society and government, threatening the utter collapse of justice in social, political, legislative, judicial and executive life. The oath of the witness, the juror, and the officers of the state and nation generally; the oath of God, with its solemn obligation to duty to our fellow-citizens and loyalty to our country, is trampled under foot by the profane oaths of a secret usurpation and despotism.

Judge Anderson's decision is the gleaming of the dawn along this dark horizon. It affirms with an emphasis that does honor to our courts, the sacredness of citizenship. It declares that this holy trust must not be committed to men who stand bound to selfish and unjust organizations in hostility to the state. Let the logic of truth and justice do its work. Let there be no turning back from the consistent application of these righteous principles until every secret oath-bound order, with its obligations that are disloyalty, and its atrocities that are crime and treason, whether it be Mormonism with its Mountain Meadow massacre, Romanism with its persecutions and inquisitorial torments, the Clan-na-Gael with its butchery of Dr. Cronin, or Masonry with its abduction and murder of Morgan, shall cower as a convicted culprit, under the same fearless and impartial condemnation, before our judicial tribunals.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

La grippe in Boston—A doctor's advice to suffering humanity—Shall New England become New Rome?—Woman's work in Boston—The Salvation Army—The Mercy Home in Manchester—Brockton's new temperance Mayor—The devil's latest move to shield Masonry—Some lodge notes.

The mortality in Boston last week exceeded anything before known in the history of the city; and yesterday occurred the largest number of deaths ever recorded for one day, the majority being due to attacks of la grippe, complicated with pneumonia, bronchitis and kindred disorders.

Of course there is abundance of theorizing regarding the origin and nature of the epidemic, but remembering the terrible inundations in China, with their appalling loss of life, and catastrophes in other parts of the globe, including our Johnstown flood, it is not difficult to find exciting causes for this pestilence which a few weeks since started out of the Finnish marshes with the angel of death so closely following in its train. Whether it be "the African fever broken loose," as some suggest, or the mysterious "sweating sickness" of the Middle Ages appearing again in a milder form, like all similar distempers it has doubtless a malarial origin, and needs only continued cold weather (of which we have had little or none) to kill the viewless microbes floating about in the atmosphere, and render them innocuous.

The whole medical world is discussing the subject, but with seemingly very small results. If anybody is sanguine enough to think that the dark ages of the profession are entirely over, the words of advice from Prof. Bartholomew, of Jefferson College, which are now going the rounds of the papers, ought to make him wonder instead if we have greatly advanced beyond the days of Galen. I venture to assert that it will be a curiosity a hundred years from now, if our world should stand as long. He tells us that "the best manner to secure immunity from an attack is to inhale sulphuric acid gas daily, and by taking five grains of salicylate of cinchonidine three times a day, and by so living as to avoid taking cold." The last part of the prescription is admirable, though hard to follow, as the most cautious people in this respect are usually the first sufferers. If the attack has begun he advises one or two grains of calomel at night, more inhalation of sulphuric acid gas, besides inhaling in large quantities steam containing encalyptol, and adds: "the insufflation of resorcin by dusting over the entire area of affected parts is also recommended. For internal remedy atrophine in solution; also tincture of belladonna may be used."

A good way to commit suicide would be to have la grippe, and then try all Dr. Bartholomew's remedies, many of which our best physicians only use with caution. No wonder that in disgust at such barbarous jargon the eyes of the people are being more and more directed to the Great Physician, and even the irreligious are beginning to dimly discern the truth—that obedience to nature's laws is better than sacrifice to such unknown deities.

Daniel Dougherty, the silver-tongued orator of the late Cleveland administration, made this remarkable statement at the Boston Theater Sunday evening, Dec. 29: "New England, if not becoming New Ireland, is fast becoming New Rome. You might as well try to stop the ebb and flow of the tide as to stop the march of Catholicity." Of course it is easy enough to say that this is all in the same line of braggadocio with Toomb's famous saying that "he would call the roll of his slaves on Bunker Hill;" but the Georgia Senator spoke from no vantage ground of possession like that occupied by the distinguished champion of Rome. The English Government under Elizabeth remained blind and deaf to the mine the papal power was preparing for its destruction until the Spanish Armada was fairly anchored in the channel; and Motley tells us that nothing could be more amazing than the apathetic indifference with which the Protestant States of Europe looked on while that terrible thirty years' war, which was to deluge them in blood, was being hatched under the dragon wing of the papacy. Shall the same story be repeated in America? God forbid. Rome has her eye on New England, and is shrewd enough to see that when the land of the Pilgrims falls under her sway she will have the key of the situation; but the spirit of 1620 still lives—if nowhere else, in the patriotic women, who, snubbed by all the daily papers, made a house-to-house canvass, and thus won in the last city election another complete triumph for our free schools. It is also largely due to their efforts that the residents of Boston, which has so long been given over to the party of "rum, Romanism and rebellion," now experience the odd sensation of finding themselves under a new regime. The city government inaugurated last Monday is Republican in all its branches—a thing which has not happened before for many years.

The Salvation Army have lately dedicated a new hall, which they call Salvation Hall, at the West End; with an audience that, according to press reports, filled every nook and corner of the spacious room long before the services began. It is said that the rank and file number over 1,000,000, and that its organization is so perfect that twelve hours is long enough to deliver a message from General Booth's headquarters in London to every one of the Army's soldiers, whether in Hindoostan or Manitoba. Marshal Ballantine Booth, a son of General Booth, is the commander of the American division.

At Manchester, N. H., the Mercy Home for abandoned women was dedicated last Wednesday. This is the institution for which Miss Annie Ray, Manchester's devoted home missionary, pleaded so eloquently at the meeting of the N. H. C. A. in that city two years ago. God speed her and all others engaged in the Christ-like work of saving the outcast and the perishing.

The new Mayor of Brockton, Mass., in his inaugural speech comes out on the same platform with Governor Goodell. He gives notice that "he shall enforce the law without fear or favor, and that if there are any persons in the city who intend to sell liquor in violation of the law and take their chances, they must also take the consequences, as he has ordered the marshal to spare no one." Such utterances from public officials mark the vast progress which prohibition sentiment is making. But it is curious to note how just as soon as the ultimate success of this great cause seems sufficiently assured to allow of some attention being paid to the anti-secret question, the devil—who always tries to protect his own—takes advantage of the new anti-Romanist issue to make honest Protestant Americans think it their duty to shield Masonry because there is a family quarrel between her and the Pope! This is the real secret of F. M. Bradbury's snub of the Boston meeting, and the reason why the British American, which has heretofore accepted Anti-masonic communications, lately refused to print a brief reply to a speech two or three columns long from a Freemason who either falsified or ignored some of the plainest facts of history.

The Lawrence Council of the Royal Conclave of Knights and Ladies are greatly exercised because the papers have published a report of an investigation made by a committee of the lodge into the conduct of one of its members. They are not at present aware of the manner in which it came to be published, but they bitterly denounce the publication as a violation of lodge obligations, and of the constitution of the order. This secret benefit society thus shows itself only a copy of the Clan-na-Gael in miniature.

Rev. W. H. Savery, of Washington Village, lately delivered a discourse to his people in which he reflected severely on secret endowment orders. A synopsis of it was published in the Herald, and the Secretary-General of the American Protective League has taken him severely to task in an open letter, which, however, merely repeats the old stale argument that probably did duty in Noah's day, viz., the prophesied collapse has not yet taken place, and all things continue as they were; therefore it never will, and people can go on, adding story to story in these fraternal orders without any fear. The trouble with Rev. W. H. Savery's anti-lodge sermon was that it did not go far enough. Like most New England ministers he needs more thorough information. To dig to the roots of this monster evil needs a thorough apprehension of the fact that it is an evil and why it is an evil,—a spiritual insight into its depths of iniquity like that given to the prophet Ezekiel when he saw the sun-worshippers profaning the temple of the living God with their secret rites.

REFORM NEWS.

PREPARING FOR A DEBATE.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—After the second lecture at Kirkland, I had another talk with Prof. Gross, the Master of the Kingston lodge of Masons. As he had complained that only one side of the question had been presented in my lectures, I proposed that we hold another meeting for any length of time he might wish, the time to be equally divided between Masonic and Anti-masonic speakers, so as to fully and fairly examine into the merits and demerits of the lodge system. I offered to hold such a meeting at Kirkland, Genoa, Kingston, or Sycamore. I said we would hold the meetings in the Masonic hall at Kingston, or Genoa, or in the Masonic temple at Sycamore, if the lodge brethren were willing, or in any other hall or church we could get.

I proposed that we arrange for the discussion at once. But he wished to consult the "boys," and they were scattered so that he could not see them as soon as that. This was on Monday night, Dec. 23. On Thursday morning I saw him again and renewed my offer. He had not seen the boys, and so could not tell what he would do. As he was reported to have telegraphed for a speaker to confront me at Kirkland, I felt anxious that he should have a chance to bring on any speakers he might select, and that the fairest play should be had by the advocates of the lodge.

The Master had said that if Masonry would not bear investigation let it go to the wall. This was manly, and I felt willing that my objections to the lodge system should be subjected to the most searching criticism that able representatives of the Masonic order could offer, and so I heartily wished that my friend, the Master, might meet with so much encouragement from his fellow Masons that he would feel free to enter into a public examination of the charges preferred against the lodge system.

In the course of this conversation he said, "Suppose the religious part of Masonry was eliminated from it, would you have any other objections to it?" I said, "Yes. I object to your swearing, as you do in the Master's degree, to keep each other's secrets, murder and treason excepted; and to your swearing, as you do in the Royal Arch degree, to keep each other's secrets, murder and treason not excepted."

"There is a liability," I said, "of being summoned as a witness and judicially sworn to tell the whole truth about what you had Masonically sworn to keep an inviolable secret." I referred to the Mormon witnesses in Utah, and the Clan-na-Gael witnesses in Chicago, to illustrate.

Just then the train came that the Master was waiting to take; he stepped on board, and thus our conference abruptly terminated, necessitating another interview or correspondence before we can arrange for the joint meeting we have under consideration.

After this, brother Worcester took me to Belvidere. The Free Methodist church can be had for lectures, and I saw a member of the M. E. church who thought that their house might be opened to discuss the relation of Freemasonry and kindred orders to Christianity. We then went into the country to the Flora church, and from there to the Franklin church, and thence to the Dustin church, where I preached twice on the Sabbath.

From there we went to Fielding and saw the pastor and trustees of the M. E. church of that town and arranged for me to speak two evenings. We then went to Monroe and applied for the use of the M. E. church for two lectures. Three trustees, one of them a Mason, consented; but a fourth, who was also a Mason, objected, and influenced the fifth trustee to join him in his refusal. We had not time to see others, and so for the present will not lecture at Monroe. A hall could have been hired, but for lack of funds to pay hall rent, we must pass Monroe for the present. We arranged for six lectures, two at Fielding, two at Franklin and two at Dustin. C. F. HAWLEY.

FROM THE WASHINGTON AGENT.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 8, 1890.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I start in the morning, D. V., for a trip to York and Lancaster counties, Pa. Friends in neighboring counties wishing lectures at this season will please write me at once, addressing this office. Knowing your wish, friends, I can save time and money for places where work is wanted. I remember in other months several have asked for meetings in this vicinity. Are you ready at this time?

Last evening I addressed a company assembled in a colored M. E. church in this city. The pastor, Rev. Mr. Brooks, kindly arranged to give me this hearing. There were present some of the "Great Worthy Grands," whose display of pomposity and lack of common sense excelled anything I have met in my travels, I think. I trust some good was accomplished. There was certainly much interest. But there is little hope of reaching a man too ignorant to comprehend an argument, and too proud to learn. Will some one please tell how you can reform a self-conceited, ignorant man? W. B. STODDARD.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A TESTIMONY IN NASHVILLE, TENN.

NASHVILLE, Tenn.

One week ago last Saturday, while in the market giving out tracts and papers, I met a colored preacher with whom I got acquainted a year ago. He got blind some years ago through the use of tobacco. He is a "Disciple," and very well posted on the Scriptures as far as head is concerned, but lacking the power. This preacher is a great man for lodges. He has started or organized many of them. This new lodge of his own creation is called the Golden Link. He says there are no secrets in it. Only such as grips, signs and passwords to know each other by. Of course these are secrets of themselves. He seems to be very candid, and I am hoping to be able to convince him of his wrong by the help of the Lord. He invited me to go to his meeting the next day (Sabbath) to talk as I pleased on secrecy. I told him I would go, and to get as many out as he could. I went, but he was belated at another meeting and did not come. I waited a half hour and then went to a colored Baptist church close by to give out some papers and tracts. I had a talk with the preacher and found he was opposed to secrecy. The meeting began and he preached on the mustard seed, which seemed to suit my mission there that day. Directly in came my colored friend, the blind preacher. I sat him down beside me. They requested me to pray, and then he knew me; so at the close of the preaching he introduced me to the people in very high terms. So the preacher came out of the stand and welcomed me very cordially, and several came and shook hands with me.

I then requested the privilege to say a few words, which was readily granted. I spoke some on the seed and then on secrecy. I told them of a Mason a day or two before who said Masonry was founded on the Bible. I said to him they leave Jesus Christ out. He said, "Jesus Christ! Why he was only a bastard." I said to the wicked man, "You will have to stand before him, the Judge of all the earth."

I have told this incident to several Masons since, and they say he was no Mason. Well, he claimed to be and wore marks, which passed him into the lodge on the level, and they parted on the square. Somebody lies. There must be two kinds wearing the self-same emblems: they all go to the same lodge. Their foundation is crumbling. I see fruits of it all the time as these tracts spread over the city and country, giving out the glorious light of liberty to the captives. Men's faith in these things is becoming shaky; nevertheless the devil seems to have almost infinite power over the minds of men, not only in lodgery, but in everything mean and tricky.

I wish now to give you a few items in regard to Jeff. Davis's funeral here. The American building has been draped in mourning ever since the funeral. I send you the paper with the oration verbatim as it was delivered. As this is the capital of the State, you can better judge from the pulse-beat here of what the state of the body politic is in this Southland.

The best brain power they had was used on the occasion, and stretched to its utmost tension at that, to get at something that might be the means of keeping alive the spirit of hate and strife. They say they have no enmity toward the North, yet betray the secret by picturing out their righteous cause by justifying themselves under the plea, we had a right to our property, the slave, we had a right to make our own laws to suit ourselves. Fight they did and fight they would again. They were never conquered, they say. "We made our own terms of surrender," etc. As I walked up the long stone steps to the Capitol, I looked at our grand old flag, not floating from the dome, but from the eaves of the building, for the first time in its history lowered by the traitor's hand to less than half mast. I pray God it may never be brought to that humiliating position again. I could have kissed its folds as it lay quiet, not a breath to molest it.

They propose to raise a Confederate monument in every Southern State. They propose to start and keep up a bivouac in every town, which means just so many traitors' regiments drilled in secret. They parade the streets in uniform, armed and equipped without let or hindrance. None are in the ranks but the pure Southern blood, lovers of whisky and tobacco. Talk of loving the Union, it's not in them. This same spirit is in the ministry, too. A prominent M. E. South preacher told a lady who is from the North that they did not want people from the North in their church. I know her and her husband well. I got it from her own mouth. Pride goeth before a fall, and a haughty spirit before destruction.

The orator of the day gloried in his having received eight wounds, in honor of their glorious cause. He also is a Mason. It looks to me the people are given over to hardness of heart and a reprobate mind, to believe a lie, that they all may be damned. I would to God something might be done to counteract this hellish influence. I am satisfied, unless the devils of pride, secrecy, theater-going, festivals, tobacco, whisky and worldliness generally are banished from the churches, our fair land is doomed to destruction. There is not a Holy Ghost preacher in this city, or we would have something done. Hate and love cannot unite, no more than fire and water. God is love, and they that dwell in God dwell in love.

I am a Free Methodist in heart and have been for years. I am a better one to-day than ever, because I love her holiness teaching more. I hope some one will be so impressed by the Holy Spirit to come here and help wake up the people, that he can neither eat nor sleep. God help and open up the way. A. F. SMITH.

SWEARING FOR PROFIT.

CELIA, Kans.

Swear neither by heaven, for it is God's throne; nor by the earth, for it is his footstool; neither by Jerusalem, for it is the city of the great king; nor by thy head, for thou canst not turn one hair white or black. This is taken from the foundation which is not sand, but rock. The telegraph operator can send a profane oath over the wire and not utter it with his lips, using only his fingers as the medium of communication of the thoughts of his heart, simply because he has learned that mode of communication.

Suppose some one should secretly, and under guard, set up an office in some upper story, and teach the people that a man by the name of Abiff was slain by three ruffians having Latin names, and concealed in the rubbish, at the erection of Solomon's temple, 1005 years before Christ; at which time and place there was no Latin language used, and no rubbish to conceal a corpse, seeing the temple was put up without the sound of a hammer or any tool whatever; and for such teaching would exact pay, and cause some praying to be done from which prayers the name of Christ be carefully excluded; and whilst learning these profane fables, (which one Paul in his first epistle to Timothy said should be refused), he would put his pupils through certain positions of body, and motions, intimately connected with some very hard oaths he would require them to swear; so that whenever they would go through, or see these motions, they would be reminded of those hard oaths, or execrations on themselves, should they reveal what they had learned. They, like the telegraph operator, would be able to swear by motions, or signs, anywhere, and none but those who had been so taught would know any swearing was going on.

Thus the blacksmith could swear to a man coming to or passing by his shop. The lawyer could swear to the judge or jury. The officer of justice could swear to the criminal; and vice versa. But the beauty of all would be, the minister, whilst preaching, could swear to such of his congregation as might understand, and the remainder know nothing about it.

Thus men could be made grand swearing machines in all positions of life; in fact, could swear themselves into most any position of honor or profit they desired, with the aid of their swearing comrades. They could entirely disregard or set at naught the above sayings of the Man of Sorrows; and claim men could do more good by swearing than by preaching or praying; and could sing:

"Come ye that love to swear,
And let your joys be known;
Join in an oath no one can hear,
And thus surround the throne."

That throne of iniquity "that frameth mischief by a law," fulfilling that which is written, "there shall be false teachers among you, who secretly bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them, and bring upon themselves swift destruction. And many shall follow their pernicious ways, by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of; and through covetousness shall they with feigned words make merchandise of you."

Let every one take heed how they are bound in bundles, for so the tares will be. By all means burst such bands. Better die for the truth than live for a lie. H. C. MILLER.

NEW ENGLAND AND THE CONGRESS.

WARE, Mass.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—It has been some time since I have had anything to say through your columns, but I would like to say I do rejoice heartily over the success achieved at the Congress of Churches in Boston. It was my precious privilege to be there; truly it was a time long to be remembered. It could not be said of that able corps of speakers that they lacked brains, for they had brains and knew just how to use them to the revealing and unmasking the dark and heinous workings of these vile conclaves, "secret organizations." Truly, New England has taken a "long stride" on the reform issues of the day, and who has planned and carried on this "forward march" movement? This inquiry has been made a number of times to me, and I answer them it has been done by Rev. J. P. Stoddard, the General Agent of the N. C. A., assisted by our venerable and beloved ex-president of Wheaton College, Rev. J. Blanchard. The weeks and months of arduous labor of these "standard-bearers" of our beloved cause are telling. Yes, their words, prayers, able and timely speeches are resounding all through New England.

A host of noble soldiers answered the call to Boston, and it was cheering to the faintest hearts to listen to the noble utterances and speeches delivered during that meeting. One said to me, "I didn't know you had so many ministers in your anti-secret cause." I said, "Yes, and there are hundreds and thousands of such men and women, too, right here in New England, and all we need is a general to march them out and get them in line for battle, and no better leader for this work can be found than your General Agent; and right here let me say I hope, yes, I pray, that in the Providence of God he may remain at least one year with us, until he gets the forces "mustered in" and in working order. Then he may be able to get a band of workers to scatter over these United States that shall make the lodge power to shrink and cower with fear.

There is plenty of good material here in New England to make Gatling guns to riddle the lodge with, but it needs a good, thorough, God-fearing man to lead on in this work; and I do hope and pray that the Lord will open the way and direct in this work, and I believe it is in accordance with the will of God and the leadings of his Spirit, that the one above referred to remain with us. So far as I know, the vote is unanimous. The officers in our N. E. C. A., with our noble president and secretary to lead us on, seem much encouraged in our reform work.

After the meeting in our grove (the Ware Convention), a secretist's wife said she believed they were the noblest and best band of Christian workers she ever saw gathered together, and she didn't believe there was a hypocrite amongst them. It truly was a blessed season to all our waiting hearts, and may God grant us many more such precious seasons, and that our numbers may be greatly increased. Yours in the work,

MRS. L. M. HOYT.

THE LITTLE FOXES SPOIL THE GRAPES.

FOREST GROVE, Mich., Jan. 4, 1890.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Another child of secrecy has made its appearance among us, and is trying to make people believe that there is a mine of wealth to be gained by following its teachings. For brevity's sake it is called "P. I.," which means "Patrons of Industry," but which before long may prove to better represent Popular Ignorance, i. e., of the wiles of Satan to lead souls astray, and of the tricks which demagogues resort to to fill their pockets. The exchange has been made by many. The members got their admission tickets, and the peculiar grip by which to be known, and the man who initiated them has gone with the shekels.

It is a sorry sight to see elders and deacons, leaders in the church, whose teachings are to cast our burdens on the Lord, themselves follow a leader who spends the whole Sabbath day in ascertaining prices asked and paid for certain articles of commerce. But it is one of the signs of the times that professing Christians go down to Egypt for help. And how can it be otherwise, seeing the pulpit and religious press are almost entirely silent on this subject.

All the members of the church at this place profess to be opposed to secret societies. Still, but one of the consistory of nine, including the minister, was willing to sign the "Petition to Congress," and that one showed his sincerity by joining with other members the P. I. club. Angels are sad and Satan glad, while God is saying: "O, that they were wise, that they understood this, that they would consider their latter end! For their vine is the vine of Sodom, and of the fields of Gomorrah; their grapes are grapes of gall, their clusters are bitter."

On many a page of sacred writ are we warned against associating with the worldly. Most prominent among them are the results of the sons of God affiliating with the daughters of men; and the influence of Sodom's inhabitants upon the family of Lot, who stands at the head of two idolatrous nations as a consequence. What a solemn and impressive message was brought to that good king Jehoshaphat, after he had formed an alliance with that wicked man Ahab: "Shouldst thou help the ungodly, and love them that hate the Lord? therefore is wrath upon thee from before the Lord."—2 Chr. 19: 2. At a later period, when he joined with Ahab's son, Ahaziah, in business and trade to build an East India fleet bound for Ophir, God made his disapproval known in the following words: "Because thou hast joined thyself with Ahaziah, the Lord hath broken thy works. And the ships were broken, that they were not able to go to Tarshish."

O, what mercies of the Lord when we are in the wrong way, to oppose us—to contend with us, to prevent our success! It may be proof of our sonship, Heb. 12: 7, 8, but if successful in a wicked way, it may be that the most fearful judgment is pronounced upon us, viz., "Ephraim is joined to idols, let him alone." May the Lord meet with reverses every unholy alliance between his people and the world, and let it result as it did in Judah's king, when enticed to such partnership: "But Jehoshaphat would not."

JAMES BRANDT.

PITH AND POINT.

DID THE LODGE WIN IN THE CRONIN CASE?

"By Freemasonry trial by jury is transformed into an engine of despotism and Masonic fraud," said Thaddeus Stevens. The great principle at stake was, Shall the state allow oath-bound societies to "remove," murder its members according to their laws, and take no cognizance of it? The jury evidently compromised and brought in a verdict as if the accused were partly proven guilty and partly not; or, in other words, the verdict was not based on the evidence, but on something else.

Now, what was that something else? The lodge in general and the Masons in particular saw that to allow the state authority and law to have its full force in the case would never do, as it would set aside and destroy the very principle that keeps lodgery alive,—the right and power to enforce their own laws. With the lodge-ites the men on trial were, perhaps, of little worth, but the principle at stake made it an imperative necessity that the ends of justice should be turned aside so far as possible, and thus save the lodge. The child surely betrays its parentage, and if lodge walls could tell the story, many congratulatory remarks have been uttered expressive of their victory. This view of the matter, I think, will clear up the fog that seems to hang about the closing hours of the Cronin trial. No. "The victory of the state is not complete," nor does the lodge intend it should be; and with State officers who are under the power of the lodge, how easy it will be to remove the penalty imposed, and the ends of justice be defeated. But God lives, and will mete out justice to each and all in due time. And whatsoever exalteth itself against him and his truth will be swept away and destroyed.—R. CANNING.

A BETTER DAY COMING.

When I see the many fearless papers and men that have the spirit and character of Christ, free to speak out the truth and pray for the liberation of their fellow beings from the secret lodge oaths and obligations, I cannot refrain from saying, "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits!" and especially this promise, "One shall chase a thousand, and two put ten thousand to flight." Notwithstanding "one sinner destroyeth much good," I see no reason to fear what man can do unto the church, since this "generation of vipers," that have "taught their tongues to speak lies," as seen in Jeremiah 9: 4-8, are making themselves very ridiculous in these parts since Bro. C. F. Hawley came here. They have forbidden their "Worshipful Master" from using the privilege of proving all things and holding fast that which is good, by preventing the most important question of the day from being discussed, i. e., the relation of Masonry and kindred societies to family, church and state. Yours in the faith, that my fellows that are writhing beneath the galling yoke of lodgery are soon to go free in Christ.—M. L. WORCESTER, Kingston, Ill.

THE FLOATING CHAPEL.

The call of Bro. Arnold for help to build a boat by which he may traverse the rivers of the South, boldly preaching Christ and exposing Masonry, seems to me the opportunity for a good many to improve for this reason: There are not many of us who have the spiritual gifts and physical courage and health to openly engage in the fight against anti-Christian secret societies. We may be poor, sickly, nervous, surrounded by secret society men; our doctor, our lawyer, our storekeeper, and, last and worst, our pastor, may be Masons or Odd-fellows, and our relatives and connections may be opposed to our taking an aggressive stand against the works of darkness. Let us especially remember that by seeking daily to live a pure and consecrated Christian life we may render the best testimony against evil of all kinds. May our motto be "Holiness to the Lord." Thus in our weakness we shall be made strong, and come off more than conqueror.—CHRISTIAN.

READY FOR DEGREE WORK.

My zeal for the cause is as strong as ever. I often tell my wife that I never have had the same satisfaction and felt the divine approval of my doings as when in the lecture work. I am always ready to stand as a witness against the powers of darkness; and as the good Lord in his tender mercy has led me out of it, I will do all I can in my weakness to honor and glorify him. If you think me worthy or able to do the cause any good, I am willing to do it.—THOMAS LOWE, Coloma Station, Wis.

LITERATURE.

The American Garden in its new and convenient form is the leader. Beyond a doubt it surpasses all magazines of its class in the richness and diversity of its contributions and in the number and quality of its illustrations. All who love gardening and practice it either for pleasure, profit or health, will read with undiminished interest from page to page. Parents who wish their boys to become engaged in gardening and in love with so useful and kindly an art can hardly do better than to place this attractive magazine in their hands. Published at 10 Spruce street, New York, at $2 per year.

Vick's Illustrated Magazine begins its thirteenth volume in this warm winter weather with a beautiful transcription in all their native hues of our summer friend, the poppy. The review of the year past from the standpoint of the seedsman and horticulturist is interesting. Illustrated articles are "Japanese Dwarfed Plants," "One of the Antilles," and "Silk Worms."

Maule's Seed Catalogue is the first to appear in this new year. It is gay and festive with all the colors of the bean, onion, cabbage and potato, and "profuse" is hardly an adequate word for the multitude of illustrations. It is therefore an attractive print, and the publisher, W. H. Maule of Philadelphia, having made a good reputation in the past will make his promises good for the future.

LODGE NOTES.

In 1769 six lodges met in the city of Limerick, Ireland, two of which had Catholic priests for masters, and another had one for secretary.

A properly drawn warrant for the arrest of General Master Workman Powderly, sworn out by Edward Callaghan before Justice Keener of Scottdale, was received in Scranton, Pa., Jan. 2. When the constable went to Mr. Powderly's house he found him sick in bed, suffering from quinsy, sore throat and "la grippe," and did not make the arrest.

A prominent member of the Modern Woodmen of America has received a letter from State Auditor Pavey, who has been investigating the accounts of Head Consul Root, in which it is said that the order is flourishing and has a membership of 38,684, but that there have been gross irregularities and flagrant abuses by some one who has been concerned in the management. The Attorney-General is in possession of the fact and will prosecute.

The fifth annual public installation ceremony of Peabody lodge, Ancient Order United Workmen, was held a few nights ago, followed by a reception and ball given to the friends of the order. The installation ceremonies were performed by E. P. Haven, L. D. G. M. W., assisted by Sheriff Canute R. Matson. A dance followed immediately after the musical program, and the various kinds of dances alternated with each other till early next morning.

The troubles of the Brotherhood of the Holy Name of Jesus, which originated early in 1888, have been taken into court in this city for adjudication. The organization is a Catholic benevolent association. Father John Radziejewski of St. Adelbert's church assumed the government of the society, and a revolt was occasioned until 2,000 members have left the church in various parishes because the priest withheld absolution from the malcontents. He is now brought into court before Judge Tuthill to show by what authority he holds the reins of government.

"Major-General" Carnahan, "commander-in-chief" of Indianapolis; "Colonel" W. D. Kennedy of Chicago; "Brigadier-General" Geo. Fewless and "Colonel" George E. Currie, of the Kentucky Brigade; B. H. Hastings, "Colonel" W. Loomis, "Captain" John Boyne, and "Colonel" Goodyear, of the Michigan Brigade; "Major" Frank Bowers, "Captain" W. L. Heiskell, and "Adjutant-General" William J. McKee, of the Indiana Brigade; "Captain" John Cairns, of Chicago; "Colonel" Fred E. Wheaton, of Minneapolis, were the other day looking for a site for a Knight of Pythias parade in Milwaukee. The "distinguished" party were conducted about the city.

The London Freemason has the following note on the Romish Cardinal Manning and his part in a lodge funeral: "The remains of Bro. General Paoli, the Corsican patriot, who, by the way, was a member of our Prince of Wales lodge, No. 259, are about to be exhumed from their resting place in London and conveyed to Corsica, where great preparations are being made in order to receive them with due honor. The committee charged to carry out the arrangements will arrive in London to-morrow (Saturday). Previous to their removal from here, a religious service, at which Cardinal Manning is expected to preside, will be held, and then they will be conveyed to Marseilles, and thence to Corsica, where they will be consigned to the family grave at Morosaglia."

Prior to 1717, says the Victoria Freeman, the only ritual known to Masons was obligation, with a word of recognition. "In 1729 a catechism as a test of membership was in vogue, of so unmeaning a character that sensible men endeavored successfully to change it to something more reasonable. Hence to the time of Preston, continual changes were made, when he revised and added to it such measures as would commend it to men of culture and education. About the middle of the last century, Dermott formulated a ritual different from that of Preston, which was adopted by the so-called 'Ancient Lodges.' At the union of the two English Masonic factions, early in the present century, a ritual was formulated which is essentially the same as that practiced by the Grand Lodge of England at the present time. Some of the first lodges established in America were authorized by the Ancient or Dermott branch of the order, notably Pennsylvania, which still holds the same ritual, and call themselves 'Ancient York Masons.' The ritual in use in England at the present time is greatly different from that in use elsewhere. That generally adopted for the use of the various Grand Lodges of the United States was formulated by Webb and is used in no other country."

Have you Catarrh?

THE N. C. A. FUNDS.

The General Fund is that from which the running expenses of the Association are paid. From it the agents on the field are supported.

The Foreign Fund is that from which the foreign demand for literature against the lodge is supplied to missionaries.

The Free Tract Fund clearly states by its name the object for which contributions are solicited. Millions of pages have been distributed by means of this fund.

The Cynosure Ministers' Fund. The donations to this fund have enabled the Association to send many copies of the Cynosure to the ministers of the South, especially to pastors of colored churches. The result has been a blessing to them and their churches.

Contributions to any or all these funds are urgently solicited.

FORM OF BEQUEST.—I give and bequeath to the National Christian Association, incorporated and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, the sum of — dollars for the purposes of said Association, and for which the receipt of its Treasurer for the time being shall be sufficient discharge.

The Christian Cynosure.

J. BLANCHARD, EDITOR.

HENRY L. KELLOGG, ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JANUARY 16, 1890.

The editor of the Cynosure accompanied by Mrs. Blanchard, and attended by a granddaughter, Miss Belle Blanchard, started for San Diego, California, last week Monday. The hope of recuperating health, and a strong desire to visit once more a married daughter in San Francisco, led them to undertake the journey, and they did not expect to return until the early summer. A number of friends attended them to the overland train on the Santa Fe line, and saw them comfortably situated for the journey, which was begun very hopefully. They were expecting to arrive in San Diego at 10 p. m. Friday; but a dispatch from Las Vegas, New Mexico, bore to friends in this city and Wheaton the sadly unexpected news that Mrs. Blanchard died Saturday night at that place. No further word has been received at this writing, and it can only be conjectured that the fatigue of continuous travel for two days and nights was too great a strain for a feeble constitution, and possibly the atmosphere of an elevated region may have accelerated the end. They probably left the train three days before the final summons came. Pres. C. A. Blanchard hastened on from Peoria to aid the sorrowing party on their return home.

This beloved mother in God's American Israel was 71 years old the day after she started on this journey. She was in early life a teacher and principal of young ladies' seminaries in Pennsylvania and Alabama. She was married to Pres. J. Blanchard in Middlebury, Vt., in 1838, and the fiftieth anniversary of their wedding was spent quietly in the same old town. Twelve children were given them, six of whom are still living, and there are forty-six living grand-children. During the thirty-five years' connection of her husband with Knox and Wheaton Colleges Mrs. Blanchard was in the mother's place to thousands of young men and women; who, now scattered widely over the earth, will recall with a tender memory her kindly service and loving counsel, and will rise up to call her blessed. In our reform work she always had the warmest interest, attending every convention and annual meeting of the N. C. A. possible; and her facile pen was occasionally used to enrich the columns of the Cynosure. But now she rests; her labors, arduous and prolonged, are over; but their memories and results follow where she trod the earth like a train of bright angels sent from God to give comfort to those that mourn for her departure.

THE STUDENTS' MOVEMENT.

A communication from a student in the Congregational College connected with Montreal University, Canada, says: "We are talking of organizing an anti-secret society at McGill College. The chief trouble is that the students are already overworked, especially those who would have to go ahead in such an undertaking." Another letter asks how students can best make opposition to secretism.

No more appropriate movement than this among the young men of our colleges could be suggested. It is acknowledged to be an advantage to ministers to know something of Mormonism and Jesuitism, and there are certainly as good reasons why they should be informed as to the true nature of the whole system of secret lodges. Great names in connection with a matter are not absolute warrant of its wisdom and truth; but the fact that President Finney, Prof. Moses Stuart, Dr. Howard Crosby, D. L. Moody, Geo. F. Pentecost, John Quincy Adams, Daniel Webster, Charles Sumner, Edward Everett, and Chief Justice Marshall, with many others, have of their undisputed wisdom and broad experience, given utterance to a warning voice concerning the dangers to the church and to the state from oath-bound secrecy,—this alone is ample reason why the two thousand five hundred and ninety-seven students in theological seminaries, who are to be the leaders of men and moulders of religious thought, should conscientiously seek to know the facts in the case. If the Saviour of men is dishonored, and men are led to trust in any other being or thing for salvation, how important that Christ's ambassadors, standing in his stead, beseeching men to become reconciled to God, should know the place and time and manner of working of this great system, which is a pitfall to millions of our race. Information, coupled with devotion to Christ, is to the works of evil as light is to darkness. It conquers them. "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge; because thou hast rejected knowledge, I will also reject thee, that thou shalt be no priest to me," (Hosea 4: 6). An English statesman defined agitation as the rousing of the public conscience to mould its laws. Everything we enjoy to-day is the outcome of knowledge obtained through earnest effort. To rightly know God is eternal life.

The practical question of developing a right interest among students on this question, and directing wisely their honest and warm-hearted zeal, is one of vast importance. From their numbers we are praying God to raise up men to take the place of the scores who are dropping out of the ranks by death. As they shall be disposed toward the lodge while in this formative period, so are they likely to remain in mature life. We can do no more than suggest lines of inquiry, and methods of promoting an opposition to the evil of secret orders. Time and experience will add to our brief list.

1. The different colleges and seminaries have Societies of Inquiry into missionary matters, which are enthusiastically sustained. Now to have a standing committee of inquiry into the number, power and character of secret orders in the same societies would not materially increase the work of the students. It would give new and important work to new men, and make the sphere of the societies more complete.

2. Addresses by members of the faculties, as at Oberlin last week, or from some speaker competent to instruct and interest young men, could be secured.

3. A symposium by the students would be pleasant and profitable, providing for a dispassionate interchange of views and quiet investigation of the various phases of the lodge question.

4. Essays and debates in the regular course of seminary or college work, taking up the lodge direct, or associated topics would be greatly beneficial. Thus, a carefully studied paper on Mormonism, Jesuitism, the Irish societies, the anarchists and their International society, the nature and cure of false worship, etc., will lead naturally and directly to a consideration of some form or phase of the secret system.

5. A wise and frequent distribution of literature, and the occasional propounding of questions that can be best answered by reference to some volume in the Anti-masonic library, are among the means not to be neglected.

6. This movement among students is sure to grow; as certainly as Luther's preaching took first effect and spread widest among the students of Germany and Europe. There will naturally arise some means of communication among them on this business, and a Bureau of Correspondence is already needed. The students of Oberlin have just been addressed by one of their professors. The young men of Northwestern University at Evanston have requested an address from Mr. Bullock, one of their own number. A debate was lately held by the young men in the Congregational Theological Seminary at Oakland, California, and members of the faculty are with them against the lodge. In the Seminary at Union Park in this city the interest is deepening on the part of faculty and students. The brief address of the editor of this paper before his departure for San Diego had an excellent effect. Young men began to speak out, and some pulled off their lodge pins. At Princeton College students and faculty would assist. The young men of Montreal University would be heard from with a cheer. So from Geneva College and Wheaton, Augustana and Monmouth, Xenia and Allegheny Seminaries, and scores of institutions which we need not mention would come with aid and influence to make this movement a mighty power against the ruler of this world's darkness, and his system of demoralization and death—the secret lodge.

—A friendly call from Mr. Jerome Howe of Wenona, Ill., last week renewed our assurance in his purpose to carry out, so far as possible, the plans of his honored father for the establishment of schools in the South.

AFRICA AND PEACE.

The return of Stanley and Emin Pasha from Africa, and the threatened conflict between Great Britain and Portugal, as indicated by the massing of a British fleet at Zanzibar, alike point to Eastern Equatorial Africa as the scene of events greatly affecting that country and perhaps the nations of Europe. Emin's withdrawal from the so-called "Equatorial provinces" of Egypt, though he so long and so nobly held them, but consummates the victory of Islamism, begun with the defeat and death of Gordon, and sweeps away the last barrier to the supremacy of the Mahdi. It fills his Arab supporters with pride and inspires them with the hope of conquering all the powers that can be arrayed against them. And this is the outcome of the mad ambition and expense by which Egypt sought to conquer and hold this vast region—expense which made her bankrupt, and brought untold oppressions on her people. Nothing could more show the folly of wars of conquest and indicate the extreme difficulty and danger of armed European intervention.

The question arises, is there not a more excellent way?

The great Congo Free State, now open to commerce, missionary efforts and immigration, was organized and brought under European influences by purely peaceful measures. It was a part of the contract between the King of Belgium and Mr. Stanley that there should be no fighting, and this contract was sacredly kept. The result was an immense saving both of life and treasure, and the whole vast region remains peaceful. Are the people of Eastern Soudan, whether Negroes or Arabs, less amenable to reason and an intelligent self-interest than the barbarous tribes of the Congo? True, the Arab slave-traders are now triumphant and boastful, but they have more of conscience and knowledge than the Congo tribes. They have a literature, much knowledge of the arts, and are fairly well informed as to the general condition and affairs of the civilized world.

After all, commerce, with all its attendant evils, is a great peace-maker. Christianity is the great civilizer. It will be inconceivably cheaper for the civilized nations to build roads that shall bring the great interior into practical contact with the commercial and Christian world, than to subdue them by war. It is not the Arabs alone, but all the barbarous tribes as well, that believe in slavery and the slave trade. The conflict is one of ideas and not of force. We can never put down the slave trade simply by physical force. If ever it altogether ceases it will be through the power of the Gospel and the introduction of a more profitable commerce.

There are three principal routes by which the great lake region of Eastern Central Africa is accessible, or may easily become so: by the Nile; or direct from the eastern coast; or by the Zambezi and Shire rivers and Lake Nyassa. Because the Nile flows through a desert, it is larger 1,000 miles from its mouth than where its waters meet the Mediterranean. There are five cataracts that render direct navigation impossible, but from Berber there is an uninterrupted way for steamers up to and through the great Albert Nyanza lake. Near this lake was Emin, and here Stanley found him in the possession of steamers. The Mahdists sent steamers to Kartoum and brought up troops to subdue him. All this great fertile region is now under the sway of the Mahdi. At the confluence of the Blue and White Nile is Kartoum, where Gordon fell—an important city and commercial center. From Suakim on the Red Sea to Berber on the Nile, is about 200 miles of desert. A railroad connecting these cities would open up the great upper Nile and the lakes which feed it, to the commercial and Christian world. Peace would make this practicable. War will forever prevent it.

Next to this is the route from Mombassa on the Indian Ocean to Lake Victoria Nyanza. This is the largest of the lakes, with an area of 29,000 square miles. A railroad is already projected and will probably soon be built. This is the most direct route to the lakes. From the bay on the southwest side of this lake to Lake Tanganyika is but 155 miles. Lake Tanganyika is 300 miles long and flows into the Congo. Next to this is the route by the Zambezi. The Shire, its northern affluent, is a great river. It drains the waters of Lake Nyassa, which is larger than Lake Erie. There are falls in the Shire, and a short railroad is needed to connect the lake with the navigable waters below. This railroad Portugal has under taken to build, and it is here that there is a conflict with Great Britain, which government denies to them the right of possession. There are important English and Scotch missions on the lake, and they fear the Roman Catholic influence of Portugal. It is hardly probable that there will be war. From the northern extremity of Lake Nyassa to the southern end of Lake Tanganyika is but about 100 miles, over a high fertile plateau. A railroad over this link, together with the one building around the falls of the Shire, will open up the cheapest route to all Central Africa.

Meanwhile letters from Dr. Peters, the German explorer, seem to give assurance that he is still alive, and that the Arabs are more expert in lying than killing. This they had proved by their lies about Stanley and Emin. The missions on the great lakes are holding their own, and in the main are undisturbed. Even the deadly malaria of West Africa seems somewhat to be lifting, for the percentage of the deaths of missionaries is not nearly so great as it use to be. May we not hope that soon the Gospel will have been preached for a witness to all these nations.

CORRECTIONS.—Rev. Dr. N. Wardner, whose marriage to Miss Harvey we lately noted, is a minister in the Seventh-day instead of the Free-will Baptist church. Also the number of Masons reported in Nauvoo Lodge in 1843 was 253 instead of 283.

—Two visits to the Pacific Garden Mission in this city of late, show that the great work of salvation from sin goes on there as regularly as the sun shines. Col. George R. Clarke and his devoted wife sow with one hand and reap with the other. God is giving them many stars for their crown—a whole constellation. To any who may be detained in Chicago during the evening, there is no more profitable place to go in the whole city than this mission on VanBuren St. and Fourth Ave.

—Prof. Henry C. King, of Oberlin College, was some time since requested by the faculty of that institution to prepare an address on secret societies. He has made a careful study of the whole subject, and on Thursday evening last gave his lecture, which had been long expected by many, and was heard with eager interest. He arraigned the whole lodge list, and condemned secretism in detail and in toto. This address is an important event in the progress of the student movement, and the Cynosure has the promise of a copy for publication.

—The note from Bro. Thomas Lowe will be read with a revival of interesting memories. Many have heard his experience of lodge life and remember his accurate exposition of lodge work. He writes that he is willing to resume that work if there is call for it, and will answer calls where his expenses are paid and a reasonable amount for his time. There have been few inquiries for degree work of late years, but there are some indications that it may be revived in connection with some parts of our work. Let State lecturers and other officers and agents remember this offer of Bro. Lowe and put themselves in communication with him at Coloma Station, Wis.

—A large number of the pastors, and others prominent in church work in Cincinnati, have united in calling a conference to meet in the First English Lutheran church in that city, January 20 and 21, 1890, to take counsel together as to what can and ought to be done to save our land from Sabbath-breaking and associated immoralities. It is proposed that the conference hold five sessions, commencing January 20, at 2 P. M., and closing January 21 with the evening session. Such subjects as the following will be discussed by eminent citizens, ministers and laymen: "Limitations of Personal Liberty," "The Civil Sabbath," "The Sunday Newspaper," "The Place of the Bible in Moral Legislation," "The Legislation Needed in Ohio," "A Legal Argument Against Secular Common Schools," "The Divorce Question." Rev. Drs. French and McAllister and Pres. S. F. Scovel are among the speakers.

—"Out of Russia," says a recent critic, "have come two of the strongest moral forces of our time—Tolstoi in literature, and Verestchagin in art. Both have the courage of their convictions and have dared to be themselves." It may be disputed if Tolstoi in literature outranks in moral power, but few will care to dispute the place to Verestchagin in art. His matchless collection, which now fills the art rooms of the Exposition building in this city, are not alone a rebuke to the French imitations of nudity which annually take so great space in the same rooms, but they are a positive educating force for peace and good will between man and man that powerfully effect every thoughtful visitor. The forcefulness of the real in all his work remind one that "truth is mighty."—It is to be hoped that this collection will long enough remain in America to powerfully influence not alone public opinion, but American artists as well.

—The Tidings, a local monthly of Norway, Herkimer county, New York, has a historical department. In the January number four columns are given to the Anti-masonic history of the town. There are several incidents which are worth reading outside the neighborhood. Here are two of them: "The Norway Baptist church disfellowshipped Masons. One of their ablest divines of that day, Rev. Elon Galusha, of Oneida county, lectured throughout this section on the evils of Masonry. In October, 1830, Major William Forsyth, a prominent citizen and Mason of Norway, died, and his funeral was attended in the old church with imposing Masonic ceremonies. Delegations from several lodges were present, one of mounted Masons from Herkimer. Rev. Isaac B. Pierce, a Unitarian clergyman from Trenton, officiated, wearing Masonic regalia in the pulpit. The old church was crowded, and excitement ran high. The speaker in his discourse 'thanked God that amid the disappointments, desolation and sins of this world, there was one green spot, Masonry.' 'Yes, but that green spot is stained with the blood of Morgan!' exclaimed Aunt Ned Carpenter, so as to be heard by the congregation."

PERSONAL NOTES.

—Rev. S. F. Porter has reached Selma in his visitation of Southern colleges. His letter from that city waits for next week.

—Pres. C. A. Blanchard preached in Plymouth church, Peoria, Rev. C. C. Harrah, pastor, last Sabbath, and had an appointment to address the Prohibition club of that city Monday evening.

—Bro. Hinman, who is now at Berea, Ky., is suffering severely at times from sciatic rheumatism. He expects this week to go to Camp Nelson for a short time. The week of prayer was observed with much fervor at Berea.

—Elder J. L. Barlow writes from his home in Bloomington, Wis., of the serious illness of his wife. On the 6th there was slight improvement, which gave hope of final recovery. His many friends will remember him in Christian sympathy for such a result.

—Dr. and Mrs. H. H. George, of Geneva College, were visited unexpectedly by a crowd of friends, young and old, on the 27th ult., on the twenty-fifth anniversary of their wedding-day. A substantial and beautiful reminder of the occasion was left behind in a fine silver set. The friends of the N. C. A. wish to join in the next occasion of the kind.

Judge Gordon, of Philadelphia, lately said: "Of all crimes, perjury is the one that should be looked upon with the greatest severity and be punished accordingly. It touches justice at its fountain. It is never committed under sudden temptation, but is always a crime of deliberation. It is important that it should be known in the community that this is a crime that cannot be committed with impunity, and nothing can be urged in its extenuation." The courts are few that could not furnish examples of this great crime directly attributable to the oaths of the secret lodge. The United States judges of Utah had to proceed upon the theory that Mormons would commit perjury as a religious duty. The Jesuits are instructed to do the same thing. The Cronin trial already finds forgetful witnesses when the Clan-na-Gael affairs are penetrated. There is no believing a "good" Mason when the affairs of his lodge are under criticism. He is bound by his vile lodge oath "to conceal." When shall we be done toying with the great crime-breeding system of the lodge? —Conservator.

HOW THE CLAN-NA-GAEL ESCAPED.

Mr. Hynes represented one faction of the Clan-na-Gael in an investigation which should have been driven remorselessly home to the center until the most hidden secrets of that un-American society were laid bare for the inspection and detestation of humanity. He was a friend of Dr. Cronin and an enemy of Alexander Sullivan, more interested in revenging the death of the one and in breaking down the power of the other than in exposing to the world's amazed horror the ramifications of a league of international assassination. He was employed by that faction of the Clan-na-Gael which pursued the investigation of the murder of Dr. Cronin to a point where it suddenly realized that this case was likely to bring "discredit on the grandest organization of Irishmen the world has ever known," and he protected the interests of his clients to the extent of his unquestionable ability. But how did the cause of justice profit by his assistance? He added nothing positive to the cause of the state. His sallies of wit served rather to entertain the public than to inform the jury. But for the witty rejoinders of Mr. Hynes the antics of the leading counsel for the defence, like the laughter of fools, would have been of no more consequence than the crackling of thorns under a pot. Although Mr. Hynes, in such encounters, always came off a victor, his adversary always had the satisfaction of knowing that the dignity of the state was an equal sufferer with himself. But Mr. Hynes's presence alongside of Mr. Longenecker accounts for the absence from the record of all explanation of the nature and internal workings of the United Brotherhood, or Clan-na-Gael, of which Camp 20 was merely a subordinate branch and the murder of Dr. Cronin a symptom. So far as the memory of the writer goes, the record is clear of any reference to the oath which the United Brotherhood imposes on its members—that oath which is a violation of American citizenship and an injunction to perjury in any case involving Clan-na-Gael interests. The introduction of that oath would have been sufficient to impeach the testimony of more than half the witnesses for the defence, and the only plausible excuse for its non-introduction rests upon the theory that it would have placed Mr. Hynes and his clients in the same boat with the witnesses for the defence.

Judge McConnell, however, cannot escape his share of responsibility for the lame and impotent conclusion of the great trial held before him. By excluding the evidence as to the motive behind the malice felt by Coughlin and his fellow conspirators against Dr. Cronin, in sustaining the objection to the testimony of Officer Brown, he removed the motive for Dr. Cronin's murder from the consideration of the jury. It is safe to say that there is not another judge or lawyer in Cook county beside Judge McConnell who is not morally convinced that the constitution, oath and proceedings of the Clan-na-Gael in the United States had more direct connection with the conspiracy to murder Dr. Cronin than Herr Most's book had to do with the Haymarket massacre. And yet Judge Gary admitted that book in evidence against the anarchists, and the Supreme Court of Illinois approved his ruling in doing so, whereas Judge McConnell shut the door in the face of any investigation that even squinted in the direction of the Clan-na-Gael. Throughout the whole trial Judge McConnell was so over-cautious not to commit an error in ruling against the defence that he continually made errors against the state, which, under the law, are without appeal and without cure. The responsibility imposed upon a judge in a great criminal trial, where matters of deep moment to the community are at stake, is like that of a commander-in-chief in war, because an error committed against the people may prove irremediable. Every decision of Judge McConnell overruling the thousand and one finicky objections of the defence is open to review, but this monumental error by which he shielded the motive of the crime, upon the flimsy pretext that it would open the door to an interminable investigation, is past recall, beyond remedy. To-day if the world wants to know why Dr. Cronin was murdered, and why his murder was attended with such elaboration of conspiracy, defamation and perjury, it has to go to the short record of the Coroner's inquest and not to the record of the trial which engrossed Judge McConnell's court for four months. —America.

THE HOME.

I LAY ME DOWN TO SLEEP.

BY VICTORIA ALEXANDRA BUCK.

I see the glory-lights afar
 Flung back from sunset's flaming car,
 Her signal-lights the evening star
 Above the restless deep;
 The winds of evening softly blow,
 The hours pass onward soft and slow,
 All nature sinks to rest, and so
 I lay me down to sleep.

Down drops the sun 'neath twilight's bars,
 Upsprings Aurora's glittering spars,
 Her banners gemmed with flashing stars,
 The dew of evening weep;
 The sun has sailed beyond my sight,
 Dim grows the flickering, fading light,
 So to the world I bid "Good Night!"
 And lay me down to sleep.

Father! through mire, and brake, and wold
 Thy lambs are straying from the fold,
 Over the mountain paths so cold,
 Call home thy wandering sheep!
 I know beyond the mountain beat
 Trod by thy pilgrims' weary feet
 There's rest, like peace when waters meet,—
 I lay me down to sleep.

I watch the crimson splendors dressed
 In blaze of light beyond the west,
 The weary world sinks to its rest,
 In slumbers pure and deep.
 "Thou who once led with hand of love
 O'er the dark sea the trembling dove,
 Thou, too, wilt shield me from above!"
 I lay me down to sleep.

As thus beside my bed I kneel
 While soft the shadows round me steal,
 Hear this my prayer (nor woe, nor weal Thou from my side wilt keep),
 "Thou, who dost mark the sparrow's fall;
 Thou, who to us art all in all;
 Hear thou thy children when they call!"
 I lay me down to sleep.

The willows wave, the pine trees sigh,
 The lights of sunset glow and die,
 Night draws her curtain in the sky
 While chill the shadows creep;
 Thus, with thy mantle o'er me cast,
 May I, earth's joys and woes o'erpast,
 Clasp death's cold hands in mine at last
 And lay me down to sleep.

THE WRECK OF THE GOLD-SHIPS.

There are many passages in the Word of God that most readers pass by, as they would pass unlighted transparencies in the street at night. If somebody sets a lamp or kindles a gas-jet behind the transparency, its picture or inscription becomes luminous, attracting all eyes to it. One purpose of good preaching is to set lamps behind neglected passages.

Among the overlooked episodes in Old Testament history which are full of suggestive wisdom is one in the life of that good and great Judean monarch, Jehoshaphat. His reign exalted the southern kingdom to a high prosperity. He wrought a good educational work among his people, and established a commission for expounding the Mosaic laws. He did many other noble things; but upon the lustre of his character and reign fell a great and greivous shadow. It was the sin of alliance with wicked men. Jehoshaphat had riches and honor in abundance, and his heart was lifted up in the ways of the Lord; yet he "joined affinity with Ahab," the profligate tyrant of the northern kingdom. He gave his son in marriage to Ahab's daughter, and made a military alliance with Ahab, which ended in the battle of Ramoth-Gilead, in which the northern king played a treacherous part and lost his life. Not satisfied with these entangling alliances, which were both prompted by selfish policies, he entered into a commercial partnership with Ahab's successor, the godless Ahaziah. Jehu, a prophet of Jehovah, had the courage to administer the sharp rebuke:—"Shouldest thou help the ungodly, and ove them that hate the Lord? Therefore is wrath upon thee from before the Lord."

The narrative of Jehoshaphat's venture with wicked Ahaziah reads very much like some of the "big bonanza" schemes of these days in Colorado and Nevada. The two monarchs join hands in a gold-hunting expedition. The sacred chronicler tells us that they built ships in partnership, on the Gulf of Akabah, for the purpose of seeking gold in Ophir. But the ill-starred enterprise was blasted by the Lord; the "ships went not; for they were wrecked at Ezion-geber." This was no accidental catastrophe; for the fearless Eliezer told Jehoshaphat plainly, "because thou hast joined thyself with Ahaziah the Lord hath broken (or wrecked) thy works." Upon that illuminated transparency which pictures the wreck of the gold-ships, there blazes out this truth: Partnership with sin is a fatal mistake.

We could fill the columns of this journal with illustrations of the truth drawn from our own observation. Many a sorrowing father can tell the story of what befell his beloved boy. The youth, fascinated with a set of gay fellows, who were "posted" in all the amusements of the town, fell into their snares, and spent his evenings with them in their favorite haunts. His night-key admits him to the door at home in the "small hours," while his foolish parents are on their pillows. It is the old, old story, short, but crushing. Like Eli, the father "restrains not" the son when he is "making himself vile," and, like Eli, he pays the bitter penalty. When the ruin has been wrought by a round of wine-suppers, theaters, brothels, the parents get their eyes open to see that evil company has wrecked their gold-ship. The streets of all our cities, like the rocks of Ezion-geber, are strewn with the ruins of high hope that went to pieces in wicked associations. When parents entrust a night-key to a son who has no self-restraint or Bible conscience, they give him a free pass on the road to perdition.

There is another phase of domestic life in which this Old Testament episode finds frequent parallels. We recall now an only daughter of rare beauty and accomplishments. Her perilous charms attracted a suitor who was coarse and sensual; but he was the heir of an expected fortune. His anticipated wealth bribed the foolish parents and overcame the daughter's scruples. She consented, contrary to her own judgment, to marry him. Within a few years he was disgraced, and she was divorced. God's law is: "Whatsoever ye sow, that shall ye also reap." It was that law, more irresistible than the winds of heaven, that wrecked the poor girl's gold-ship in broken hopes and broken heart. Of all the alliances with sin from mercenary motives, the most certainly fatal are those which are made under the sacred name of wedlock.

This truth of perilous partnerships is full of warnings to business men. Especially is it admonitory to young men who are anxious to reach wealth by short cuts and are not scrupulous as to the methods. The market is crowded with sharp schemers, the papers abound with glowing announcements of commercial ventures and "gilt-edged" enterprises. The number of credulous Jehoshaphats who are enticed into gold expeditions to Ophir, with Ahaziah in the partnership, is almost past belief. The wrecks are well nigh as numerous. It is not only from wild schemes of speculation that danger arises. Many a merchant, banker, manufacturer, or tradesman has been induced by friends or partners to ally himself with methods and practices which his own conscience, in his better moments, did not approve; but he hushed conscience with the promise of big profits, or with the current sophistry, "Oh! everybody does such things." The men who, like Wm. E. Dodge, refuse to "break God's law for a dividend," are not to be found in regiments. Commerce and trade, like politics, contain a thousand repetitions of the old Scripture line: "Because thou hast joined thyself with Ahaziah, the Lord hath wrecked thy work."

Be ye not partakers with other men's sins, is a divine admonition that has not lost its solemn portent. Though hand join in hand, wrong-doing will not go unpunished; if not punished in this world, then surely in the next. Just as certainly as the wages of sin is death, so certain is it that eternity will reveal the fearful wreck of innumerable gold-ships. The "loss total, and no insurance!"—T. L. Cuyler, in the Independent.

THE HARDER SERVICE OF LIFE.

The pine is trained to need nothing, and to endure everything. It is reservedly whole, self-contained, desiring nothing but rightness, content with restricted completion. Tall or short it will be straight. Small or large it will be round.

It may be permitted to those soft lowland trees that they should make themselves gay with show of blossom, and glad with pretty charities of fruitfulness. We builders with the sword have harder work to do for man, and must do it in close-set troops. To stay the sliding of the mountain snows, which would bury him; to hold in divided drops, at our sword-points, the rain, which would sweep away him and his treasure-fields; to nurse in shade among our brown fallen leaves the tricklings that feed the brooks in drought; to give massive shield against the winter, which shrieks through the bare branches of the plain—such service must we do him steadfastly while we live. Our bodies, also, are at his service; softer than the bodies of other trees, though our toil is harder than theirs.—John Ruskin, in "Modern Painters."

THE EFFECT OF WASHINGTON LIFE.

Some of the members of the Fiftieth Congress have been here with their wives, to select boarding-places, wrote Ben. Perley Poore, in one of his Washington letters. I never see the wife of a newly-elected Congressman come here without a feeling of pity for her. At her home she was a worthy woman, who did much to secure her husband's election by her popular manners and her good heart. To her it was a great thing to become the wife of a member of Congress; but on arriving here she found that she had only taken the first step towards social distinction. It was not long before a change commenced. From a modest lady, in a plain black silk and smooth brown locks, she burst into an ornamental gown of light satin, loaded with beads, which was not high enough in the neck by three inches, and her head had in front a mass of frizzles, which hid her broad brow, and made her look like an idiot or a Shetland pony. Before her diamond-decked fingers had been out of the domestic dish-water long enough for their knuckles to recover from their greasy odor of parboiling, she rode about in her hired coupe, and gave her orders to the coachman in a fault-finding tone. Her days became a round of ceaseless, meaningless toadyism, proclaimed by the women-writers as fashionable, and her nights were wild revels, with champagne, oysters, flowers, punch, lost temper and bitter disappointments. Now, her husband has not been re-elected. She must return to her little village, to mope and pine, and make herself generally disagreeable, but, as she drops out of life here, not a ripple on the tide of fashionable society will show where she has gone down. The wheels of folly roll round forever, and the wife of the new member will, in her turn, take the place of the one that has gone.

ANDREW'S LESSON.

BY AUNT LUCY.

Andrew was a rather bright, pretty boy, who enjoyed reading stories about Indians and cow-boys, or any kind of imaginary exploits, much better than studying history or arithmetic. Like most such boys he was troublesome at school, and happy nowhere. He thought that if he only had "a chance" he could do as grand things as he read of others doing; and that his family would soon become rich and he a noted man if he could only have his way.

How could he do anything! He was the eldest of nine children and his parents quite poor. He sometimes had to wash dishes or tend baby while his mother was trying to "catch up" with her sewing, or putting up fruit for so many hungry little ones. Such "girl's work" Andrew thought quite below the dignity of a young man nearly 15 years old.

Then, too, he was not allowed to go off nights and have a good time with the "other boys," to see what was going on up town, as men do. This was more than he could endure.

Andrew at last told one of his boy friends that "hash wasn't good enough" at his house. He was going to start out for himself and "live in style."

"But, what will you do?" said his friend, Johnnie.

"Oh, I've made up my mind to go off on a 'man-of-war,'" said Andrew. "It won't take me long to get to be an admiral; a few years, of course. Then I'll be ready to fight and conquer South America or Africa. I'll take you along if you want to go then. I'll be the king, you know; but you may be one of my highest servants, and have anything you want."

Johnnie was astonished, as most boys of 10 would have been, and decided that he would be ready to go any time.

"I have most five dollars in my bank, and I'll take my new clothes and start to-morrow," said Andrew; "but you mustn't tell, or I won't take you when I go to Africa."

"Oh, no!" said Johnnie.

So Andrew took a piece of paper and printed in large letters on it, "TO LET!" thinking of how astonished his father and mother would be to learn that he had really gone on a man-of-war; and of the pride his little brothers and sisters would feel when he came home a grand man with a uniform on.

It was fifty miles to the nearest sea-port, and Andrew often heard of the man-of-war of some foreign country being in port, and that the officers of any of them would be pleased to have such a smart boy apply for a situation on his ship. So, next morning he dressed in his good clothes, before any one else in the house was up, tied a few valuables, such as a silk handkerchief, a story-book and his ball, with a few clean clothes, in a bundle, and stole softly out of his room, stopping a minute to pin the notice, "TO LET!" on the door, then went out of the back door, laughing to himself at doing so smart a joke. He hurried to the station to catch the early train for the city.

Andrew was so occupied with thinking what he was going to do that he scarcely thought of the grief that his father and mother would feel when they found that he was gone. He had been so cross and teasing to his brothers and sisters that they were rather glad that he was gone. They found out from Johnnie where Andrew had gone, and his father wrote to a friend in the city to find him and see that he was not in danger, but not send him home till he wished to go, nor to give him money.

The noise and excitement at first pleased Andrew. He went to the wharfs to find a man-of-war, and walked about, watching the sailors on different ships as they worked. As they were scrubbing, or oiling and polishing the machinery with soiled, shabby clothes on and black hands and faces, he thought them very unlike those whom he had seen in picture-books. Others were unloading the cargo of coal, wood or other things. As night came on he did not know where to go, but saw sailors going into a boarding-house, so he went too and asked for supper and a room. The drinking, swearing and fighting was strange and frightful to him, and he thought his home was not quite so bad a place as he used to think while there. He used to think his father and mother were too pious. Now he thought he could sleep if only he could hear his father's prayer, or his mother say, "God bless you, dear," as she used to each night. But pride urged him to stay and follow out his plan.

Finally he succeeded in asking an officer of a man-of-war to take him on a voyage; but was rather ashamed when the officer asked him a few questions and told him that he had better go home and to school if he had a chance.

His father's friend found him and told him to come to his house whenever he was hungry; and he was glad to do so in a few days, as his money was gone. He slept there, too, and was pleased to hear of his father and mother; but still could not give up his idea of being a great man before going home.

How long the time seemed! At the end of three weeks he gave up and decided to go home again; but he had no money, so he had to walk the fifty miles back. And that walk, though it blistered his feet, did him much good. He had much more sense when he reached home than when he left. Of course the "boys" laughed at him, but he cared little for that now, but studied and worked as he never worked before.

That was several years ago, and he is now learning the blacksmith's trade; and has decided that the place God has given him in life is the best one for him.

A LUMP OF SUGAR.

One bitter cold morning last winter, as I was standing with my little Charley at the front parlor window, I saw a horse coming down the street, drawing a light wagon and driven by a young man. They came on until they were just in front of our house, when the horse stopped, backed the wagon up to the curbstone, and refused to go any further.

The young man began whipping the horse.

At last, when he found the horse would not go, he sent to the stable for the hostler, who came hurrying down. Together they whipped the horse, but to no purpose.

At last I became worried, and said to my little boy, "Charley, go down to the cook and tell her mamma wants her to give you a large lump of sugar, and take it out to the man, and ask him to give it to the horse."

Charley was pleased, and going quickly to the cook, got the sugar, and carried it out.

"Mister, Mister," I heard him say, "here is a lump of sugar to make that horse go."

The driver gave him the sugar.

Then the men waited until the horse had finished it, then the driver got into the wagon, pulled the reins, said, "Get up!" and the horse went on without further difficulty.

Charley came in, delighted. "If I were that man," said he, "I would carry a lump of sugar in my pocket, when I had to drive that horse. And now," continued he, "please give me a lump of sugar too." And he got it.—Dumb Animals.

EDUCATION BY THE TOUCH ALPHABET.

Laura Bridgeman, the celebrated blind deaf mute, who gained such notoriety for the wonderful gift she possessed of acquiring knowledge through her only two faculties, and whose death was so much lamented in the scientific world a short time ago, has a youthful and very worthy successor in Miss Helen A. Keller, who is at present an inmate of the Perkins Institute for the Blind in Boston. She was deprived of her sight and hearing at the age of eighteen months. At the age of six, being deaf, dumb, and blind, she was put under the charge of Miss Annie M. Sullivan, who undertook to instruct her in the touch alphabet, and so eager was her pupil for knowledge, and so quick of perception, that she now is able to read and write with perfect facility.

It will be a matter of the profoundest interest to watch the development of human nature uninfluenced by the usual surroundings of life, and to watch the soul expand and grow by its own virility. No better insight into the character of this poor unfortunate is afforded than by a letter that she wrote to a gentleman who sent her a mastiff puppy as a present. He did not have long to wait for his reward in the receipt of the letter printed below, which is taken from the Forest and Stream, to which we are indebted for it. Its purity of diction and correctness of style is quite remarkable for a child of only nine years, especially when it is remembered that practically all her knowledge has been imparted by sense of touch. The letter, which was written in pencil in clear, distinct, round characters, is as follows:

SOUTH BOSTON, Mass., Nov. 20, 1889.

MY DEAR MR. —:—I have just received a letter from my mother, telling me that the beautiful mastiff puppy you sent me had reached Tusculumbia safely. I thank you very much for the nice gift. I am very sorry that I was not at home to welcome her. But my mother and my baby sister will be very kind to her while her mistress is away. I hope she is not lonely and unhappy. I think puppies can feel very homesick as well as little girls. I should like to call her Lioness for your dog. May I? I hope she will be very faithful, and brave, too.

I am studying in Boston with my dear teacher. I learn a great many new and wonderful things. I study about the earth and the animals, and I like arithmetic exceedingly. I learn many new words, too. Exceedingly is one that I learned yesterday. When I see Lioness I will tell her many things which will surprise her greatly. I think she will laugh when I tell her she is a vertebrate, a mammal, a quadruped, and I shall be very sorry to tell her that she belongs to the order Carnivora. I study French, too. When I talk French to Lioness I will call her "Mon beau chien." Please tell Lion that I will take good care of Lioness. I shall be happy to have a letter from you when you like to write to me. From your loving little friend,

HELEN A. KELLER.

TEMPERANCE.

DO YOU PRAY FOR HIGH LICENSE?

Can a Christian vote for high license and pray, "Thy kingdom come?" is a question drawn from the question-box at the crusade anniversary at Hillsboro, Ohio, and answered by Miss Willard thus:

"What we license we protect. I cannot see how a Christian can vote for high license unless he is morally chloroformed. It has set back temperance reform one generation. It is the devil's counterfeit. Liquor men say, 'Work for high license; it is our only salvation.'"

Upon every hand are evidences of the wisdom of the effort to utterly suppress the saloon. Bloomington, Ill., has about 25,000 inhabitants. In all respects it is above the average of American cities. Its people love their homes and their boys. When fathers, and mothers, too, are fully aware of the saloon venom, and still urge license, we must conclude that they thus seek the safety of the children they love. But is the danger abated by license? Bloomington has the "restrictive" policy of high license. The fruits of that policy in that city are shown in the Pantagraph, a paper which has strongly advocated high license. It says, Nov. 22:

"The recent opening of two new saloons in this city calls to mind the fact that Bloomington to-day has a larger number of public resorts where intoxicating beverages are dispensed than at any time in its history. The number of saloons has steadily increased, until to-day there are fifty-nine licensed drinking places within the city limits, each paying $600 per year into the city treasury."

With the increased number of saloons will be the attendant increase of crime and suffering. Here certainly restriction does not restrict, and the boys' danger is enhanced. On the other hand, it is admitted that there are not so many open saloons in Iowa as formerly. The Secretary of State for Iowa gives these figures: 319 persons were sent to the penitentiaries from the whole State during the year ending July 31. Two death penalties were pronounced in 1888 and but one in 1889. Of the convicts in the penitentiaries 149 are saloon-keepers. That looks as if the parent in Iowa have a very exact notion of safety for their boys. By some means the jail and penitentiary supplies are being cut off. Senator Wilson of Iowa is anxious about the proposed repeal of the prohibition law of his State. He says: "The people in Iowa believe in parties keeping good faith as well as good men. The Republican party would break faith if it repealed the prohibition laws. I would not belong to a party that would so break faith."

It is said that Satan's four chief servants are "There's no danger," "Only this once," "Everybody does so," and "By-and-by." In their defense of the saloon these are active. God has said, "Now," "to-day," "follow me."

PROHIBITION IN THE DAKOTAS.

Ever since Judge Aikens gave his decision refusing to punish a man for selling liquor contrary to law, the saloon men of Sioux Falls have been quite jubilant. Those of the old saloon men who closed their doors on Jan. 1 have re-opened, and some ten or twelve others, thinking to take advantage of the situation, have been making preparations to open joints, thinking they could do a land-office business without paying a license or standing a chance of being punished. But the fondest hopes are sometimes blasted. This class, as well as the old saloon men, were given a surprise last night by the City Council passing an ordinance which provides that "Any person who shall, either by himself or his servants or employes, within the corporate limits of Sioux Falls, barter, sell, retail, or in any manner dispose of to be drunk upon the premises where sold, any liquors or any composition of which such liquor forms a part, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction, pay a fine of not less than $25 nor more than $100 for each and every offense." It is thought that the object of this bill is simply to secure license fees from the saloon men during the term existing between Jan. 1 and the date the contemplated prohibition law goes into effect.

Covetousness bursts the bag.—Cervantes.

WASHINGTON TEMPERANCE TALK.

It has been the custom of years in Washington to offer wine or punch or eggnog to one's New Year guests, and last Sabbath at the close of a temperance meeting at Wesley Chapel, Rev. Dr. Elliott rose and said he had two missions to perform before the benediction was pronounced. One was to protest against the revolting custom which characterizes New Year's day, that of the "pretty girls of the city making bar-maids of themselves for the day." His second mission was to advise all persons who had occasion to deal with grocers to resolve on New Year's day and make it a rule to purchase only from such establishments as sold no intoxicating liquors.

At the above mentioned meeting Bishop Hurst, during the course of an interesting temperance talk, said that as long as there exists the same unity of purpose which now actuates all the members of the temperance party, there can be no such thing as final defeat. In alluding to the recent failure in many of the Eastern States of the proposed constitutional amendments providing for prohibition, he pointed to the victories in the West, to the two Dakotas that had marched into the Union bearing aloft the banner of temperance. The friends of prohibition here are much gratified over the appearance of the recent proclamation of Governor Goodell of New Hampshire. In it they think they see the beginning of a crusade against rum in that State, and the accomplishment of greater things for temperance than have yet been achieved.

Charles Layton, 45 years old, a machinist by trade, created a sensation by entering the jewelry palace of Mermod, Jaccard & Co. and deliberately pocketing a gold watch. A number of people saw him and an officer was called. After being arrested he said that was just what he wanted. He had stolen the watch so that he would be put in jail where he could not get liquor. "He says his home is in Chicago, where his wife now is; that whisky was getting him down, and he resorted to heroic measures to save himself.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The vision of angels, vs. 8-14. The Bible is pre-eminently a book for working people. All through its pages we see the greatest honors paid to humble toil, and as a rule, if any especial revelation from heaven is to be made, the class born to wealth and ease are passed by. This is God's express ordering. See 1 Cor. 1: 26; Jas. 2: 5. Poverty has always been the mother of spiritual heroes. Perhaps in the eyes of the angels one of the greatest misfortunes that can happen to a man is to be born to riches. Yet, how many parents toil and save to lay up for their children that which may only prove a snare! This heavenly vision appeared to the shepherds while they were watching their flocks. Rome teaches that a life of monasticism, given up entirely to spiritual contemplation, is much holier than an active life occupied with business cares or family duties. But the Bible, from beginning to end, teaches us that revelations of God will come to us only when we are doing that will. And we are not doing it unless we are usefully employed. It is to be noted: (1) that these shepherds were expecting Christ to come. (2) They were expecting him soon. (3) They looked forward to his coming as the most joyful event that could happen. Had they been ignorant, or indifferent, or fearful, the angel would not have appeared to them with these good tidings of great joy. It is they who are waiting with glad expectancy Christ's second coming, not to the scoffing world or careless professors, that the signs of its approach will be revealed. The sign itself was one that only simple, believing hearts would have accepted. The priests and rulers and the great mass of the Jewish nation rejected Christ because he did not come in kingly state. Not so these humble shepherds. It is often made an occasion of reproach against a cause that its followers are humble and unknown men. Yet every movement from God has begun among the common people. There is not a single recorded instance in history of a successful religious reform that began at the top among the wealthy and fashionable classes. They who would have such reforms permanent and successful must follow God's plan. If we reject the cause of truth because none of the rich or great support it, we should very likely have rejected the infant Jesus because he was cradled in a manger. Another point brought out in this story is the ministry of angels. We do not take the comfort from this thought which is our privilege. The Bible teaches us that when we stand single handed for the right we are then the least alone.

2. The faith of the shepherds, vs. 15-20. They "were not disobedient to the heavenly vision," but in full belief that they should find everything as the angel said, they hastened to Bethlehem. Joy made them haste. So that joy which is born of a living faith will always make our feet swift to do the King's errands whether they lead us to the manger or the cross. "They made known abroad the saying," with this result: that "all that heard them wondered." So, many hear with wonder of some marvellous work of God, but it does not touch their hearts so that they are ready to seek Christ for themselves personally. "They returned glorifying and praising God." We do not praise and glorify God enough for what he has done for us, and for this reason too many Christians live in a spiritual atmosphere as cold and cheerless as a polar night. We warm and light our rooms when we expect guests. Not to do so would argue a lack of hospitality. It would look as if we neither expected nor were glad to see them. But how can Christ enter in and dwell in our hearts when there is no fire of generous devotion to assure him that he is welcome?

PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS FROM PELOUBET.

1. The greatest event in the history of the world is the coming of Jesus Christ.
2. The greatest blessings often come to us while we are performing our daily duties.
3. God's special favors come to men without regard to class or condition, to shepherds at Bethlehem, to wise men in the East.
4. The interest angels take in man's salvation shows the awful danger of sin, the greatness of salvation, and the value of the soul.
5. It teaches us to proclaim this salvation to all men.
6. Christ is the strongest possible proof of the love and good will of God to man.
7. Christ brings peace on the earth, peace between man and God, peace between man and man, peace in the soul. When Christ's principles prevail, there will be perfect peace.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—It is reported that the entire senior class of the United Presbyterian Seminary, Allegheny, have signified their readiness to go to the foreign field when their seminary course is ended.

—D. L. Moody, the evangelist, is conducting a series of meetings at Ann Arbor, Mich. He addressed fully 3,500 people in University Hall Sabbath night. Much interest has been manifested by students of the University in the meetings. Mr. Moody returns to this city and speaks in his own church Friday.

—One thousand Christian Chinamen are said to be connected with the Congregational mission in Oregon and California.

—The Methodist revival now in progress in Salt Lake City is capturing many Mormon converts from Scandinavia who have recently entered Utah.

—Mrs. Mary A. Moreland has been ordained pastor of the Congregational church at Wyandot, Ill.

—The property of the Princeton Theological Seminary amounts to $1,500,000. The Seminary, according to the catalogue just published, has 172 students, of whom ten are graduate students, fifty-nine seniors, fifty-two mid-dlers, forty-eight juniors, and three special.

—A Congregational council at Brockton, Tompkins county, N. Y., recently ordained Mrs. Annis F. Eastman to the Gospel ministry, and installed her as pastor of a church there. Mrs. Eastman is said to be well known in missionary circles, and last year filled her husband's pulpit at Canandaigua, N. Y., on Sunday evenings, to the satisfaction of the congregation.

—The sum of one hundred thousand dollars has been set aside from the profits of the Methodist Book Concern to be used for the relief of superannuated preachers. The Book Concern gives fifteen thousand dollars yearly to the support of denominational interests, and in its one hundred years of existence it has contributed in this way the round sum of sixteen hundred thousand dollars.

—The report from thirty-five Protestant theological seminaries in the United States show an increase of students in twenty-four schools. There are 2,597 young men preparing for the ministry, or 163 more than last year. The schools gave 68 missionaries in 1889, and 110 are booked for the foreign field this year. The contributions to missions by the schools in 1889 was $9,362.93.

—The headquarters of the Chicago Central W. C. T. U. were crowded Thursday last to attend an extra session for prayer. Many stood long and patiently, so great was the interest. The evangelist, Miss Elizabeth Scovel, of Nashville, Tenn., led during the first hour, talking on transformation. Mrs. E. V. Baker filled the second hour with words of encouragement, urging trust in God, a "looking up and not down." At 12 o'clock Miss Frances Willard took the chair and read from the first chapter of Joel. She said that years ago Mr. Moody used to say to her that the world was growing worse, but that she did not agree with him then. But since life had brought its experience she found he was right; at least she saw what he meant. It was with the right and wrong of to-day as it is with the electric light and its shadows; there is no other light as brilliant, neither does any other cast so black a shadow. In the light of to-day that which was once excusable was now a serious wrong.

—The First Presbyterian Church, Bellefontaine, Ohio, has recently had a gracious work of the Holy Spirit, resulting in forty-two additions to the church, thirty-four of whom united on confession. Special services were conducted for three weeks by Rev. Dr. Wells, with the pastor, Dr. Kalb.

—A series of meetings in the U. P. church in Morning Sun, Iowa, Rev. T. C. McKelvey, pastor, has just closed. Four were added to the membership. A good interest was awakened among the members. Rev. J. R. Logue assisted in these meetings.

—Rev. Dr. George Dana Boardman of Philadelphia gave the closing discourse of a course of weekly lectures on the Old Testament, on December 29. At the close of the lecture he stated that this lecture closed an important epoch in his life. On October 5, 1864, he inaugurated the consecutive study of the Bible. He began with the New Testament, and then took up the Old Testament. He did not select his subjects, but followed the Bible. There have been twenty-three annual courses of lectures, and about forty lectures in each course. He added that if any epitaph were placed on his tombstone, he hoped it would be simply the words, "He tried to unfold the Word of God."

—There are 40,000 wild Indian children in this country. Of this number, all told, there are but 12,000 gathered into the Government and Mission schools, leaving 28,000 children to whom no school opens its doors, and to whom no Christian missionary comes. There are at least sixty whole tribes upon whose darkness no ray of Gospel light has fallen, as pagan and as savage as were their ancestors when the first white man landed upon these shores!

—The pastors of Xenia, Ohio, and professors in the United Presbyterian Theological Seminary, have united in an address to the Christian people of that city of the momentous subject of Sabbath observance. They speak especially of the growing custom of conducting funerals, traveling on railroads, patronage of the postoffice, and the neglect of the rights of servants on the Lord's day. This address might be profitably repeated throughout the country.

—In the year 1861 the late Emperor William I. of Germany (then King of Prussia), became a subscriber of £25 annually to the S. P. C. K., writing at the time to Lord Shaftesbury: "I also, like my illustrious predecessors, fully and heartily concur in the efforts of the society to make known the Word of God amongst the children of Israel, and am willing to assure to it henceforth the protection and favor which it has hitherto enjoyed." The late Emperor Frederick III. became a subscriber on his accession to the throne; and now the society have just received the intimation that the reigning Emperor William II. has been pleased to continue the subscription for five years.

—An eight-days' mission has recently been held in Tokushima, Japan. Rev. W. P. Buncombe, C.M.S., in his report, says: "As an illustration of the work the Holy Ghost has been doing in the hearts of men here, I may mention the case of Mr. Uyeda (whose wife was baptized in 1887), one of the chief officials of Tokushima. Mr. Evington and I went to see him a week after the mission, and had a good deal of conversation with him. We found all his objections to Christianity were silenced, and he was quite convinced of the power of God as shown in the Gospel. He said he had seen the effects of Christianity in his two clerks who had become Christians about twelve months since. Previously they were wild, loose men, like most of the young Japanese men, but now they are completely changed; and he said: 'Now they even look after me and try to keep me out of mischief.' Mr. Evington pressed him to decide for Christ, but he holds back because he is not prepared to face the consequences. Next year, under the new constitution, religious liberty is granted to all Japanese, and then he thinks it will be easier for him, and I believe the same is the case with many an official of the Government. For the first time he knelt with us in prayer. His wife is very much rejoiced, and is praying earnestly for his real heart conversion. May we ask your prayers at home, too, on his behalf, that now, in the time when it is more difficult, he may be led to confess Christ and join the Christian church?"

IN BRIEF.

A Kentucky grand jury has indicted a Roman Catholic priest for teaching Romanism in one of the public schools. It also indicted school officers for conniving at the conduct of the priest.

While the Roman Catholic church has grown of late years numerically in England, it is said the priests have great difficulty with the younger members, on whom the priestly yoke sits heavily.

The tallest finished chimney in the world is at Paisley, Scotland, and is over 500 feet high. The tallest in the United States is erected on the grounds of the Fall River Iron Works. It is 340 feet high above the granite base, and 30 feet square at the bottom. It furnishes draught for four factories.

The recent discovery by a New England chemist of a cheap method of dissolving zinc by combining it with hydrogen is regarded as a most valuable one. The product is a solution called zinc-water, and has the property of making wood to which it has been applied absolutely fire-proof, and at a very low cost.

According to Erastus Wiman the amount of English gold invested in American industries within the past two years is fully $100,000,000. Failing in their efforts to convert the people of this country to free trade the British financiers are determined to share in the benefits of the American policy of protection.

Electricity, it is said, is now employed in India to prevent snakes from entering dwellings. Before all the doors and around the house two wires are laid, insulated from each other, and connected with an induction apparatus. When the snake attempts to enter the house he completes the circuit and is killed by the shock.

The steamer City of Paris, of the Inman line, plying between New York and Liverpool, is of 10,500 tons burden, 18,000 horse power, and has maintained a mean speed of 23.73 miles per hour throughout the voyage of about 3,000 miles. She has fifty-four furnaces, and her boiler tubes exceed thirteen miles in aggregate length.

Like most of the successful men of the present age, Mr. Gould is extremely methodical and systematic in his habits. He rises every morning at precisely 7:30, seldom varying from that hour more than ten minutes. At 8 o'clock he sits down to his breakfast, which in his case is usually French rolls and a cup of coffee, and expects to find every member of his family present at that meal. Breakfast over, his private secretary is called in and the numerous begging letters of the morning's mail are laid upon the table. Each member selects at random a number of these letters and reads them over. If any one of them are impressed by any of the letters they are laid aside for future reference, while the others go into the waste basket. Those letters which have been laid aside are then taken up and discussed, and if a majority of those present conclude that it is a case which really deserves assistance the assistance is sure to come within a very few hours in a very substantial form and without the slightest hint as to the identity of the donor.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Herbert G. D. Crawford of Philadelphia has come to Chicago on a unique mission. He went to Pittsburgh some time ago to put into execution a Philadelphia scheme to build workingmen's houses. The plan originated in the brain of Joseph R. Hancock, who is now building a square of dwellings in Philadelphia. The idea is to buy up a whole block of land. On this comfortable houses are built round in a single block with a court-yard in the center. In the yard is a large laundry and cooking-house. The proprietor of the block operates both so that the inhabitants of the houses have neither any washing nor cooking to do. It is thought that this idea is a great improvement over the New York system of flats, in which the inhabitants are mixed up promiscuously in a demoralizing way. Each of the houses on the Hancock scheme will be as entirely separate as any house in a row.

Mr. Crawford failed to get the plan to work in Pittsburgh, because the price of property in the central part of the city, where such hotel houses would be an advantage, was held so high that he was not able to make a purchase. He hopes for better success at Chicago.

The following is an interesting summary of the Cronin trial from the beginning:

The case came up before Judge McConnell Aug 26, 1889. Several days were spent in arguing the motions for separate trials, and on Aug. 30 the trial of Coughlin, Burke, O'Sullivan, Beggs, and Kunze for the murder of Dr. Cronin began. For fifteen weeks the trial lasted, stretching out over a period of 108 days. Eliminating Sundays and other days when from different causes no court was held, it actually consumed eighty-five days, or seven weeks. The jury getting occupied forty-six days, and the hearing of testimony, speeches, etc., thirty-nine days, exclusive of Sundays and all other days when court adjourned. There were eight weeks of jury-getting, five weeks of testimony, and two weeks of speech-making. In order to secure eleven good men and true to make up the jury 1,115 citizens of Cook county were examined and all but twelve excused. The state excused seventy-eight peremptorily and the defense ninety-seven, while the other 928 veniremen were excused for cause. The first venireman was examined Friday, Aug. 30, the last venireman Tuesday, Oct. 22. In all 207 witnesses testified for and against the Cronin defendants, many of them being recalled a second and third time. The state had 141 witnesses and the defense sixty-six. Captain Francois Villars was the first witness. He appeared on behalf of the prosecution Oct. 24. The last witness testified for the defense on Dec. 3. The jury was out seventy hours and thirty minutes, retiring Friday afternoon at 4:30 o'clock and remaining out till Monday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock.

HOME AND HEALTH.

HOUSEHOLD HYGIENE.

We cannot too highly value the importance of allowing the sunlight free access to all portions of our dwellings. There is nothing like sunshine and pure air, to search out and cleanse away all organic impurities. The sun is the great life-giver to both the animal and vegetable world. Every one is familiar with the fact that plants droop and die if deprived of sunlight and air, and can we presume that human beings will thrive and flourish where flowers wither and die? Suppose it does fade the carpets and curtains, and make the furniture look rusty; far better that not a color of the carpet remain than that the roses fade from the cheeks of your loved ones from the lack of it.

But the sun brings flies, says the careful housewife. Well, flies are scavengers, and they destroy these very germs we have been talking about. They subsist largely upon germs, and that is the reason they are always present wherever decomposition is taking place. Doubtless the good housewife who objects to the sunlight on this account would find a different reason why flies congregate about her dwelling if she would carefully examine her kitchen and back yard. Perhaps she might see in close proximity to her back door a garbage barrel, redolent with an odor of sour milk and decomposing remnants of past meals, from which issues a constant invitation to the flies to take part in a most luxuriant repast; and fortunate, indeed, would it be for the inmates of the house were there flies in sufficient numbers to devour all the poison germs from these foul reservoirs so frequently found at the rear of a finely-kept front.

A foul smelling waste barrel ought never to be permitted; in fact, it were far better to burn all leavings and table refuse as fast as made, which can be done without smell or smoke by opening all the back drafts of the kitchen range and placing them on the hot coals to dry and burn, as they will in a few minutes. If the table refuse must be saved, the receptacle should be entirely emptied every day and thoroughly scrubbed with hot suds and an old broom. Never pour the chamber slops in with the kitchen waste, and above all never allow them to be emptied on the ground in close proximity to the well. Any lady would be horrified to find her servant pouring slops into the well, but she does almost as bad when she pours them on the ground or into a drain leading to a cess-pool only a few feet from the well, since the porous soil allows them to filter through into the well.

The water from which the family supply is obtained should be frequently tested for impurities, since often, that which looks the most clear and sparkling and tastes the most refreshing, may be contaminated with organic poison of the most treacherous character. A good and simple test solution, and one that any housewife can use, may be easily prepared by dissolving twelve grains of caustic potash and three of permanganate of potash in an ounce of distilled water, or filtered soft water. Add a drop of this solution to a glass of the water to be tested. If the pink color imparted by the solution disappears at once, add another drop of the solution and continue adding a drop until the pink color will remain for half an hour or more. The amount of the solution necessary to secure a permanent color is a very fair index to the quality of the water. If the color imparted by the first one or two drops disappears within a few minutes, the water should be rejected as probably dangerous.

Considering the fact that at least one-third of life is spent in bed, it is very essential that all our sleeping arrangements should be such as are most conducive to health. The greatest of care should be taken to arrange for an abundant supply of fresh air at all times and seasons, since the air of an occupied, unventilated apartment very soon becomes exceedingly foul from organic poison, and disease germs are always abundant. It is also of the greatest importance that bed-clothes and bedding be thoroughly subjected to the disinfection of the air and sunlight each day, since the human body throws off through the pores of the skin, and by the breath every night, several ounces of waste animal matter, much of which is absorbed by the bed-clothes. If no precaution is taken to rid them of this effete matter it is re-absorbed by the next occupant of the bed; or if long neglected the waste decomposes and gives the unpleasant, fusty odor often experienced in sleeping rooms. The use of feather beds is for this reason especially detrimental to health, since the feathers not only undergo a slow decomposition themselves, but on account of their remarkable hygroscopic properties absorb the fetid exhalations thrown off from the body during sleep, thus becoming in time a serious source of poisoning.

In renovating their rooms housekeepers sometimes forget to remove all old paper from their walls before putting on the new. This is a very objectionable plan, since it is only covering up the dirt that should be got rid of, and is almost sure to become a fertile soil for mold and mildew.

Every detail of the home life requires the closest vigilance and care, for disease, like sin, is ever creeping in at most unlooked for times and places. Nature's laws are fixed and inexorable, and if we do not heed their requirements through love and reverence for them, we are taught them through pain. And every woman, who "looketh well to the ways of her household," should feel in duty bound to guard against every point that can affect the health of those under her care.—Mrs. Dr. J. H. Kellogg, in the Union Signal.

An Ohio lady was so frightened by a snake that her glossy black hair turned white as snow. It was soon returned to its original color by Hall's Hair Renewer.

The Fall of the Christians: An Historical Romance of Japan in the 17th Century. By Prof. W. C. Kitchin, Ph. D.

"The Fall of the Christians" is a history of the desperate struggle of Christianity against Paganism in Japan over two hundred and fifty years ago, as related in ancient manuscripts discovered by the author. There were then several thousands of Christians in Japan, and the attempt to exterminate them led to one of the most sanguinary struggles recorded in history. The heroism of the Christians, both men and women, and their fortitude under the most appalling dangers, as portrayed by Professor Kitchin, will enlist the sympathies of the civilized world.

Herbert Ward, Stanley's Companion.

Herbert Ward, the companion of Stanley in his explorations in Africa, is one of the few men connected with Stanley's African explorations who has ever returned alive from the "Dark Continent." Mr. Ward's articles running through eight numbers of the "Ledger" are of the most intensely interesting description, and cover five years of his adventures in Africa, and they will be illustrated by sketches made by Mr. Ward, and by the reproduction of photographs taken by him in Africa. These pictures will throw much light upon the manners and customs of the hitherto unknown cannibal tribes of Africa.

Life in British America, By Rev. E. R. Young.

Being the adventures and experiences of Rev. E. R. Young, the celebrated missionary, and his wife during their residence in the Polar region twelve hundred miles north of St. Paul, in which Dr. Young narrates how he tamed and taught the native wild Indians of the Northwest; how he equipped himself for and how he made his perilous sledging and hazardous canoe trips when visiting all the Indian settlements within five hundred miles of his home.

Nihilism in Russia, By Leo Hartmann, Nihilist.

Leo Hartmann, a fugitive from Russian authorities, has been connected with the most daring feats of the Russian Nihilists. Mr. Hartmann shows how the intelligent people of Russia are becoming Nihilists in consequence of the despotism of the form of government. A participant in plots to kill the Czar, such as the blowing up of the Winter Palace, he is able to give true information as to how this and other great schemes were accomplished. The situation in Russia is sufficient to increase the love of every true American for our form of government.

Into Mischief and Out, By Elizabeth Stuart Phelps.

This is a story of college life. It describes, in a graphic manner, the troubles which overtake bright students who get into mischief, and their skillful manoeuvres to evade the consequences of their conduct.

The Character of the New York Ledger.

The New York Ledger directs its efforts towards crowding out that trashy and injurious literature which is poisoning the minds of American youth. The Ledger appeals to the intelligence of the people, and depends for its support on that taste which prevails for innocent and amusing entertainment and healthful instruction. The Ledger will contain the best Serial and Short Stories, Historical and Biographical Sketches, Travels, Wit and Humor, and everything interesting to the Household.

FARM NOTES.

THE FARMER A BUSINESS MAN.

Probably no occupation is carried on with so little regard to business rules as that of farming. The farmer requires more education, and a knowledge of greater variety of subjects, than any of the so-called learned professions.

The man who knows only how to turn a good furrow, prepare the soil for the seed, stop the growth of weeds, and promote the growth of the plant, has not mastered the art of successful farming. Nor has the man who knows only how to raise fine horses, sleek cattle and fat swine, or how to fertilize his fields to the best advantage, raise the best corn or potatoes, or the highest yield of oats or barley.

The man who to-day really makes a thorough success as a farmer must combine all these elements of knowledge and many more.

It used to be said that any fool could be a farmer; but at the present day people begin to realize the fact that the farmer needs the most education. The time has gone by when the haphazard, slipshod, go-as-you-please methods of farming can be made to pay.

Agriculture has come to be recognized as a science. Millions of acres of soil in our States and Territories have been opened up to the plow, and their surplus products forced upon the markets of the world. The products of the cheap labor of foreign countries are also emptied into our midst to glut our markets. The farmers upon the worn soil of the older States, and especially our own New England, must look closely to the details of their business or go to the wall.

What would be thought of the manufacturer who did not know to the fraction of a cent the cost of the raw material and labor put into a yard of cloth, or the manufacturer of leather who did not know the exact cost of the material and labor required to make a case of boots and shoes, or the manufacturer of oleomargarine who knows what it costs per pound, and laughs in his sleeves at the farmer's gilt edge butter.

And yet how many farmers can tell the cost of a pound of butter or pork, a bushel of potatoes or corn, or a ton of hay? They sell their products for what they can get offered, not knowing whether they are making or losing.

The remedy is this: When farmers come to realize that farming is a business as much as manufacturing or banking, or buying and selling goods, and by careful keeping of accounts learn to figure the cost of every article they produce, then a successful beginning will have been made. Let them keep debit and credit with every acre of corn or potatoes or beans or grain.

Charge each acre with the interest on its value, the probable amount of fertilizing material used by the crop, and the cost of labor in its care. Credit it with the market value of the crop produced. The difference between the two will represent the profit or loss.

A like account should be kept with the herd of cows. If any one of the number entails a loss upon you, dispose of her.

Keep a strict account with the orchard, if you have one. Debit it with the labor employed in its care and in the harvesting of its fruits. Credit it with the value of its golden product, and learn from the balance on the right side of the ledger that it is one of your best friends. I have said that the farmer needs to be educated for his business. One branch of study I would particularly recommend, that is book-keeping. I speak from personal knowledge and experience and know it pays. It is like the compass to the mariner.

The farmer's book is one of reference to which he can at any time refer for date of articles bought or sold, and price given or received for the same. This book will solve the great problem, "Where does our money go?" and perchance lead to more careful consideration and economy.

Having learned to calculate the cost of the products of the farm, the next business is to know how to sell them. Make

The Best Remedy Taken in Season,

FOR Sore Eyes, Cancerous Humors, Prurigo, and other manifestations of depraved blood, is Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Used persistently, according to directions, it effectually eradicates all traces of disease, and restores the sufferer to a sound and healthy condition.

"I hereby certify that I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla, with excellent success, for a cancerous humor, or, as it seemed to be, cancer on my lip. Shortly after using this remedy the sore healed. I believe that the disease is entirely cured, and consider Ayer's Sarsaparilla to be an infallible remedy for all kinds of eruptions caused by impure blood."—Charles G. Ernberg, Vasa, Minn.

"For years my blood was in an unhealthy condition. After having tried other medicines without success, I have lately taken Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and with the best results. I think this medicine is the only blood-purifier that can be absolutely relied upon."—Mrs. Oliver Valentine, 144 Quincy st., Brooklyn, New York.

"A neighbor of ours who was rendered nearly blind from scrofula, was entirely cured by using three bottles of Ayer's Sarsaparilla."—Stephens & Best, Druggists, Ball Play, Tenn.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla cured me of a bad case of blood-poisoning and restored me to health. My system was saturated with a poison which all ordinary remedies failed to reach, but Ayer's Sarsaparilla did the work completely. This was twenty-one years ago, and no symptoms of the disease have since appeared. I have recommended this wonderful medicine to hundreds of people, similarly afflicted, and always with the most satisfactory results."—A. H. Christy, Bourbon, Ind.

Do away with the middleman. Don't employ your local marketers and expressmen to sell your products; they will return you as little as they dare to. There's too many following in the footsteps of "Old Hutch," the millionaire of Chicago, who figured so largely in the recent wheat corner.

A GREAT SUCCESS

The Equitable Homestead Corporation, an association incorporated under the laws of California, has now ONE THOUSAND ACRES of the finest raisin land in Fresno county in process of cultivation.

SO MANY INQUIRIES

have been made about the organization of this colony, and the profits of raisin culture, and such a desire manifested to have the Equitable enlarged so as to admit more members, that I have decided to organize another colony association on the same plan.

NOTE THIS:

I have 2,000 ACRES of land which I will dispose of in the following manner: It is divided into five-acre lots and multiples of five. It will all be planted in raisin grapes and other fruits and cultivated at actual cost, the purchaser paying in cash just what it takes to plant and cultivate it, which he may do in small installments during three years' time, which brings

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

First Assistant Postmaster-General Clarkson, whose paper, the Register, is advocating high license for Iowa, has decided to resign the office of Assistant Postmaster-General and to return to journalism.

The Senate committee on the world's fair of 1892 concluded Saturday its hearing of arguments in behalf of the rival cities seeking its location within their respective borders. The last day was devoted to New York and Chicago, in recognition, apparently, of the fact that the real contest is between these two cities. Chauncey M. Depew was the main speaker for New York. Mayor Cregier, Hon. Thomas B. Bryan and Mr. E. T. Jeffrey represented Chicago.

Senator Butler has indicated his intention to speak this week on his bill providing for the emigration of Negroes from the South, at public expense, under the direction of the Quartermaster General of the Army. Should he address the Senate on this subject, Senator Ingalls and other Republican Senators will reply.

CHICAGO.

The Supreme Court gives Charles J. Beattie of Chicago until Jan. 15 to show cause why he should not be disbarred from practice in this State for procuring fraudulent divorces.

Ten tons of molten steel were spilled in the converter pit in the rolling mills of the Illinois Steel Company, at Ashland avenue and Thirty-first street, and John Crist, John Morten, and David Cullom were badly burned.

The formal motion for a new trial in the case of the four convicted Cronin suspects, Burke, Coughlin, O'Sullivan and Kunze, was filed in the Criminal Court of Cook County Friday, and argument on the motion is set for Tuesday. Forty-three reasons are given why the new trial should be granted.

An unaccountable boiler explosion occurred Friday in the middle of the business district, in the basement of a large printing house. One man was fatally injured and several slightly. The concussion broke all the glass in the vicinity.

STORMS.

A blizzard prevailed throughout Nebraska all day Sunday, ten inches of snow having fallen and the drifts piling up. Trains are delayed on all roads, freight traffic being very seriously interfered with.

A severe blizzard raged Sunday in Kansas, Missouri and Nebraska. Dispatches from points in Kansas say that the storm is by far the worst of the season, and some points report that it is the most severe ever experienced. The storm began last night, continued throughout the day and most of to-night. Far western points in Kansas report that the storm ceased and the weather cleared about 11 o'clock. The results of this storm there have been disastrous. On the average the snow fell about eight inches on the level, but the strong wind drifted it badly, and many trains on the railroads have been abandoned or greatly delayed.

At Hiawatha, Kan., the correspondent reports that the snow has drifted in places as high as the one-story houses, completely blocking the highways and railroads.

At Wichita, Kan., the snow is reported as fifteen inches deep and badly drifted. All trains on the Santa Fe, Wichita and Western, Rock Island and Missouri Pacific Railroads in the neighborhood of Wichita have been abandoned, more, however, in anticipation of the effects of the storm than on account of it.

A special from Sardis, Miss., reports a heavy storm of wind, rain and hail. The Episcopal and Presbyterian churches and Ballentine's livery stable were blown down, Benderson Bros.' store and the Reporter office were unroofed, and several stores and residences damaged. No fatalities are reported.

At 4:30 Sunday afternoon a cyclone struck the southwestern section of St. Louis, and swept on through to the northern limits, marking a pathway nearly a quarter of a mile wide and leaving death and desolation in its track. There was scarcely any warning of the approaching storm, owing to the fact that the sky had been overcast for several hours before the full force of the wind was felt, and it was all over in an incredibly brief period of time, those residing in and near the path of the cyclone scarcely realizing what had happened until it was all over. In addition to dozens of dwellings and stores in the southern, central and northern sections of the city more or less wrecked, the following big buildings were damaged: The Anchor mills, Goodwin candle factory, Pullman shops, Van Brock's furniture factory, Kingsland and Ferguson's farm implement works, Missouri Pacific Hospital, Hodgen School, German Evangelical church, Second Presbyterian church, and others yet to be heard from.

COUNTRY.

The steamship Hondo brought the latest news from the Nicaragua Canal proper. The health of the entire American party is good, and the work is being done in a steady and thorough manner.

For their participation in the Sullivan-Kilrain fight in Mississippi William Muldoon, W. E. Harding, Mike Cleary and Mike Donovan were arrested at New York Wednesday and held for examination for extradition to Mississippi, the accused giving bail.

The Secretary of the Iowa State Agricultural Society estimates the crop in the State in 1889 to be: Corn, 326,073,000 bushels; oats, 113,000,000 bushels; potatoes, 21,000,000 bushels; wheat, 27,000,000 bushels. The value of the total crop, exclusive of grass, is estimated at $127,000,000.

Word was received at Denver that a cave-in occurred in the Victor coal mine, near Trinidad, burying five men. It is believed that all of the men are killed.

Gov. Lowry's message condemns the carrying of concealed weapons and recommends stronger laws to remedy the great evil. Reference is made to the Sullivan-Kilrain fight and disapproval of such scenes as were enacted at Purvis last July is expressed.

Two thousand four hundred and ninety-five telegraph poles have been cut down in New York, and 14,500,000 feet of wire have come down.

At St. Louis, Mo., several horses have been killed and many small fires have been started in the last few days by electric wires which were broken by a storm, and which are said to be in a demoralized condition.

From New York 235 deaths in one day are reported. This is the highest number yet recorded in that city in a winter month. The marked increase is due to influenza epidemic.

W. L. Egleson, the Topeka man who is endeavoring to induce the Negroes of South Carolina to emigrate to Oklahoma, has already succeeded in settling 800 Negroes there. They are mostly from Topeka and have left during the last six months. They have established a colony near King-fisher, and are opening farms and building houses.

The Times-Democrat's Jackson, Miss., special says: The municipal election passed off quietly and without any disturbance. Only about fifteen or twenty Negroes, all told, presented themselves and asked the privilege of voting, but on being told by men stationed near the polls that there was a peaceable election and that their voting might cause trouble, they quietly withdrew, none of them insisting on voting.

The compulsory school law was put to the test at Shelbyville, Ill., and Mrs. Jane Axford, who kept her boy at home because she is so poor that he has to assist in earning the living, is in jail. Five dollars and costs was the penalty attached, and the poor woman, unable to pay, was put into prison.

FOREIGN.

The year's immigration is 65,000 from Ireland and 254,000 from the whole of Great Britain. There is a large falling off in the movement to the United States, Canada and Australia, and an increase in the immigration to other places.

The Dowager Empress Augusta of Germany died at 4:30 o'clock Jan. 7 from the effects of an attack of influenza, from which she had been suffering for several days.

Henry M. Stanley has accepted the invitation to attend a banquet to be given in his honor by Americans in London. The date of the banquet can not be definitely fixed, but Mr. Stanley has sent a cable dispatch stating that he will probably be in London in the middle of February. Mr. Lincoln, the American minister, will preside. He will present to Mr. Stanley an American flag and a massive silver shield inwrought with African scenes.

The Peter's Pence for 1889 yielded to the Pope $30,000 less than in 1888. The legacies bequeathed to the Pope during the year amount to $800,000.

An official decree in Brazil just promulgated proclaims the separation of church and state, guarantees religious liberty equally and continues the life stipends granted under the monarchy.

Mr. Stanley has written a letter to Mr. Bruce, the son-in-law of Dr. Livingstone, describing the expulsion from his kingdom of Mwanga by a revolt of the combined native Christians and Mahometans, and the subsequent conversion of Mwanga himself to Christianity. This Mwanga was the persecutor who murdered Bishop Hannington. Stanley says that the fact that the native Christians had grown strong enough to make a revolution in one of the most powerful of the African kingdoms is one that, if Livingstone could have known it, would have filled his dying moments with content and love. The most deadly persecutions—the stake, the knife and the bullet—had failed to shake the staunch fidelity of these African converts.

A dispatch from Cairo says that the Khedive sent a special train to meet Mr. Stanley at Suez Monday. It is understood that Emin Pasha has sent to one of his relatives a dispatch saying that his health is now in a satisfactory condition.

The total number of cases of influenza in Berlin is estimated at 400,000. There have been 650 deaths due to the disease.

On Saturday England's ultimatum, demanding the recall of the Portuguese forces, officials, and expeditions of every kind from the banks of the Shire, beyond the confluence of the Rus, and south of the Zambesi and from Mashona Land, was sent to Lisbon. If Portugal failed to reply in twenty-four hours, the British Legation would board the Enchantress and await a reply at Vigo. The King immediately convened a Cabinet council to consider the ultimatum. The government replied that Portugal, yielding to strong pressure from a power of the first rank, being too weak to withstand it, would order the withdrawal of the Portuguese from the Shire and Mashona Land, while reserving all right to the Portuguese crown in those territories. It is asserted that this decision was further influenced by reports of an intention on the part of the British to make naval demonstrations at Oullimahee, Deleog Bay and St. Vincent. The Portuguese are said to be much incensed at the action of their government, and mobs are active.

South Dakota is one of the States with a White Banner. She began without the saloon, and her career promises to be glorious. Mark how last Wednesday the first bill passed the legislature. It was to secure the payment of outstanding debts,—the first thing for honest men to do. When the business was done the dispatches tell us that "Both houses adjourned for five minutes to celebrate the event. After loud cheering prayer was called for, and the two houses in joint assembly bowed their heads while a fervent prayer was said by the chaplain, who asked that this first act of the new commonwealth be blessed by God, and that all other acts that may be adopted may be also worthy of the same blessing. Such a record thrills us with joy.

The Daily News of this city suggests the question which naturally arises in the mind of every thoughtful person in view of lodge immolation in West Virginia: "To one not versed in the rites of Freemasonry the question naturally arises: Is it absolutely necessary to use a block and tackle and a vault thirteen feet deep to impress on a candidate for Masonic honors the sacredness of his vows?" Why, too, does a man need to be knocked into a blanket, stripped to indecency, compelled to drink wine from a human skull, or be sworn to have his throat cut, or to be threatened with any one of the hundred penalties, or to take any one of the hundred oaths of the lodge to help him keep his obligation? And what is the use of those vows when they are taken? and what of the lodge anyhow? Can the News answer?

It is said that Archbishop Corrigan, the Romish prelate of New York, is about to introduce the order of Dominican Nuns in that city. These young women are not allowed to eat meat, but many other people exclude meat from their diet. They keep the "black fast" in Lent, abstaining from eggs and milk, but that is very endurable also. But when it comes to the work of life, these nuns support themselves by making vestments and altar ornaments, and two of them are kept kneeling constantly, day and night, before the Romish wafer ("bread-god") in the "tabernacle." Now it must be doubted whether these poor girls would not be as sure of heaven if they frittered away their lives on the fashions and in society. If the Romish prelate of New York can find no better work for young women to wear out their lives upon he should be asked to resign.

"What reason is there that every church of average numbers and resources may not have its missionary abroad as well as its pastor at home?" says Dr. A. T. Pierson. The New London, Conn., Congregational church decides there is no reason why it should not have a foreign pastor as well as their enterprising home pastor, Dr. Blake. The church made arrangements to support Rev. C. N. Ransom, a Chicago Congregational seminary man of 1889; but the Seminary desiring to provide half of Mr. Ransom's salary, the church and school students have united in his support. How beautiful, said one, for a church in the far East and a school in the West to work together in sending the light of the Gospel to those that walk in darkness. Not less than ten men are supported in foreign fields by the different seminaries.

Revolution in Brazil is not yet an assured success. The arrest of a number of prominent citizens last week for promoting a counter revolution shows that there is nothing yet established that can be called popular government. The men whom the Masonic lodges have placed in power, as the provisional government, are beginning to walk the way of the French Masons of the Revolution, who attempted to abolish death and set off time by decades. Their Brazilian imitators have adopted the ideas of the Positiveist, Auguste Comte, whose conception of deity was humanity personified. They have abolished the Romish calendar with its saints days and have ordered Comte's Positiveist calendar be substituted therefor. This calendar substitutes the name of some eminent man for a saint's name for each day, divides the year into thirteen months, and dedicates the months to Moses, Homer, Shakespeare, Dante, etc.

The convention of our colored citizens, who prefer to call themselves Afro-Americans, was held in this city last week. It was a meeting of much interest, of some disappointments, but which will act, on the whole, to gain the attention of all men to the respectful plea that free speech should not be denied to free men. The convention showed marked ability in its addresses, and seemed able to wield the blade of satire as skillfully as men of any other color. In the face of what has been accomplished by the Negro in America, and his rapid development since the war, the Southern press must cease to declare him utterly abased, or sink to the condition of utter untrustworthiness. The Afro-American has earned a better right to the protection of our flag than some other "hyphenated" Americans that might be named.

For years our best managed railway companies have drawn the line on the saloon, and discharged every employe who frequented them. This was not a prohibition measure but pure policy. The Wabash railway has gone a step further and has issued a positive order that no boy or young man shall be employed in any of its shops or other departments for the purpose of learning any trade or skilled work, unless he bring a certificate from his instructors stating that he has completed the studies of the second grammar department of school work. The reason for this order is that the company has found that young men who have completed the English branches of study learn skilled work much more readily than those who have not, and that it can find sufficient young men who have this qualification. This measure will react for the benefit of our education laws, as the other does for prohibition, so far as the influence of the road extends. It suggests how manufacturers and other large employers may help to elevate the working men. Along with some Golden Rule plan of profit-sharing, so detested by the labor lodges, let them adopt some method to eliminate the tobacco as well as the saloon curse; let them encourage also the home-owners and men who are rearing respectable households. This is a practical reform that will repay its promoters in a hundred ways.

Dearborn Park is a half block of land in the business part of Chicago near the lake which is owned by the State, but of which the city is trustee. Some time ago it was proposed to use this property for a large library building, but the suggestion aroused the cupidity of the G. A. R. lodges. They demanded a share of the structure, and as they seem to be almost omnipotent in politics so far as the Republican party is concerned, they are likely to either get their wish or defeat the whole project. The claim of course is, that the building is needed for the old soldiers. But that is utterly false. The old soldiers need no such building, only the lodges are after it. And if it is given them, the old soldiers are fast passing away, as we all must. Then the undisguised fact would appear that the lodge only is concerned in the matter, and if there is no G. A. R., there will be other lodges in plenty to be housed at public expense.

Attorney-General Goodwin, of North Dakota, holds that all persons engaged in the sale of intoxicating liquors are doing so in violation of the law, and are liable to arrest and punishment therefor, and have been since the State's admission to the Union. All the licenses and license laws in force after the adoption of the constitution, being repugnant to the prohibition article, became ipso facto null and void: and since that time there has been no authority in the State for granting licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors. All persons, since the adoption of the constitution and the proclamation of the President, having made any sales of intoxicating liquor, or who do so hereafter, are liable to arrest and punishment under the provisions of chapter 36, laws of 1879, and to injunction all proceedings under chapter 12, laws of 1887. The passage of the prohibition bill by the present legislature has no bearing whatever upon past or future offences until it goes into effect July 1, 1890.

KENTUCKY AS A MISSIONARY FIELD.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

Wherever slavery was tolerated it left its blighting and benumbing influence on all classes. This was and is true, not only of the cotton-growing States, but as really of Kentucky, which always has been as strictly a farming State as Ohio. It was not climate nor production that made a difference between the people of the North and the South, but simply the influence of an abnormal institution. Slavery not only kept the Negro in a condition of moral and mental feebleness, but it dishonored labor, limited education, and fostered the baser passions of all classes.

But especially was its malign influence exerted over the poorer white people. There was but a small percentage of the people who held the slaves. Those had wealth and prestige. They monopolized the fertile lands, and the poor sought homes in the mountains, where they have remained, and to this day are, in many respects, a distinct people. A large part of this mountain region is included in Kentucky, and the people constitute a large percentage of the population.

They are like the mountain people in other parts of the South, almost exclusively white. Nearly all of them were loyal during the war, and Kentucky furnished more than her quota of Union soldiers. But they are, as they always have been, largely illiterate and in chronic poverty.

After a quarter of a century the blight of slavery still rests on the people. Much has been done for the Negro, and his progress, all things considered, has been as rapid as we had a right to expect. Yet much remains to be done. There is advancement in education and the possession of property, and a kinder and healthier relation between the races here than in the South. Not so with the mountain people. The last few months have witnessed a large number of riots, murders and conspiracies, for the suppression of which the troops of the State have had to be called out, and both the guilty and the innocent have been the victims of violence. Unlike the riots of Georgia and Louisiana, these were in no sense race conflicts, but were purely the feuds of the mountain clans. The causes of all this turmoil were ignorance, intemperance and a false sense of honor. In this mountain region the "moon-shiners" have their homes and carry on their work. They have verily thought that the national tax on whisky was an invasion of their natural rights, and that a resistance to the officers of the government was but legitimate self-defence. It must not be inferred that this people are not religious. Infidelity is exceedingly rare. Scattered widely apart, there are houses of worship in which churches are gathered, and public services are held, as a rule, once a month. Sabbath-schools, such as they are, are kept up during the summer, and suspended during the winter. There is none of the anarchic spirit and defiance of all restraint that we witness in our large cities, and the secret lodge system has a slighter hold on the people than in New England or northern Ohio. The trouble lies in the prevailing ignorance, the general thriftlessness, the entirely inadequate means for intellectual and religious instruction, and especially in the low conceptions of the nature and extent of religious obligation. To make a profession of religion, to be baptized and unite with a church, is regarded as respectable and important. But if such a member drinks whisky, spends his Sabbaths in visiting, habitually neglects attendance on public worship, or fights with any one who he thinks has insulted him, he has done nothing inconsistent with his profession. I need not add that such church members have very little to give for the support of the Gospel, and very inadequate conceptions of the duty of giving. Nor is this because they are covetous. No people are more truly hospitable, or more heartily despise meanness in business affairs.

This low conception of religion has come from ignorance, inadequate and false teaching. When the blind lead the blind, both fall into the ditch. The remedy is in the infusion of new blood into the intellectual and religious life of the people. Berea College has done much for both the mountain and the colored people. Its influence in overcoming the caste spirit, and enabling the two races to live together as fellow Christians and citizens, is worthy of all praise. But this college, valuable as it is, cannot do this great work of evangelization. What is needed is the faithful preaching of the Gospel, by Christian men and women who have a just conception of the work to be accomplished, and are animated by the Spirit of Christ.

Nor can this work be done by any denomination. The American Missionary Association (Congregationalist) has done a most important and praiseworthy work both among the colored and the mountain people. In its grand work of education it is altogether unsurpassed. But in planting Congregational churches, whether among the colored or the mountain whites, it has found an uncongenial soil, and the process of building up such churches has been slow, expensive and disappointing. This is especially true of the rural districts. The reason has been that the statements of doctrines and methods of worship were new and often distasteful. The great majority of both the colored and mountain people believe in immersion as the mode of baptism. They have no objection to a government by the congregation, but for the purely intellectual and esthetic forms of worship which are common in New England, they have no sympathy.

It goes without saying that there needs to be a reform in the almost purely emotional worship of the colored people, but it admits of doubt whether they will, or ought to, accept the New England model. The first great need of these mountain people is union and concentration of effort. Happily we do not have here to meet the color question, since the people are nearly all of the same race, but we do need to break down denominational prejudices, for the great hindrance to home missionary work, both here and in the West, is division on denominational lines. If by any means we can persuade all the evangelical Christians in any place to come together as the church of that place, not as a party in, but as a part of the body of Christ (and efforts in this direction have been fairly successful), we shall have made an immense saving in our moral and material resources.

The Christian Missionary Association of Kentucky represents no denomination or local churches. It represents individuals, whose object is to evangelize this vast, destitute and needy region. It has been regularly incorporated by act of the legislature, and is aiming to organize and aid undenominational, evangelical churches. It proposes no test of membership which shall divide real Christians, but it does give an emphatic testimony against prevailing sins, some of which have found lodgment in the churches. As an association we speak out against the use of and traffic in intoxicating drinks, the spirit and practice of caste, and all fellowship with the secret lodge system. We propose no destructive work. When any body (sect) of Christians are fairly laboring in the cause of the Master, though we may regard their efforts as inadequate and imperfect, we do not propose to weaken their hands by divisive measures. Still we hold that there is a more excellent way, and that of right there should be "no schism in the body" of Christ. We propose no new sect. Of the ten or twelve churches already organized, all are strictly independent, are united in no association, and, taken individually or collectively, are no more a sect than are the collective churches of Chicago. Everywhere there is a great and growing need for such churches. The voice of Christ speaks forth from his Word, "What God hath joined together let not man put asunder." This applies to all true believers.

The special relation of such churches to the reform work of the National Christian Association will be seen from the following considerations:

1. After twenty years of devotion to the anti-secrecy reform, we have often found the greatest obstacle in our way was denominational zeal. If we can but persuade men to transfer this zeal for sect to a simple zeal for Christ, we shall have made an immense gain in our work.

2. Our help in this reform has come almost entirely from the members of those denominations that have a testimony against the lodge. But these all have their denominational interests which almost wholly absorb their attention and their means. It is but little that they give of either of these, and hence our resources are small. How eminently desirable that we have churches that have no denominational interests to conserve; that, understanding the nature and importance of our reform, do really "seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness."

3. We find here in the South a great, needy and inviting field for reform work. But we can hope to give our work permanence and power only as it is firmly allied to the religious convictions of the people, and that these convictions find expression in organized Christian churches. Much of the seed we have sown here in the South has fallen by the wayside, and much that seemed to take root has fallen on stony ground. What we need is that the work of evangelization and reform should go hand in hand, and that into prepared hearts we may scatter the good words of God. John G. Fee, the veteran reformer, is still doing good service for God and humanity, and will gladly use all the means that can be forwarded in the support of faithful laborers.

Berea, Ky.

Masonry gives pennies to the widow and orphan, while the dollars go for elegant lodge rooms, expensive regalias and grand entertainments. If the abductors and murderers of William Morgan had been promptly arrested, tried and punished, no political Anti-masonry would have been heard of. Curiosity is the motive power that draws members into secret societies. Desire to see what is "going on behind the curtain" is human nature. We verily believe that if an "Imperial Order of Sublime Idiots" was organized, requiring its members to have their ears cropped, their foreheads branded with the letters I. O. S. I. and initiated standing on their heads, after paying a fee of $50, there would be no lack of "joiners."—Norway, N. Y., Tidings.

OUR FALLEN HEROES.

BY REV. ISAAC HYATT.

There is no grander life than that shaped by righteousness. It is glorious to contemplate its results. It lifts the soul into the realm of very great joy and hopefulness to think of the benign influence the active Christian exerts, the happiness he scatters about his pathway, the peace that follows in the wake of his daily life, and the glory that clusters about the fond remembrance of his honored name. And when we soar on the wings of faith, contemplating the results of such a life in eternity, the outlook is beyond all we are able to think.

Thanks should be given to God continually for such lives for their ameliorating influence upon society, and the attestation they give to the reality of religion. When they fall in the conflict with wrong we are not saddened with the thought that their life has been a failure.

Since the death of brethren F. W. Capwell and Pres. Fairchild, I have often thought of their noble lives and the pleasant association I was permitted to enjoy with them. For the three years I preached at Dale Bro. Capwell was a constant attendant on divine service. It was a delight to see him and his family in the house of the Lord listening with joy to the word of the Lord. It made no difference whether the weather was pleasant or unpleasant, he was there to stay up the hands of his pastor and partake of the blessings of God's house.

It comes to me over and over, like the touch of an angel's wing, to think of the cordial greeting I always received at his pleasant home. His cordial greeting, words of cheer and wise counsel are cherished in my memory, as the acts and sayings of the wise and good.

My acquaintance with Bro. Fairchild was brief. I met him first at the Congress of Churches in Chicago in the spring of 1887. His Christian bearing and his helpful address at once drew my heart to him. I next met him at his home in Berea. I remember with pleasure his sympathizing grasp of the hand and encouraging words after I preached my first sermon in the college chapel. He apprehended I needed them, and they flowed out from his heart in an unaffected way that renders speech a sweet savor. The more I associated with him the more I found his heart beat in sympathy with God in all his benevolent designs as to the happiness of man.

Truly I congratulate the friends and relatives of these noble men on their precious inheritance, and hope they may meet them in heaven.

WHY WEAR THEY SWORDS?

MILITARY MUMMERY IN THE LODGE.

We have had a great week for swords upon the elevated trains and at the various railroad stations, says the New York Sun of a recent date. The old Knights Templars in the height of their power never boasted as many gallant swordsmen as have for the last few days been going and coming through this city on their way to Washington, nor, probably, did the ancient knights take so much trouble to display their weapons as have these latter day "defenders of the pilgrims," whose blades have never been wet with anything more sanguinary than sapolio. For some reason a modern knight, especially a young and handsome modern knight, cannot conveniently carry his sword in any other way than dangling from his waist and getting in the way of his legs. At a time when able military authorities are advocating the return to the use of the lance as a weapon, it would probably be presumptuous to pronounce the sword an inexcusable anachronism, even on so intensely modern an institution as an elevated railroad train, with the nearest war cloud as far off as western Europe, but the frequency with which these militant appendages are rattled about whenever any secret society takes an outing now-a-days, gives rise to some legitimate speculation as to what may be the innate relationship between secret societies and swords.

The Odd-fellows, Knights of Pythias, and numerous other modern societies that include the sword in the regalia which their uniformed bodies wear have no such excuse for it as have the Templars, but this doesn't prevent their blades from flashing as freely and as numerous whenever any gathering gives them the chance. In fact, the first thing in the mind of the deviser of a secret-society uniform seems to turn to is the sword, and the rest of the regalia centers more or less around this.

"Why do you wear a sword?" a Sun reporter asked a man eminent in Masonry, who had just got into town upon his return from the Washington conclave.

"It's a part of the regular Templar uniform," he replied.

"Yes, but why is it in the uniform?"

"Well, now, I never thought much about that, but it has been there from the time the order was founded, and I suppose that's one reason for keeping it. The old Templars, though, used to wear heavy armor, I suppose, and lots of other things that we have left off; so I suppose the retention of the sword, after other things have been abandoned, must be more through some occult working of the human mind than because of any particular significance of the sword."

"But why should the human mind in a secret society turn to swords, when in an ordinary open society they are never used?"

"Well, that does seem a little singular. Perhaps one reason is that in an ordinary open organization the fear of being ridiculed by the public is stronger than in a body of men united by secret ties and obligations. You see, it's a good deal of a trial, in one way, for a civilian to put on a sword for the first time, and in another way it's a great source of satisfaction. There's no question that a civilian in a sword usually excites laughter, or, at least, the inclination to laugh, on the part of the majority of the beholders. On the other hand, there is a certain distinction about carrying a sword. It tickles the vanity, while it injures the ridicule-fearing spirit. One man alone, or a body of men, acting all the time in public view, find the fear of ridicule more potent than the gratification of vanity, but where a lot of men get together in secret, and go through a lot of forms and rites, impressive under the circumstances, but often ridiculous if done in light of day, for all vanity rather gets the better of their fear of ridicule. They put on the swords in their lodge-rooms, and, as they gradually get more and more the hang of the things, their vanity increases until they cannot resist the temptation to make a public show of themselves. And once a man yields to his vanity in this direction he is lost, if not for life, at least for a term of years, until age or experience knocks the vanity out of him and makes him willing to forego the pleasure of attracting attention to his legs, and to carry his sword where it belongs, in its case, until it is actually needed in the parade or maneuvers. It generally takes a Mason about seven years to get over the fancy for wearing his sword in public every chance he gets. Members of other secret societies never get over it. The rule is that the less excuse there is for such tomfoolery as a sword the more apt it is to be worn. Beneficial and fraternal societies of purely modern origin run to swords even more than the Templars and other Masonic orders in whose origin and antiquity there is more excuse for military mummery."

A grand worthy something or other in another of the large secret societies in this city was even more frank in his remarks about the use of the sword. "Oh, it's a bait," he said, "that we put out to attract young men. We've got to have something of that sort to attract and interest outsiders. Vain men, and all men are more or less vain, think a sword makes them look distinguished, and are crazy to wear one as soon as they far enough advanced in the order to get into a uniformed rank. We old fellows couldn't keep them from it even if we tried, and we don't try. It is harmless, even it is a little ridiculous, and as long as it tickles the vanity of the men and their families, why should we interfere?"

THE POWER OF THE POPE.

That the very intent of the Roman church is unqualified obedience to a man at Rome, elevated over the consciences of Catholics throughout the world, is evident from Catholic canon law, as explained by their highest teachers. Bellarmine, regarded as the most reliable among their authorities, says, "The church is a society of men united by a profession of the same Christian faith, under the government of lawful pastors, and especially of the one vicar of Christ, the Roman pontiff." "Especially under the government of the Pope." That submission to the Pope means political, as well as spiritual submission, is clearly shown by events transpiring over the world during the last few months.

The policy of Romanism in the South is manifest from the late gigantic plans laid to colonize large sections with the lower classes of Catholics from Europe, and equally by the Catholic Negro congress held in Washington; and also by the distribution among the ignorant Negro classes of pictures of the Virgin, which is soon followed by a priest or nun telling them the picture will bless their homes; and the circulation in some sections of a letter purporting to be from Christ; and most forcibly by the tract of Cardinal Gibbons, assuring the Negro that the church of Rome has always been the advocate for the freedom of the Negro, when the fact is Pio Nono was the only ruler of the earth that ever issued a special manifesto which was heavily against the American Negro.

There is hardly a prominent political paper in the United States without a Catholic censor, who sees that nothing is printed that he does not like. One of the most reliable United States school histories was thrown out of the Boston schools, and another "fixed over" by a priest was substituted upon the demand of Catholics. In a very few years the Catholics pulled $11,000,000 out of the treasury of New York city to support Catholic institutions. What Protestant church would dare attempt such a thing? With all this public support of Catholic institutions that church makes out to keep its people in stupid ignorance.

Italy used to lead the world in the days prior to Catholic suppression of general intelligence. Under a Catholic regime ignorance prevailed so generally that when that country threw off the temporal power of the Pope, 17,000,000 out of the 23,000,000 population could not read. And there are yet 100,000 in the city of Rome that can neither read nor write.

A few months ago a great Catholic congress was in session in Madrid. On the first day, the congress, by a unanimous vote, formulated a communication to the Pope declaring the main purpose of the congress to be to endeavor to obtain the restoration of the temporal power of the holy see. And upon the second day the session was enlivened by a speech from one of the leading delegates violently denouncing the Italian government for its action in denying to the Pope the sovereignty of the territory wrested from his temporal control by Victor Emanuel.

The republic of Ecuador is an instance of what Catholic supremacy means. One-fourth of all the property belongs to the bishops. Ten per cent of the population are ecclesiastics. Ninety-five per cent cannot read, and three-fourths of the births are illegitimate. The priestly order elects the president and legislature.

The Pope has been conducting a rare piece of finessing in his attempt to court the surrender to Roman authority of the Armenian church, which has always rejected the papal claims, and since the primitive Christian ages has remained independent of Rome. The Pope tells these venerable Christians that he "is by divine power supreme pontiff." The senior patriarch of the Armenian church replies to Leo XIII. that his "church cannot tolerate for one moment the idea of subordinating itself to the see of Rome."

There is but one showing made by the present Catholic revival throughout the world, and that showing brings in a purpose of anti-Reformation times. It is this: The only permanent security of the see of Rome in its transcendentalism of power in things spiritual rests upon its actual political dominion. Rome sees this, and hence the struggle. If there is a general failure, then the days of the Catholic church, as now constituted, are numbered.—Christian Worker.

GLIMPSES OF GERMAN LIFE.

AS SEEN BY OUR ARTIST FRIEND IN EUROPE.

MUNICH.

The "International Exhibition" closed this afternoon. Ever so many pictures were sold, and they made quite a large gain by it, instead of a debt like last year. The building is like the Chicago Exposition building, and one of the ends was made into a palm-garden, in which a concert was held two afternoons in the week. The statuary was all arranged among the trees and immense ferns out of the royal botanical garden, and looked beautiful. There will be such an exhibition here every summer now just as the "Salon" is in Paris. Did I write that Gabriel Max, who is one of the greatest German painters and specially renowned for religious pictures—and spiritualistic ones—all at once took a fancy to be realistic. So he painted a group of a dozen or more monkeys and apes of all descriptions, sitting on a dry-goods box and criticizing one of his own paintings. He called it at first "The Art Critics," but it made such an excitement that he was obliged to change it and call it "The Circle," but everybody knows what it means just the same. The monkeys are just as carefully painted as if they were portraits. He must have had monkey models.

I have seen another future king. The Prince and Princess of Wales, with their two sons and two daughters, came through Munich on their way to Athens. It was kept quite secret, and they were incognito; but the English ambassador told Mrs. S— what train they would come on, and she asked me to go to the depot with her. When the train came in we stood just opposite their car, and the first thing we saw was the Prince leaning out of the window over the car door and trying to open it. You know the cars here are shut in such a way that nobody can open them from the inside, and it is forbidden besides. The car was one of the Prince's own train, and is the only one I ever saw here that was as large as ours. As there was no one else there, we had a very good view of them all, and walked the whole length of the station to the waiting-room with them quite near us. He stopped twice just before us, and she of course with him. He is much better looking than his pictures, and is quite tall. She is very handsome, too, but the daughters are only commonplace in their looks. They and their mother all had their hair done in what we used to call "French twist," and the two girls wore light drab long traveling cloaks and felt hats, with no trimming but a ribbon band. Mrs. S— says the English people think the Princess of Wales looks just like an American lady, because she is tall and dresses in good taste, I suppose.

Week before last I was allowed to finish my Murrillo picture in the conservator's room while the gallery was closed for repairs. The picture was taken out of its frame and brought down for me, and I saw several things I never noticed while it was hanging.

The "Conservator" is a restorer of old pictures. I saw sometimes how they do it. When the canvas is very bad they take it off the stretcher and cement it with a peculiar sort of mucilage onto a new linen back. They lay the new canvas flat on the floor, cover it with mucilage, lay the old painting above it, covered with sheets of wet tissue paper, and then it is ironed with one of those flat-irons filled with charcoal until it is dry. I saw an immense painting that had been shot full of bullet-holes in Strasburg in the French and German war, repaired so it looked quite new. After it was on the new canvas they cemented the cracks and breaks in the paint, and after that painted over them with a fine brush. They worked on that one picture over two months.

There have been some remarkable new houses built here, called "the Prince's houses," because they are decorated from top to bottom with pictures of the royal family of Bavaria,—on the outside, not inside. Between the real windows are painted windows with celebrated men looking out. Litz and Wagner in one, and Goethe and Schiller in another, etc. An Italian girl is waving her handkerchief from an upper painted window perpetually. Three wild horses are springing continually out of one in the second story. The kings and princes are sitting on thrones with their pages and attendants below or behind them, and all is represented more than life size and color. Most of them have a wonderful green-blue background, quite startling at first. Even the present Prince Regent is among them. When the houses were "unveiled" (the paintings and whole front were covered with sackcloth for about a year), the most of the royal families here were present, and there was a long account of it in the papers. I am glad I do not live across the street as several acquaintances of mine do. The day I went to see them we had been to see the decorations in the cemetery on "All-souls" day, and followed the crowd there. The cemeteries were so crowded with people that we could hardly get about, and the graves had been decorated with no end of flowers and candles burning in red or blue glass globes. They use the brightest colored flowers possible, and each family tries to make more display than their neighbors. I do not think it is a very elevating custom.

I am going away for two weeks or more before I begin to work in the studio again. I wanted to go into the Tyrol, but on account of the floods lately there I decided not to, and think I will go in some other direction, perhaps to Dresden; or perhaps only to Tegernsee, if the Duchess Karl does not go to Vienna.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

A parable for politicians—Some more plain talk from a South Boston clergyman on the secret endowment orders—Enforcing the prohibition law in Bangor—Cheering indications from Massachusetts—"He giveth his beloved sleep."

The late fire in Boston has exploded the agreeable fiction that a mercantile building packed to the roof with combustible goods can be made fire-proof. Even stone walls crumble and iron girders warp till the whole interior collapses from the intense heat generated by the burning merchandise within. The above fact is a parable. The wisest laws and regulations will not make our national ship fire-proof, while the smothered flames are burning away in the hold, feeding on that very material prosperity which is leading all classes, consciously or unconsciously, to worship what Ruskin calls the goddess of Getting-on; till eyes are blinded and ears are dulled to every prophecy of coming doom.

Rev. William H. Savery of South Boston has answered the open letter addressed to him by the Secretary General of the American Protective League by another, in which he handles without gloves that gentleman's claim that these endowment orders "inculcate lessons of humanity and charity." He rightly stigmatizes the recent legislation of Massachusetts, which gives to speculators, adventurers and schemers a standing invitation to take in the honest and unwary, as "odious." Portions of his letter are well worth quoting. "The initiation of the 2,000 who have joined the American Protective League," he tells the Secretary General, "has cost the new members at the lowest figure $12,000. The 'deputies,' the 'medical examiners,' the 'supreme organizers,' and 'secretary-generals,' are sole administrators of these fees! I happen to know of one 'secretary' who, last spring, worked on a salary of $800, and to-day draws $2,500. . . . New legislation will be required soon in Massachusetts. An injured misled 'rank and file' will go to the front for redress. Were those on whom the tower of Siloam fell guilty above all others? Nay, the man who built the tower is the great sinner. . . . Certificates of endowment—promises to pay in five years to those who are 'initiated' a benefit of $500, while the 'organizers' suppress or omit to mention the fact that the 'assessments' during five years must equal in amount the total to be returned, is out-and-out deception or self-deception!" He ends his letter with by emphatically declaring that he "condemns these societies in the lump, and challenges the benevolence of them root and branch."

The prohibitionists of Bangor, Maine, that rum-cursed city which has so long been a standing argument by which to bolster up license, have begun a vigorous movement to enforce the law. The suddenness of the raid took the saloonists by surprise, and threw them into perfect consternation. Whether the temperance people can retain the fruits of their victory where the party in power has no interest in keeping the saloons closed is a question. A dispatch to the New York World contains this significant sentence:

"The police saw the work going on, but enforcing the law has not been a part of their business of late, and they did nothing about it." A city full of secret club-rooms, supplied by Boston firms with all the liquor they want, will never be found an easy place in which to secure enforcement of the prohibitory law; particularly when the party to which its government officials belong has very intimate relations with these same secret club-rooms. But for the much maligned State of Maine at large, a defender has come forward in Dr. Cyrus Hamlin, who in a letter to the New York Observer corroborates the testimony of Neal Dow that "there is not a distillery, nor an open, undisguised dram-shop in the State of Maine."

Under local option in Massachusetts last year, out of 351 towns and cities, only 63 voted in favor of license. Figures indicate that before the year 1890 closes, it will see local prohibition prevailing in over four-fifths of the towns and cities of the commonwealth.

Tidings have just reached me of the death of our dear and venerated "Mother" Blanchard. It has thrilled with sorrow my own as well as many another New England home. Well do I remember my first glimpse of that sweet, tender face, radiant even then with light from the glory beyond; and there comes instinctively to my mind that beautiful epitaph engraved on the tomb of Felicia Hemans:

"Calm on the bosom of thy God
Fair spirit rest thee now;
E'en while with us thy footsteps trod,
His seal was on thy brow."

The anti-secret reform has indeed lost a "mother,"—whose place none can fill.

God bless and comfort her large circle of children and grandchildren; and may the richest consolations of the Comforter be poured out on him, her loved and venerable companion, now left to tread alone the remaining steps of his pilgrimage.

ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 17, 1890.

The brilliant side of life in Washington official social circles may be seen now to its best advantage. Social events follow each other in close succession, interlace, mingle and overlap in the most bewildering confusion. At least they are bewildering to your correspondent, not, of course, to the female portion of the capital's official world, which lives in and for and of this stimulus of gaiety and fashion and excitement, and which has literally no time for duties of any other description. But these social claims the society woman attends to like a thorough business man. Her books are well posted, and her debtors and creditors duly noted, although her visiting list contains the names of more than a thousand people.

The entire official world of Washington, however, cannot be called frivolous. Quite a different class of interests occupy the attention of our law-makers on Capitol Hill. Some of these subjects, at present, are land claims, trusts, the World's Fair site, and the Silcott defalcation. And I will just mention that the members of the House of Representatives have been much more interested in getting their missing salaries made good than in the arrest of the defaulter.

Among the noteworthy bills that are in preparation for Congress is one to prohibit gambling in options. It is being drafted by Congressman Butterworth. It has been said he will attack a giant when he comes at this evil, but doubtless the gentleman from Ohio knows that fact, and he also knows that he has the right and the cause of the people to assist him. Mr. Butterworth claims that the dealer in options practically sets aside the tariff on wheat and sells more grain here than is produced outside the United States. Of course this wheat has no real existence, but the effect is the same, because it beats down the price of the grain in this country to the ruling figures abroad.

The project of establishing a great national university in Washington has been cherished by Senator Edmunds as the most appropriate way of celebrating the quadri-centennial of the discovery of America. The idea is not a new one, for George Washington first recommended it, and it was successively encouraged by Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, and John Quincy Adams. Senator Edmunds introduced a bill for this purpose at the beginning of the present Congress, which will be likely to come up for discussion at an early day.

Different prominent educators and divines of the city are working toward the same end. Among various schemes and plans proposed, one is to take the Columbian University, already established here, as a basis on which to build a great non-sectarian University, comprising an assemblage of colleges, where everything that is proper for youth to learn may be taught. Upon the ground that the various Protestant sects should find no difficulty in working together harmoniously in matters of education, it is proposed that at this University the Methodists may have their own theological department, the Presbyterians theirs, the Baptists theirs, the Congregationalists theirs, the Episcopalians theirs, and so on. If a student wishes instruction in this or that particular branch of the Christian church, he can get it at the proposed University just as he would go there for training in Greek or Sanscrit. But whatever the branch of study, the University as a whole is to be conducted in distinct accordance with Christian precepts and character.

Among the many peculiar advantages of Washington as the seat of a great institution of this kind, mentioned by the earnest workers in the cause, are the facts that there is already here a national body of six hundred eminent specialists, that the leading scientific bodies of the country hold their annual meetings here, and that as the Government has already spent between fifteen and twenty millions of dollars here for scientific and educational purposes, a University established in this city will get the benefit of this rich endowment.

It seems a very difficult matter here in Washington to keep our rapidly growing Government comfortably and commodiously housed. The Supreme Court of the United States wants better quarters now than it has in the old Senate Chamber. The Patent Office officials are clamoring for a great Hall of Industry worthy to contain the materialized inventive thought of the nation, the embodiment of its mechanical mind. And now, will you believe it? after millions of dollars have been spent upon the Capitol terrace, not only to add beauty and height and symmetry to the great marble pile, but especially to furnish much needed quarters for the committees of the House and Senate,—now that the work is about completed and the additional accommodations secured, Congress discovers that these rooms are not suitable for committee rooms. They are not inviting enough, not light enough, and consequently will be used for the storage of the rubbish that accumulates so freely during each session of Congress.

—Last month the faculty of the State University at Madison, Wisconsin, banished five students who had been witnesses in the prosecution of a hazing case. The secret societies were concerned in the affair, and it was difficult to secure any evidence. These five young men refused to testify on the ground of self-extermination. The faculty took them at their word and shipped them.

REFORM NEWS.

A GOOD WORD FOR THE METHODIST
PASTORS OF ILLINOIS.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Mr. Gross, the gentlemanly master of Kingston lodge of Masons, was overruled by his brother craftsmen, and so will not avail himself of my offer to hold a joint meeting for the investigation of the secret society system. "He that doeth truth cometh to the light that his deeds may be made manifest that they are wrought in God." The master thought that if Masonry would not bear investigation it ought not to exist. But one of the older brethren of the lodge was reported to have said that if the master consented to a joint discussion of the merits and demerits of Masonry, they would throw him out and kick him higher than a kite. Doubtless this Masonic brother meant to be understood as using this language figuratively. He certainly could not be in favor of treating a scholar and a gentleman, like the master of his lodge, with rudeness.

I was in a public place in Genoa some time after I lectured there. A friend became involved in a discussion of the lodge question with a lawyer. Finally I took my friend's place, and it was arranged that the lawyer, who was a Mason, and myself should make alternate speeches of five minutes each. I discussed the Masonic covenants and compared the penalties with those of the Mormon Endowment House and the Clan-na-Gael. A somewhat large and deeply interested audience listened to our discussion, which lasted as long as the lawyer would make the alternate speech.

I lectured twice in the Methodist church of Fielding. The pastor's work called him away the first night, but he was present and heard the second lecture. I called on him the next morning and gave him the substance of the first lecture, and by invitation remained to dinner. While here I was hospitably entertained by brother Schoonmaker, a Methodist who was a captain in a colored regiment in the war of the great rebellion. The Masons of Fielding turned out in a body to hear my lectures.

From Fielding I went to Franklin Free Methodist church and gave two lectures. I stopped with an old friend, Bro. H. C. Fox, while there. Bro. Fox took me to Dustin F. M. church, where meetings were in progress. I had expected to lecture twice here, but under the circumstances I spoke but once in response to a general desire manifested for me to lecture. I then went to Belvidere and stopped with an old friend who is a member of the Methodist church. It was Saturday night. In the morning the Free Methodist minister invited me to preach in the evening. I went with my friend to the M. E. church for the morning service. The minister invited me to assist in the exercises, and after an able and impressive sermon also asked me to preach at night, but my previous engagement did not permit me to accept. I have met six Methodist pastors since I began work as the agent of the Illinois Christian Association, and have been gratified to find that none of them are Masons.

I intended to lecture in Belvidere when I went there, but it was rainy, and the Methodist minister was engaged in revival work, and so I thought best to postpone lectures there. From Belvidere I returned home, but left again the next day to arrange for other meetings.

OLD YORK COUNTY RESPONDS.

LAUREL, Pa., Jan. 16, 1890.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—For a week past I have been at work in this county of York. I find here a large field and more open doors than I can at present enter.

My first stop for work was at Stewartstown. Here I found a welcome at the home of Israel Gable, a man of firm convictions, who has for years been active in opposition to the lodge. He was at one time a worker in the M. E. church of this place. When the church was rebuilt he paid $500, which I judge was a very liberal share. When the corner-stone was to be laid the Freemasons (!) applied for the job. Mr. Gable was asked if he had any objections to the "Masons" laying the corner-stone. Supposing that they meant the stone masons who had laid the foundation, and not mistrusting that his brethren would tolerate the abominations of a heathen lodge in such a matter, he gave his consent. The reader can imagine his surprise and disgust on finding a troop of lodge Masons desecrating the house of God with their heathen rites. He has not entered the church since.

Last Saturday eve I addressed a good company who gathered in the Stewartstown Academy. On Monday evening I was granted a hearing in the fine new Presbyterian church near New Park. Some members of this church had been ensnared in the lodge. All listened respectfully. Rev. Clark, the pastor, in gaining the consent of his elders and trustees for the use of the church for my lecture, was much pleased to find them nearly all Anti-masons. While he had not studied the lodge question much, an experience in college led him to feel it to be wrong.

In both of these places I am invited to speak further, which I shall hope to do. Notwithstanding the rain last evening about fifty gathered in the Hopewell United Presbyterian church near where I write. They listened "patiently" from a little after seven till nearly ten o'clock. Judging from appearances I conclude they will none of them join the lodge. Thirteen new names are added to the Cynosure list in this section. If weather will permit I shall, D. V., give addresses in several churches near by.

I met a man the other day who said frankly and evidently with no compunctions of conscience, "I am a Mason," and added in a boastful tone, "I am the M. P. preacher over here." I replied I was sorry to hear, as he was a Mason, that he was also a preacher, for his influence would favor the wrong. As he looked strong, he evidently got through his initiation better than the M. E. preacher at Huntington, W. Va., a few days since. If the rope would break with all preachers who hang over these Masonic pits, and they should fall into the bottomless pit, it would be as fortunate for the deluded ones they are leading in that direction as it would be unfortunate for them. Yours for Christ and reform,

W. B. STODDARD.

SOLVING THE RACE PROBLEM AT SELMA.

SELMA, Ala., Jan. 10, 1890.

When I left Talladega, Jan. 3, the train which was due thirty-five minutes after noon came at eleven o'clock at night; so that I arrived in Selma at three o'clock in the morning. But no one seemed surprised, for the train is never on time more than once or twice a week, they say. I found Rev. G. M. Elliott, pastor of the Reformed Presbyterian church, sick, having had a congestive chill a few days before. He invited me to preach for him on Sabbath morning in the interest of reform; which I did, and found a people instructed, and ready apparently for the Master's work. On the same day at 7:30 P. M., I spoke in the Congregational church, and discussed the Gospel view of Temperance and Anti-secretism. The pastor, Rev. E. J. Penney, made me welcome at his home, and entertained me during my stay in Selma.

On Monday he took me to the A. M. A. Burrill Normal School, where at 9 o'clock I addressed the assembled scholars. Prof. A. W. Farnum is principal, with a fine corps of teachers and six thoroughly organized classes. A missionary, Miss Mary K. Lunt, gives industrial training to a large number of the students.

On Tuesday morning, by invitation of Prof. Dill, I talked to the teachers and scholars of Knox Academy, which is sustained by the Reformed Presbyterians, and has 300 pupils enrolled. Great attention is paid in this institution to Bible training; and thus it is made especially a Christian school; and in their public worship they sing only a translation of the Psalms.

I have to report, also, the Selma University, supported by the Baptists and having this year 425 students, with a theological department. By invitation of the president, Rev. C. L. Purce, I addressed the assembled school for half an hour, and at the close made arrangements to send them our anti-secrecy library. This is one of the oldest and largest institutions of learning in Selma, and has done a great work in educating the freedmen.

A later enterprise is the Payne Institute, which has Prof. H. E. Johnston for principal, and is supported by the A. M. E. church. Their school building is not entirely finished; but they have made a good beginning. On Thursday evening I preached a reform sermon in their church, at the invitation of the pastor, Rev. J. S. Shaw. A goodly number assembled, and it was apparently very well received.

Selma is in what is called the cotton belt, and is surrounded by a farming community. The land is taken to some extent on shares by freedmen, and wages, I am told, are about fifty cents a day. But they are gradually getting to own comfortable homes; and schools are spreading necessary learning and intelligence; and the blessed Gospel is beginning to permeate the masses with its saving power. This is the solution of the race problem.

S. F. PORTER.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A SAD PICTURE.

ALLEGHENY, Pa.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The following clipped from the Commercial Gazette in this city is one of the saddest things I have read for many a day:

"Rev. J. W. Johnston, of the Methodist church of this place, died this morning from the result of injuries received at the Masonic lodge Friday night. Rev. Johnston and Rev. N. F. Marshall, of the Episcopal church, were on that evening being initiated into the Royal Arch degree of Masonry, and while Mr. Johnston was descending a rope into a pit about thirteen feet deep the rope broke, precipitating him to the bottom. On being removed to his home it was found that his injuries were very painful, but they were not felt to be dangerous until last night."

It is said that any man of intelligence, more especially a minister of the Gospel, should be initiated into the Masonic, or any other secret order. Having taken vows to be God's servant and no other, to permit himself to be led like an ox to the slaughter, he certainly disgraced his profession. It does not seem possible that a man with the love of Christ in his heart, would do such a thing. Then to vow to maintain and obey he knew not what, on the pain of having his tongue torn out by its roots, and his limbs torn from his body, is the strangest of all.

Notwithstanding the Morgan and Cronin murders, and the light of the century, ministers and others are found willing to go through such heathenish rites, endangering their lives and ruining their souls. At the same time this minister was initiated, an Episcopal minister was also initiated and escaped unhurt. It is hoped that this untimely death will serve as a warning to others to keep out of the lodge. It is a poor place for an infidel, and a much poorer place for a Christian. It professes to be a religion, but is not the true religion, for it excludes the only one by whom we can be saved, and is therefore Christless.

It excludes women and children and is not in accord with God's plan of the family.

Really there is no need of such institutions for men. If all the dark things done and said inside of the lodge were revealed, we would wonder if we were not living in the dark ages.

If the authorities would proclaim to these United States that hereafter it would be a treasonable offense for men to meet in secret lodges, and should order all their charters to be revoked, and their places forever closed, there would again be joy and happiness in thousands of families where the light of those homes had gone out, in the darkness of the lodge. (Mrs.) J. S. COLLINS.

MOUNTAIN LAWLESSNESS IN KENTUCKY.

BEREA, Ky.

Just now there is being an investigation of this matter by the legislature, and inquiry as to why courts were not held in some of the counties. The following from the Louisville Courier-Journal of 10th inst. is the statement of Judge Lilly, of Estill county:

"It is true I did not hold the court, but I was well advised beforehand that the belligerent parties were making arrangements to fight at the court, and that if I was there I would be killed. The result of that court, attempted to be held by Judge Hurst in my stead, should be sufficient to satisfy the public that I was right in not attempting to hold that court. It was broken up by a fight in which the Judge was wounded."

He would say nothing as to the communication which he sent to Gov. Buckner, declining to hold court in Letcher, Knott or Perry counties unless accompanied by an armed guard.

"What do you think is the remedy for the trouble?" was asked.

"Send an armed force to Perry county and keep it there. It does no good to send troops there for two or three weeks and then withdraw them. They should be kept there. It will cost money, but the State will have to spend money to break up this thing. The feud in Perry county is a difficult one to meet. Nearly every one of the murders have been in ambush. There has been almost no open fighting. Only the continued presence of troops can bring about the arrest and conviction of the parties."

"Judge, can't you organize your own citizens and drive out that lawless element as we did in Rowan?"

"No," replied Judge Lilly; "our people are too completely intimidated. You couldn't get up a posse. We have a military company there, but its members are afraid to do anything lest they be picked off from ambush while at their work. Its captain hasn't dared to sleep at home for three months. The proportion of our population actually engaged in this quarrel is not so large, but 45 per cent of all the rest are in sympathy with one side or the other, and the remainder are so thoroughly cowed that they do not dare to make any attempt to drive out the lawless element. The belligerents are the best armed men any one ever saw. They have guns and revolvers of the very latest and best patterns, and are thoroughly organized. You know men are intimidated when they send the women to mill."

What a grand opportunity to try "the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God," since here the magistrate bears the sword in vain. Oh, for a few Peter Cartwrights to deal with those mountain people, just as he did deal with them fifty years ago! True, we want everywhere a better enforcement of the law, but a government that rests merely on force is only a despotism. What we want most of all is that respect for lawful authority that grows out of Christian conviction, a law of righteousness written in the hearts of the people. True patriotism not less than Christian obligation demands that this mountain region be redeemed from the power of the mob by planting schools, churches, and the preaching of the Word.

H. H. HINMAN.

AN EXPERIENCE IN DIVINE HEALING.

WARE, Mass.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Much has been said in regard to divine healing, or "faith cure," as some term it. I would like to give some of my own experiences and observations upon this subject.

In my early Christian experience I heard this subject often referred to by believers in the Lord Jesus Christ, and as I made the Bible a daily study, I found the doctrine was taught in the Scriptures, and well authenticated by giving at various times incidents where the sick were healed in answer to prayer.

I was suffering from a severe attack of erysipelas, and one of God's faithful ones laid her hand upon me and prayed that I might be made whole. The disease left me and I was happy, for I not only was healed, but received a refreshing from the Holy Spirit.

A few years after this that dreaded malady, diphtheria, was desolating homes all through the State where I was then residing. One evening at a late hour a messenger was sent for me to go to the bedside of a little girl, named Mary, who, they said, was dying with this dreadful disease. They had a council of physicians and the decision was she must die. Little Mary was a pet in the household, and her little heart had found many friends beyond the family circle. She was at this time eight years of age, the very embodiment of loveliness and goodness. But she had a wicked father, one who had never known by experience that God had power on earth to forgive sins, and that if we trusted him fully was able to "heal all our sicknesses;" yet the mother had learned to love the Saviour, and by her teachings the little one had learned there was a power in Jesus "mighty to save," even to the uttermost, all that call upon his name.

It was a cold, stormy night when the messenger came for me. My friends remonstrated, saying it was not prudent for me to venture out in such a storm, and where I would be exposed to such a malignant disease, but the messenger said, "Mary says tell you, 'I want you to come and pray for me, and I believe the Lord will heal me.'" As I neared the dwelling I heard her groans; she was suffering intensely, and at times it seemed impossible for her to breathe. As I bent over her she said, "Pray, and pray quick." I knelt beside her and laid my hand upon her head, and I had uttered but a few short words of prayer, before the child was sleeping quietly and sweetly.

As she lay in her father's arms, in a startled and excited manner he said, "She must be dying!" I told him no, the Lord had blessed little Mary, and if he would lay her on the bed I would care for her the remaining part of the night. The father was so surprised at the sudden change that he made this promise, "If the Lord restores that child, by the help of God I will be the best Christian in this country."

I said to him, "God has heard your promise, and I feel impressed to say to you, if you keep it this child will live to be a blessing and comfort to you in your declining years; but if the promise is broken, in less than ten years you will follow her to the grave."

Little Mary rested sweetly and slept until the sun arose in all its beauty. When she awoke, looking up to me she said, "O, Lydia, I am so hungry! I want my breakfast." She sat up and ate quite heartily, and as her father came in he exclaimed, "Why, Mary!" She replied, "Father, I told you if she would come and pray for me the Lord would answer her prayer and heal me; and he has done it and I love him, father, for what he has done for me."

With eyes bedimmed with tears he left the room and said, "I never saw such faith as that child has."

She speedily regained her former strength and was indeed a happy child.

Mary's faith was real faith in the promises of God, "Ask and ye shall receive; seek and ye shall find." There were no "guess so's" or "may be's" in her faith; nothing but a positive "shall be." I wish more of us had her kind of faith; there would be less doubting and more accomplished for God and humanity.

A short time after this I was married and left the home of my early childhood, and for the next seven years I almost lost sight of my little friend Mary. At the expiration of this time I moved into an adjoining town. About six months after my return, I was again called to the bedside of Mary. She had been sick for a few weeks, and her disease was pronounced to be "quick consumption." I had not learned the doctor's decision before going to her bedside, but I felt before leaving my home that my mission was a different one from that of former years. As I entered her room she looked up and stretched out her wasted hand and said, "You have come again, dear one; but your mission is not as it was when you came to me when I was 'little Mary.' I want you to pray for me that I may be fully prepared for the change that so soon awaits me. You remember father's promise to God when I was healed when a child, and I felt sure if it was broken the Lord would take me home; and when father heard you had come again in this part of the State he said he would send for you, and I would be restored again. But I believe it to be God's will that I go to live with Jesus."

For three days following this I think she was the happiest mortal I ever saw. Such prayers, exhortations and dying counsel I never listened to, and at the close of the third day her happy spirit took its flight to the realms of glory; but the father promised to meet her in heaven. As I have not seen or heard from him since my removal from that State, I do not know whether he kept his promise or not.

In James 5: 15, we read: "The prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins they shall be forgiven him." The word "shall" occurs three times in this verse. There are no doubts expressed in this, and I believe when we go to him, "nothing doubting," we are sure our prayer will be answered; but I am of the opinion the great reason why we so often say this or that prayer was not answered is on account of our unbelief. We are not willing to trust God completely and fully for every blessing, and in asking, be sure not to ask for things contrary to the Spirit of God. Selfish desires, selfish motives, may prompt us to ask, but when we ask only for what the Spirit leads us to ask for, I believe it will be granted unto us. "For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God."

This doctrine of "faith cure," or divine healing, and being led by the Spirit of God, in my opinion are very closely allied to each other, for I have found in my experience these two doctrines usually occupy the same heart at the same time. To discard this doctrine of healing the sick by the prayer of faith, one might as well reject that part of the Scriptures teaching the salvation of lost sinners. I certainly believe them to be Bible doctrines, and plainly taught in the Scriptures, and I fail to see how any Bible student can contradict them.

PITH AND POINT.

THE PETITION TO CONGRESS. GET UP A GRAND LIST BY APRIL 1.

I have been canvassing considerably for signers to the petition, and have learned how ignorant people are of the wickedness of the lodge system. Ministers of Christ claim that the lodge is better than the church. A church steward said I was the first one who ever told him Masonry was wrong. I canvassed a village of 1,000 inhabitants, and they said they had not heard any one for eight or ten years say anything against Masonry. I feel confident that by getting them to sign the petition I saved some from going into the lodge. I believe this a grand opportunity to strike heavily the works of darkness. Let the people do their duty and canvass all over the State. I want every canvasser to excel in this great work, and now that we have until the 1st of April we can get up a grand list.—JOHN LEEPER, Senecaville, O.

FROM A LETTER TO DR. J. E. ROY.

By chance I got a little book prepared by you, and I find it is the work we need here. It is the first book we have ever seen on that subject. For ten years I have realized that these orders were a great hindrance to the colored people. Five years ago they organized in our church a little society called The Sons and Daughters of the Tabernacle. They have torn the old church badly, and are trying to organize an Odd-fellow lodge in another church. These lodges claim that nobody has a right to oppose them, and people are afraid to speak out. We will be thankful for any literature you may be pleased to send us.—W. S. DISMUKES, Woodville, Ky.

A GRAND THING.

Last week Prof. King gave the weekly lecture on Thursday, on "Secret Societies," by request of the faculty. It was just grand. There was no "mealy-mouth" about it. It cut on the right and left with plain words that could not be misunderstood. This lecture was before, perhaps, 1,400 students, and a few citizens. And now we are to have it repeated to a union meeting of both churches on Thursday evening, the prayer meeting being given up for the purpose. We hope it will be printed. Such a lecture before such audiences, we hope, will do much good. We have a few Masons here, and we hope they may hear it, and be ashamed, and that the many students here may be led to take a decided stand against all such devices of the devil.—GEORGE THOMPSON, Oberlin.

LITERATURE.

THE CONVERTED CATHOLIC. Vol. VI. for 1889. Pp. 380. Price of magazine $1.00. Bound volume $1.50. James A. O'Connor, 72 Bible House, New York.

This handsome volume closes the year's work of an interesting and meritorious magazine. The editor, Rev. James A. O'Connor, was a Roman Catholic priest for many years, and for the last ten years has been preaching and writing in New York City for the enlightenment of the Roman Catholics and their conversion to evangelical Christianity. While not lacking in boldness in attacking the corruptions of the Roman church, and opposing and exposing its designs to regain in this country the supreme power it has lost in Europe, the Converted Catholic is happily free from the virulence of controversy. It is most accurate in its statements regarding the Roman Catholic church, and its tone is eminently Christian. Clergymen of all denominations contribute to its pages articles bearing on the Roman question in all its phases.

The Floral Guide, issued by James Vick, of Rochester, N. Y., surpasses in beauty of appearance and convenience of arrangement anything in this line which we have seen before. Although called a "floral guide," it is devoted to vegetables as well, and includes as full a list and description of both flowers, vegetables, and also small fruits, as could be brought within the compass of a book of this size. In all that the Vicks have undertaken their aim seems to have been to attain as near to absolute perfection as possible, and probably no one ever did so much towards bringing the cultivation of flowers to the high standard which it has now attained as did the head of this firm. The firm takes the same pride in raising choice vegetables as in developing attractive varieties of flowers, and after using their seeds for a number of years we are able to recommend them in the highest terms.

The African News shows immense activity on the part of Bishop William Taylor in his African Missions. He has lately been to England to order more boats for the Congo to communicate between the stations. There are now twelve steamers on the Upper Congo. Bishop Taylor has never been sick in Africa. His health is better there than in this country. The Congo Free State government, whose headquarters are at Brussels, Belgium, has given the missions the official title: "Bishop Taylor's Self-supporting Missions." The January number of the News is full to overflowing with letters, reports and matters of interest about Africa.

The Converted Catholic, published monthly at 72 Bible House, N. Y., presents important information concerning the Romish power and its reformation. There are hopeful indications of a loosening of the Pope's hold upon his subjects in all enlightened lands. In Mexico there are twenty-four churches and about 1,000 members. About 300 converts were made last year. We recommend this magazine for its abundant information and its devoted spirit. (Price $1.00 a year.)

Good Health for January is a number whose beauty vies with utility. This magazine has a department for the exposure of medical frauds; and in order to carry on this work successfully the publishers have established a chemical laboratory, in charge of a competent chemist, for the purpose of carrying on a series of thoroughgoing investigations, the results of which promise to prove most startling, and which will be published in the columns of the journal.

OBITUARY.

NATHANIEL BOURNE, who died at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, Dec. 27, was born in East Falmouth, Massachusetts, on the 8th of September, 1833, and was consequently 56 years old.

He came to Chicago in 1855 and in the spring of 1861 went to Cedar Rapids, where he has lived continuously ever since. He leaves a wife and three children. He was a man of vigorous mind and sterling honesty and worth. By years of industry and thrift he had amassed a competency. Aware that his time upon earth was short at most, he quietly arranged every detail of his business and calmly awaited his departure, signifying that he was ready to go at any moment.

MISS ABIGAIL COPELAND, a native of Foxborough, Mass., aged 63 years, perished in the burning of a building at 841 Market St., San Francisco, Dec. 27.

Miss Copeland was an educated woman, a firm believer in the Word of God, and an earnest supporter of the reforms against Romanism and the lodge; hating everything wrong and loving all that is good. She was especially known for her kindness to the poor, being herself of their number, and would willingly share her last dollar or dime with those more needy.

LODGE NOTES.

The Chicago Knights of Pythias visited the Haymarket theater the other night in crowds and presented to the tragedian Warde a jeweled sword.

The report of the I. O. O. F. Grand Lodge of Colorado for 1888 contained these items: Total relief, $16,862.75; amount of receipts, $49,999.41; amount of expenses, $42,300.60. This shows that about three dollars was paid for one dollar's worth of relief.

The Chicago Masons have now an idea that they need a great temple. They propose to buy buildings and land on a prominent corner, tear down the structures already on the ground, and erect a building with stores, a hotel and lodge rooms. The whole expense is estimated at $1,800,000.

A report of the Knights of Pythias of California is as follows: Total relief, $67,312.86; other expenses, $74,895.12. A report from the Ohio Pythias says: Total receipts, $138,381.65; total relief (and on hand), $51,528.10; current expenses, $86,853.55. Secret societies are the most expensive of insurance societies.

The Phi Kappa Psi college fraternity are making preliminary arrangements for the Grand Arch Council to be held at Chicago April 2-5. It is expected that Gov. Foraker, of Ohio, will be the orator at the banquet, which is to be the climax of the meeting. The delegates will represent between thirty and forty of the leading colleges of the Middle and Western States.

It is not always safe to be connected with secret societies in China. Recently a number of Chinese were arrested by order of the Emperor, and tried before a mixed commission of four Europeans, four Malays and four Chinese. The result of the trial was that the six highest officers were shot, eleven who were active members received six dozen strokes with a rattan, and had their heads shaved and life imprisonment at the pleasure of the Emperor, and the rest were allowed to go provided they promised to avoid any more societies.

The way to make money is to save it. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the most economical medicine to buy, as it is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "100 doses one dollar." Do not take any other preparation if you have decided to buy Hood's Sarsaparilla.

THE N. C. A. FUNDS.

The General Fund is that from which the running expenses of the Association are paid. From it the agents on the field are supported.

The Foreign Fund is that from which the foreign demand for literature against the lodge is supplied to missionaries.

The Free Tract Fund clearly states by its name the object for which contributions are solicited. Millions of pages have been distributed by means of this fund.

The Cynosure Ministers' Fund. The donations to this fund have enabled the Association to send many copies of the Cynosure to the ministers of the South, especially to pastors of colored churches. The result has been a blessing to them and their churches.

Contributions to any or all these funds are urgently solicited.

FORM OF REQUEST.—I give and bequeath to the National Christian Association, incorporated and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, the sum of — dollars for the purposes of said Association, and for which the receipt of its Treasurer for the time being shall be sufficient discharge.

J. BLANCHARD, EDITOR.

HENRY L. KELLOGG, ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JANUARY 23, 1890.

BLIND LEADERS OF BLIND MEN.

"Christ our Life" is the title of another book of a series by a writer named Pettengill, whose ground principle is the non-immortality of man by nature, and that Christ, "who only hath immortality," gives it to all who are in him. Elder J. L. Barlow, in his volume entitled "Endless Being," has given an earnest Bible refutation of this writer's false use of the above Scripture, and of his error drawn from it, denying the immortality of the wicked dead. The present book is but a re-hash or re-assertion of his previous "oppositions of science falsely so-called."

There are revealed in the Bible two spheres, finite and infinite, time and eternity; one to end when Christ ends his mediatorial kingdom, and God becomes "all in all" (1 Cor. 15: 28); the other eternal as God. The man whose mind ventures into the sphere of infinity and sits in judgment on God's eternal administration, and attempts to extinguish hell and Satan, is like putting a newborn babe to survey and run lines in the snows of the Alps. He deals with unthinkable mysteries. Yet this is what this writer is attempting, as many have done before him, and are doing still.

Christ in the Bible is the expounder of our finite sphere. He was "before Abraham" and the Jews; "was in the beginning with God," and has given human destiny, from Eden to the oath of the angel, "Time shall be no longer." Our race sinned. "We fell in our parents as we daily see." Christ died on Calvary for "every man." Those who, down the ages until he came in Palestine, and since, receive or have received Christ, will stand before him, and be separated from his rejectors, and be saved; and his rejectors lost. This is Christ's teaching—the sum of it.

The words of Christ and the Bible, "fire," "brimstone," "torment," etc., (of course figurative, but no less real for that), and the gulf impassable between saints and sinners at the last, if Christ is—and he certainly was—"the truth."

But these writers—Dante, with his seven hells, Roman purgatory, Swedenborg's spiritual seances, worshippers of familiar spirits, Mormons who exalt Christ in words and deny him in works, Andover post-mortemites, and this Pettengill and others all "intrude into things not seen, vainly puffed up by their fleshly mind," Col. 2: 18.

These all attempt to give the state of the universe as it will appear in eternity and infinity. They are not horrified by the unutterable horribleness of sin, but only at its consequences under a loving but just God, who "will by no means clear the guilty." They convert nobody, convict nobody, none are "pricked in their hearts," but they rock men to sleep over what Christ called "everlasting fire," Matt. 18: 8.

A "BLESSED SLEEP."

The death of Mrs. Blanchard was more like a translation than like death. Tennyson gave some of his best work to the "passing of Arthur," where the hero king goes to his death surrounded by the unnamed horrors of a battle-field. But when a Christian mother passes from slumber into the sleep of the just made perfect in Christ, her work done, her children and children's children "rising up" to call her "blessed," her husband praising, and every community where she has lived re-echoing the sentiments of affectionate esteem which her useful life compels—when such an one passes without a struggle or a pang to God, it may be truly said, She was not, for God took her.

To the brief word of last week we may now add a few particulars, reserving a longer sketch, from the hand that has been in hers for more than half a century, for next week.

She died in the hotel at Las Vegas, New Mexico, Saturday evening, January 11, at 10 o'clock. Her body was embalmed, and after a short service in the hotel conducted by the Presbyterian minister, her stricken husband and grand-daughter turned homeward. At Kansas City Pres. C. A. Blanchard met them and all reached Chicago safely Thursday morning. The funeral services were held Friday afternoon in the College Hall at Wheaton, which was crowded with sympathizing friends. The several pastors of the place, assisted by Rev. Alexander Thomson of Bartlett and Rev. J. P. Richards, conducted the various exercises. The discourse was by Prof. G. N. Boardman, D.D., of the Theological Seminary at Union Park in this city, from the text Rom. 14: 8: "For whether we live, we live unto the Lord; and whether we die, we die unto the Lord: whether we live, therefore, or die, we are the Lord's." It was regarded by all who heard it as one of the most remarkable of funeral sermons. Without eulogy, or panegyric, or the slightest attempt at sensational appeal, it was heard with profoundest attention, and was eloquent with truth and teeming with instruction. Many regrets were expressed that it could not be reproduced for publication, so that thousands who have known Mrs. Blanchard in life might be profited by reading as well as those who heard it.

The faculty and students of the College gave many tokens of their sympathy and esteem; and their joint committee adopted the following sentiments as an expression of the whole:

WHEREAS, it has pleased our Heavenly Father to remove from our midst our beloved friend, Mrs. Mary A. Blanchard, be it resolved by the faculty and students of Wheaton College:

1. That we recognize that we have lost a loving friend, a wise counselor, a self-forgetting, self-sacrificing helper.
2. That we believe our loss to be her gain, and we will strive to emulate the example of her Christ-like life.
3. That we tender to our esteemed ex-president, Jonathan Blanchard, and to all the bereaved relatives, our loving sympathy, and bid them, in their grief, rejoice in the precious legacy of a well-spent life, left by the dear one gone before, whom many outside her own family circle do now arise and call "blessed."
4. That a copy of these resolutions be presented to Pres. J. Blanchard, and that they be printed in the Christian Cynosure and in the Wheaton Illinoian.

	} Students.

Our editor, Pres. J. Blanchard, notwithstanding the heavy strain of his great grief, is in better general health than for some time. He expects to remain during the rest of the winter with his daughter, Mrs. E. A. Cook, in this city, and hopes to resume his work on the Cynosure, which has for several weeks been remitted.

ANOTHER SACRIFICE TO MOLOCH.

The death of the preacher Johnston in Huntingdon, W. Va., while taking the Royal Arch degree in Masonry, is justly demanding public attention in every quarter. The daily press all over the country has published the facts as given to its agents by the lodge. This statement, officially signed, is as follows:

The Rev. J. W. Johnston, of the M. E. church South, of this city, died at the parsonage yesterday morning, Friday evening last, in company with the Rev. N. F. Marshall, of the Episcopal church, Mr. Johnston was passing through the ceremonies of the Royal Arch degree in Huntingdon Chapter of Royal Arch Masons. During the ceremonies it seems it was necessary that he descend a vault, thirteen feet deep, by means of a rope and tackle suspended from the ceiling above. Two other men had descended the vault previous to Mr. Johnston, one of whom was the Rev. Mr. Marshall. After preparing the tackle, and Mr. Johnston had started to descend, the knot fastening the tackle to the lower block slipped, gave way, and Mr. Johnston fell to the bottom of the vault. He was immediately taken out and medical aid summoned. His injuries seemed to be of a painful, though not dangerous nature. He was removed to his home and received the careful attention of his friends and Masonic brethren. Much to the surprise of all, and to the unutterable grief of his friends, he died as above stated. His remains will be taken to his former home at Hannibal, Mo., for interment. No blame attaches to any one for this unfortunate accident, and no persons can be more deeply grieved than are the members of the Masonic fraternity. We, the undersigned officers of Huntingdon Royal Arch Chapter, No. 6, certify that the above statement is true in every particular. This sad accident to Bro. Johnston occurred in the performance of rites in no way derogatory to the dignity of his profession as a clergyman.

W. H. BANKS, High Priest.
JOHN OLSON, King.
ZENAS MARTIN, Scribe.
A. H. WOODWORTH, Secretary.

Accepting this as fact (and we have no other account, for the legal authorities have made no inquiry) we have:

1. A remarkable confirmation of the expositions of the Royal Arch degree made again and again during the present century. In this degree the candidate with two others, all roped together, are put through the "Living Arch," in which they crawl between two lines of men who push them to the floor, all the while repeating passages of Scripture. A mock-solemn prayer follows this farce. They are then sworn, and go through the blasphemous performance of the burning bush. A sham battle follows, and the three are then led over boxes, chairs, wood piles, etc., to remind them of the rough road passed over by the Jews from Babylon to Jerusalem. This ridiculous performance is interspersed with prayer. The degree continues with these puerile caricatures of Scripture story, with shameful mockeries of religion, until the vault is searched for some sacred relics. In this part of the performance the man Johnston lost his life. Nathaniel Colver, first pastor of Tremont Temple, Boston, got so far as the oath of this degree, but an alarmed conscience would not allow him to take its abominable imprecations.

2. The last statement of these lodge officers is wholly gratuitous and absurd, but in perfect keeping with the lying character of the lodge. As old Dr. B. P. Aydelotte of Cincinnati, once a Mason, used to say, "It is a lie all over." No minister would dare go through the lodge ceremonies publicly. He would be hooted out of every Christian pulpit.

3. But the worst feature of this affair is the indifference of the public press and officials. When men are killed in open day, by trains, by explosions, or other accidents, the coroner suddenly becomes an important functionary. No one moves till he has made a legal investigation. But here is a lodge, meeting in the dark, with the public shut out, that, according to Enoch T. Carson, can kill men with impunity, and goes on year after year putting men through secret rites which endanger their lives. If the Baptist, or Disciple, or Dunker church should as frequently cause the death of people in immersion there would be an outcry that the law officers would hear, and especially if the ceremony was performed in secret and at night. But the lodge defies law and braves public scorn, and will continue to do so until God shall smite the iniquitous system again and again and his church shall shut her gates upon it.

Read carefully the Enquirer article on the next page. The cut showing how Johnston lost his life is from the exposition of Royal Arch Masonry published by Ezra A. Cook, and for sale by him at this office. By his kindness we use the plate. Get, read and circulate this book NOW. Everybody will read it.

PERSONAL NOTES.

—Rev. J. B. Galloway of Vernon, Wis., lately accompanied his wife to this city to receive treatment at the Presbyterian hospital. He remains with her for a short time to know what may be the result.

—Rev. Dr. J. E. Roy, Western Secretary of the American Missionary Association, is spending the winter in California visiting the Chinese missions of the Association. Mrs. Roy, who went with him, remains at Pasadena meantime.

—Secretary Stoddard, accompanied by his wife and youngest son, was expecting to start for Boston on Tuesday. They will remain possibly several months in New England to push on the work so well begun by the Boston conference.

—Rev. J. D. Gehring of Lawrence, Kans., has been long a severe sufferer from a wound received during the war. He is of late in better health, and is preparing to begin an extensive course of lectures on philosophical and physiological themes, with which he is familiar.

—Rev. D. S. Kinney, the financial agent of the Wesleyan Methodist church, died at his home in Syracuse, N. Y., Tuesday, Jan. 7th, after an illness of about three weeks. In 1875 he was elected to succeed the sainted Adam Crooks as business manager. He carried on the work of building the Publishing House at Syracuse, already begun, to its completion. In his early public life Mr. Kinney lived in the Western Reserve region of Ohio and was acquainted with Joshua R. Giddings and Ben. Wade. He once assisted the escape of a slave man and his wife to Canada, though pursued by armed men. He was a man of large physical proportions, and filled a large place also in the work of the Wesleyan church, and in the esteem of his friends. He was never active in the reform against the lodge as was his predecessor, and his co-laborers in the Wesleyan Methodist office, Revs. Stratton and Wardner, but was nevertheless heartily opposed to the secret society system, and in favor of maintaining the discipline of his church which separates that system from the communion.

KILLED WITHOUT INQUEST.

THE MASONIC TRAGEDY IN W. VIRGINIA.

[FROM THE CINCINNATI ENQUIRER.]

Masonic circles are greatly agitated over the shocking accident at Huntington, W. Va., which resulted in the death of a candidate taking the Royal Arch degree.

It is the first instance on record where any accident of a serious nature has occurred in the ceremonies of that degree. In fact, the ritual which initiates the candidate into the Royal Arch mysteries is considered much less dangerous than that of any other degree. Prominent local Masonic lights state that as far as their records and memories go there have not been over half a dozen such accidents in this country.

In the face of the great and unexpected sorrow which has befallen the lodge, its members have torn aside as far as possible the veil shielding the mysteries of the ceremony, and explained fully the details attending the accident. The building was built specially for Masonic purposes. In the third floor is the lodge room proper. As is usual, three candidates had offered themselves for the Royal Arch degree. But, owing to a recent accident, one of them was absent. It was decided to put through the remaining two. Rev. Mr. Johnston, pastor of the Methodist church, and Rev. W. F. Marshall, pastor of the Episcopal church. One feature of the ritual occurs in what is known as the dark room. This is an apartment on the third floor. It is about eight feet wide and twenty long. At one end is a window, and at the other a door, opening into the lodge room proper, which is lighted with electricity. In the middle of the little room is a three-foot trap which opens into a vault, or an arrangement like an elevator shaft. This vault extends from the ceiling of the second story to the floor, is some eight feet square, and walled up with wooden partitions. It has a depth of some thirteen feet. In the ceiling of the dark room is a hook, to which is fastened a double block and tackle. The first block is close to the ceiling, while the second is near the floor and directly over the trap. A rope seven-eighths of an inch thick passes three times over the top block. It is attached to a ring above the second block, the end being wrapped around similar to a hangman's knot. Beneath the lower block hangs a short loop, through the end of which is passed a short stick or bar. This stick is straddled by the candidate, his legs hanging on either side, while he clutches the block with his hands and holds himself in position. He is then lowered into the vault by the members of the lodge, who have hold of the other end of the rope, which generally lies loosely piled upon the floor. The ceremony at this point is symbolic of the search in the ruins of King Solomon's temple. The vault represents the ruins and the candidate one of a party making the search. He descends into the vault, and finds in one corner a small box, which is typical of the Ark of the Covenant. After this he is raised again to the "dark" room. Next follows the lecture, during which is explained the ceremony he has just passed through and the Biblical events it symbolizes. The block and tackle had been in constant use by the Huntington Lodge for over three years.

The initiation of the two preachers began last Friday evening. It was about 10 o'clock when the dark room was reached and arrangements for the final ceremony commenced. One of the members, Mr. Crider, had descended into the vault and made the usual preparations. He had been taken out. Rev. Mr. Marshall then went through the ordeal, was lowered into the symbolic ruins and again returned to the room. There were six or seven members taking part in the ceremony besides the two candidates. The scene was a rather weird one. On the window-sill rested an oil lamp, whose flickering light threw fanciful shadows on the walls of the "dark" room. The door at the other end was open, and the rays from the electric lights entered. The vault looked like a black, yawning chasm. Neither of the candidates was blindfolded. Both could see everything that was going on, and perfectly understood the workings of the machinery by which they were to descend into the vault.

Mr. Johnston was a tall, well-built man, weighing some 180 pounds. He had seated himself astraddle the bar, and caught the block with his hands. Suddenly there was a whirring sound. The end of the rope was seen to jerk loose from the ring above the block. In some way, most probably from the long and constant use, the rope had been gradually becoming loosened and unwrapped, and Mr. Johnston's heavy weight detached it entirely. The end flew toward the ceiling, and there was a sudden relaxation of the entire machinery. Mr. Johnston disappeared, and an instant later was heard the dull sound with which he struck the hard floor of the vault, thirteen feet below. The members standing about the trap and holding the rope were almost paralyzed by the accident. Their cries brought the rest of the lodge to the apartment. One coil of the rope still remained over the upper block. With it Mr. Peyton, a slightly-built gentleman, was lowered into the vault. Lights were brought and the unfortunate preacher was found lying on lower part of the spine and chest. He was borne to the Methodist parsonage where he resided. All that night and the next morning he continued perfectly conscious.

About three o'clock Saturday afternoon he became semi-conscious from the powerful drugs administered to alleviate his intense sufferings. He lingered in this condition until 1 o'clock Sunday morning, when he peacefully passed away.

Naturally the reports of the accident created intense excitement in Huntington. The Masons made no effort to keep the details secret, and, on the contrary, took especial pains to explain fully the manner in which the accident happened. Particular stress was laid on the fact that the utmost dignity is preserved throughout the ceremony, and that nothing savoring in the slightest of levity or practical joking is permissible.

The physicians pronounced the immediate cause of Mr. Johnston's death failure of the heart, due to shock and internal injury. The Masons suggested the advisability of a post mortem to determine the exact extent and character of the injury, but the friends of the deceased expressed some opposition, and it was not made. Examination of the remains showed there was not the slightest external mark or bruise.

WHAT CINCINNATI MASONS SAY.

The fatal accident in the Huntington lodge caused a great deal of comment among Cincinnati Masons. It was all the more surprising as none of them had ever heard of a serious accident while the Royal Arch degree was being exemplified.

Col. Enoch T. Carson, who has taken the very highest degree in the Masonic order, was seen yesterday at his office on Third street, and stated he had read the Enquirer's account of the affair with much interest.

"There is no reason why accidents should occur in any of the degrees," he said, "provided proper precautions are taken. As for myself, I generally inquire very particularly about the candidates, and when a fellow tells me he is feeling nervous I look out for him. Of course a candidate has got to keep his head about him. If he loses that, something may happen. The particular thing in the present case is that there is less danger about the Royal Arch degree than any of the others. It is the easiest of all—just as easy as to carry a hod—but, of course in carrying a hod you've got to keep a cool head or you'll fall from the ladder. The drop in the Huntington lodge room was only about a dozen feet. In taking one of our degrees there's a drop of over sixty feet. Here in Cincinnati we've always been very careful. In fixing the machinery and making the other arrangements over there in the Masonic Temple, I consulted with a physician so as to avoid any possibility of an accident. There can be no accident if proper care is taken. I am afraid the Huntington brethren were a little negligent in not examining and testing the rope. Still it is a thing that could happen only through the purest accident. As far as my memory goes, there have been some half a dozen

while being initiated in the various degrees. I have never heard of any in the Royal Arch degree except that at Huntington. They have mostly occurred in the Third or Master's degree, which you must term the most exciting of all. The danger, of course, is from nervous shock, and it is always best to find out if the candidate has ever been threatened with heart trouble. The last case I can recall occurred some six or seven years ago. A candidate in a Pennsylvania lodge was taking the Master's degree when he suddenly fell to the floor, and when picked up he was dead. A sudden nervous shock had affected his heart and caused death. Of course there had to be an examination, and the Coroner investigated the matter. I don't remember whether there was a formal inquest or not. The Masonic influence in that community was great, and my impression is that the matter was finally smoothed over and nothing came of it. Very little publicity was given to the affair. This is the only case of which I can at present recall any of the details."

his side at full length. He had struck on his left hip. Mr. Johnston was not unconscious, but his deep groaning showed he was suffering the most intense agony. A ladder was lowered into the vault, and, with Mr. Peyton's assistance, he was enabled to slowly mount until ready hands could draw him out of the vault. He was carried to a stretcher, and Drs. R. D. Vickers and John D. Meyers summoned. While awaiting their coming Mr. Johnston described his experience. In the brief moment while he was falling his whole life, he said, seemed to be passing in review before him. He expressed mentally his satisfaction that there were not others dependent upon him, and that, if death came, he was ready to meet his God. The minister told this as the sixteen members of the lodge surrounded the stretcher, and urged upon them the importance of always being ready, for none knew when the summons would come. For nearly two hours Mr. Johnston lay in the lodge room. The attending physicians examined him, but could detect no outward sign of injury. This led them to pronounce his condition as not dangerous. Still he continued to complain of the most agonizing pain, especially about the

THE HOME.

GRANDMOTHER'S BIBLE.

So you've brought me this costly Bible,
With its covers so grand and gay;
You thought I must need a new one
On my seventy-first birthday;
Yes, mine is a worn-out volume
Grown ragged and yellow with age,
With finger-prints thick on the margin—
But there's never a missing page.

And the finger-prints call back my wee ones,
Just learning a verse to repeat;
And again, in the twilight, their faces
Look up to me, eagerly sweet.
It has pencil marks pointing in silence
To words I have hid in my heart;
And the lessons so hard in the learning,
Once learned, can never depart.

There's the verse your grandfather spoke of
The very night that he died:
"When I shall wake in his likeness,
I, too, shall be satisfied."
And here, inside the old cover,
Is a date—it is faded and dim,
For I wrote it the day the good pastor
Baptized me,—I've an old woman's whim.

That beside the pearl gates he is waiting,
And when by and by I shall go,
That he will lead me into that kingdom,
As into this one below.
And under that date, little Mary,
Write another one when I die;
Then keep both Bibles and read them—
God bless you, child, do you cry?

Your gift is a beauty, my dearie,
With its wonderful clasps of gold.
Put it carefully into that drawer;
I shall keep it till death; but the old—
Just leave it close by on the table,
And then you may bring me a light,
And I'll read a sweet psalm from its pages
To think of, if wakeful to-night.

A MOTHER'S INFLUENCE.

When mothers are mentioned in the brief record of the early life of some distinguished character in God's Word, we have reason to think that they had a great influence in forming the character of their children. Joseph had the counsel and training of his mother twelve or fifteen years. In the remarkable events in the infancy of Moses, he was sent to his mother to have her shaping influence in the formation of a character that has been admired by God's people from his day down to the present time. The power of the mother in the case of Samuel and of Timothy, is distinctly related in the Bible.

Throughout the history of the Christian Church there are beautiful examples of the faithfulness of mothers in training their children for God. Nonna, mother, of Gregory of Nazianzen; Anthusa, mother of Chrysostom; and Monica, mother of Augustine, have secured a prominent place in the ecclesiastical history, mainly because of their devotion to their children. Indeed, we have no instances of godly mothers neglecting the religious training of their children. The Church in all its branches holds that to be important, and enjoins attention to it. Baxter gave it as his opinion, that if every parent would faithfully perform his duty in bringing his children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, it would almost render unnecessary the living ministry. Shairp says: "College learning is good, but all the learning of all the universities of Europe cannot compensate for the loss of that which the youth, reared in a religious home, has learned in childhood at his mother's knee."

Since the power of the Christian mother is recognized to be so great, it is a wonder that more mothers do not use it with greater effect. We fancy that Rev. Dr. Payson, in writing to his mother, when a young man, found one defect, when he says, "Why cannot other parents learn your art of mixing the friend with the parent?" A little more of the unrestrained fellowship of the friend, with the authority of the parent, would add immensely to the power of the parent. The reading of the letters of his mother to President Adams, led a stranger to say to him one day, "I have found out what made you the man you are." Those letters revealed the anxiety and the tenderness of the mother's heart, which desired that her son should be a good man.

John Ashworth at early dawn heard the voice of his mother, as she prayed "Lord bless John! Keep him from bad company, and make him a good and useful man." "Her words went to my young heart," said he, "and they are ringing in my ears to this hour."

"Home influences, directed by a pious mother," Washington declared was the source of his success. When his mother heard of his success, she said, "It is nothing more than I expected, as George was always a good boy."

When well advanced in life, Thomas Benton said, "My mother asked me never to use tobacco, and I never used it from that time to the present day. She asked me not to game, and I have not. When I was seven years of age she asked me not to drink, and then I made a resolution of total abstinence."

President Lincoln's mother died when he was ten years of age, and even at that early age he was well instructed in the Bible, and he said of his mother, "All that I am, or hope to be, I owe to my mother."

Said Rev. Dr. Bushnell of his mother, "Long years ago she vanished; but God stays by me still, embracing me in my gray hairs, as tenderly and as carefully as she did in my infancy."

When the parents' training and solicitude are appreciated and acknowledged before their removal from the world, then their care must come with great satisfaction to their remembrance. Guizot once wrote to his mother in the following words: "If ever I do any real good, the consolation it may afford you will be my sweetest recompense."

To please his father was one great thought in the early life of Dr. Thomas Guthrie, and he wrote at his death, "I was anxious to please him by success in my studies, and when he died I felt as if one great motive to exertion was gone."

Dr. Payson wrote to his parents: "Thanks be to God that you are loved and blessed by many who never saw you, on account of your children."

When the praises of people were many, just after the writing of the missionary hymn, "From Greenland's Icy Mountain," Heber was found "on his knees thanking God, not so much for the talents which brought him so much honor, as for the happiness which they had enabled him to give his parents."

On the other hand, how keen are the reproaches of memory, when a man is led to cry out, as did Charles Lamb, when he said, "What would I give to call my dear mother back to earth for a single day, to ask her pardon upon my knees for all those acts by which I grieved her gentle spirit."

How the memories of parental affection and influence come to us as the end of life approaches. It is said of Senator Hill, that when too feeble to walk into the parlor to view his mother's portrait, he would have himself carried in, and after gazing for a time, say, "I shall soon be with her again."

When on his death-bed, Rev. Dr. Adams of New York remarked: "I owe everything to the judicious training of my parents. Serious, earnest in their own religious life, they never made religion repulsive. My mother's influence was especially gentle and wise."

After referring to his attention to his mother's grave, Thaddeus Stevens remarked in his will: "I do this out of respect to the memory of my mother, to whom I owe whatever little of prosperity I have had on earth, which, small as it is, I desire emphatically to acknowledge."

John B. Gough said in reference to his mother before a large audience, "I stand before you to-night to declare that if I have ever accomplished anything in the world, if I have ever done aught of good, what I am and what I have done, by the grace of God, has been through the influence of that mother."—N. Y. Evangelist.

THANK GOD FOR OUR MOTHERS.

A touching incident occurred not long ago at the distribution of prizes in the English School of Science and Art at Keighley. The Bishop of Manchester gave the prizes. To the pupils and most of the large audiences, the bishop occupies the place of father to his children; not only revered as a man of God, but as a broad, practical thinker, one of the leaders of opinion in England in all matters which influence the elevation of humanity. Surrounded by the boys and their parents, the good bishop suddenly was led to speak of his own mother, and told the story how she, "not a clever managing woman," had been left a widow with seven children; how her great love and trust in God had helped her to live, sacrificed not only luxury, but comfort, to make a home, bare of all but the most meagre necessities, bright and happy as that home Beautiful, whose chambers were called Peace, and from which could be seen the hills of heaven. Most of her children, through her efforts, have risen to positions where they could help to make the world wiser and better. "She is now," said the bishop with broken voice, "in my home, paralyzed, speechless, and helpless, and when I looked at her sweet face this morning, I thanked God who had given her to me. I owe to her all that I am." Books could be filled with the wonderful influence of good mothers over their children, and touching incidents told of the results of their faith and prayers.

Make the mother's whole life one bright, happy day. God bless the boy whose ambition in life is to be "a staff" to his mother, and the girl who makes it her special thought to take as much of the burden of care from her mother's life as it is possible for her to take.

Dear children, the work your mother does for you so untiringly and patiently is a labor of love; she is glad to do it for you; it is not the physical wear that leaves its marks upon her face half as much as the anxiety and worry you occasion her when you do what she knows is wrong. She knows better than you do how you stand in your own light when you will not heed what she tells you is best for you. When she sees you forming habits that will be a hindrance to your good influence and happiness in the world, she warns you and pleads with you and prays for you. She knows that by and by the reaping time will come, and the sowing of bad seed will bring you in a harvest to reap over. What a beautiful summer the mothers will have if the children will try in every way to make their lives bright and happy and honored! Always remember that good children are always an honor to their parents.—Evangelist.

KEEP NOTHING FROM MOTHER.

And they spun the fine white thread,
One face was old and the other young—
A golden and a silver head;
They sat at the spinning together.

At times the young voice broke into song
That was wonderfully sweet,
And the mother's heart beat deep and calm;
Her joy was most complete.

There was many a holy lesson
Interwoven with silent prayer,
Taught to her gentle, listening child,
As they sat spinning there.

"And of all that I speak, my darling,
From older head and heart,
God giveth me one last thing to say;
With it thou shalt not part;

"Thou wilt listen to many voices,
And oh, that these must be!—
The voice of praise, the voice of love,
And the voice of flattery.

"But listen to me, my little one,
There's one thing thou shalt fear—
Let ne'er a word to my love be said
Her mother may not hear.

"No matter how true, my darling one,
The words may seem to thee.
They are not fit for my child to hear,
If not, indeed, for me.

"If thou'lt ever keep thy young heart pure,
Thy mother's heart from fear,
Bring all that is told to thee by day
At night to thy mother's ear."

And thus they sat spinning together,
An angel bent to see
The mother and child whose happy life
Went on so lovingly.

A record was made by his golden pen;
This on the page he said:
"The mother who counseled her child so well
Need never feel afraid;

"For God will keep the heart of the child
With tender love and fear,
Who lisps at her mother's side at night,
All to her mother's ear."

AN IMMORAL BLIZZARD.

Without, a blizzard, snow flying and gathering in deep drifts, wind roaring, wailing, crying aloud, as if in an agony of rage and pain—within, the coziness of a modern room, with glowing grate, summery atmosphere, blooming plants and pretty furniture, with bric-a-brac scattered about.

The occupants of this "cozy nook" on this wild midwinter night, were an aged lady, with snowy hair and a refined, loving face, where the imprint of a great sorrow was legible. Three maidens in the bloom of early womanhood were her companions.

"Grandma Snow," as the girls playfully named Mrs. Snowden, was the dearly loved repository of the neighboring girls' and boys' most secret and sacred thoughts. "She is a gold and white etching, with her golden brown eyes and silvery hair," said Mabel Gwynn one day; and then these petted girls furnished the dear old lady's room in gold and white "to match." Mabel and Nellie Gwynn were orphaned at an early age by a railway disaster, and then their home was with their guardians, the parents of Grace.

"What makes our snowy grandma so sad this eve?" said Grace, placing a loving arm about the neck of the lady, and placing herself upon the arm of the chair. "I should think she would be so glad to see her 'chicks' back in the home nest, and their New Year gayeties finished, that she would be all smiles."

"Did we tire you with our chatter?" queried Nellie, as she seated herself upon the footstool near grandma; "if so, we crave the royal lady's pardon."

Mabel looked anxiously at the usually placid countenance of the lady, and said slowly and thoughtfully, "I think she is greatly troubled about something." Come! grandma dear, confess. I surely saw some silver drops stealing down her cheeks when we were telling of the silly actions of Harry Bradon, after he drank the third glass that I coaxed him to drink for my sake. Now, snowy grandma, am I right? Did I do wrong? If so, why? He may never touch wine again, and then May's papa said 'pure wine injures no one; is, in fact, beneficial.' He also said 'you were all too particular about those things; that he despised a drunkard as much as any one did.'"

Grandma's face grew very sad as she said, "My darlings, I ought to have given you some warning in regard to this matter long ago, but—I—could—not. Now I must give you the life history of one very dear to many. Fifty years ago a baby boy was welcomed to the home of loving parents. In those days it was customary at weddings, christenings and funerals to fill the sideboard with wines and stronger liquors, and men, women and children were given the drink they liked the best. The home of this baby was no exception to the rule; the father of Ralph was an old school gentleman, very courteous in his manners, would drink a social glass but never went beyond bounds, and looked upon those who drank to excess as 'no gentlemen.'"

"The years passed quickly and Ralph grew to young manhood, beloved and respected by all about him, and his future life looked very bright to him the evening of his marriage. At the refreshment table that night, his young wife filled a glass with wine and held it to his lips and said, 'Ralph, you have always refused to drink a social glass with any one; now, I want you to take this from me.' As he hesitated she said, 'Surely, Ralph, you will not refuse the first request your wife has made. I don't want you to be so different from others; it has looked so odd to see you refuse always—looked cowardly,' she added playfully, but earnestly.

"I have always admired your father, such a courteous gentleman, yet he never refuses a glass of wine, but takes it as a gentleman should. I have no liking for this temperance fanaticism that is beginning to sweep over our land," she added.

"Ralph's face flushed hotly, and taking the glass from her hand he drank it, and I noticed that he drank several times during this evening.

"The young people were soon settled in their beautiful home, not many squares away from the old home, and the parents and sisters spent many pleasant hours in their home. Ralph was known as a rising man, a brilliant orator, and his services—he was a lawyer—were sought after by the best men in our city.

"In the course of years three little ones came to their home. At this time we noticed—my darlings, it is my son, my only son, of whom I am speaking—a decided change in Ralph. He grew irritable, even to the little ones of whom he had always been so fond; he spent many hours away from his home; politics became his hobby. I noticed, when at our home, he made frequent visits to the sideboard, and his breath was heavy with strong drink. Many nights were spent away from his home. During Kossuth's visit to this country, Ralph was one of the honored guests at the dinner parties and receptions tendered to him. During the campaign previous to the election of President Pierce, Ralph was very active, going from town to town speaking for his party.

"One sad day the news came to his father that Ralph was under arrest, accused of shooting a man who had accused him of making false assertions in one of his political speeches, and he, while filled with anger and strong drink, had committed the crime of taking a fellow-being's life. Oh! the horror of those days."

"Don't! dear, dear grandma, tell us any more; it is too, too hard for you."

"Yes, my dears, I must go on. I have too long neglected the telling of this sad story. I visited him, my precious boy, my only son, in his prison cell, and he clung to me and said, 'Oh! why was I so weak as to take that first glass of wine from Nellie's hand; I knew I could not stop! I knew it would fire my brain! Mother! mother what shall I do? A fellow-being's blood is on me. Oh! my mother, if men could see and feel the anguish that wrings my heart, strong drink would never pass their lips, would never be proffered to others. Tell Nellie to tell our boys to never touch or taste the accursed cup; to teach our daughter to do all she can to keep the vile stuff from young lips. Oh! my mother, is it my wrong doing that has whitened your hair like this?' and he smoothed his hands over my head, oh, so lovingly.

"I had been, I thought, a Christian before this, always attended church, read my chapter, said my prayers and did good when I had opportunity. But now I sought the prayer-hearing God with prayers for my son's life, that he might become his child, that he might yet do good and counteract the evil he had already done. God was merciful and spared his life, and his sentence was imprisonment for life.

"My precious ones, I hope you may never be called to pass through such a trial as was mine, to part with a dearly loved one in his young manhood, who was to be consigned to a living grave.

"After that parting I knew nothing more for many days. My fevered brain took away all consciousness of sorrow, and after months had passed I was told of the many changes that had taken place while I was mercifully unconscious.

"Nellie, my son's wife, was dead; her youngest boy lay sleeping by her side. Poor Nellie! she could not forget that her hand first placed the cup of evil to his lips, and her heart broke and she—rested. Their children, Walter and Nellie, came to live with us, and I must tell you, children, your grandpa never drank one drop of wine from that sad day, neither permitted one drop within his doors; and Ralph's children were taught to fear intoxicants as they would the deadliest poison.

"After my sickness I became an invalid. I could not regain my former strength—the shock had been too great, the physicians told us. At long intervals we heard from my son in his prison home.

"Thirty years passed away and the glad news came to us that Ralph was pardoned; he had saved a number of lives during an insurrection in the prison, and he was once more free. He came to us a man of over fifty, with whitened locks, but with what a purposeful face. Many years before he had given his heart to Christ, and now he determined to give the rest of his life to saving the fallen. He was amazed at the wonderful changes wrought in that thirty years. His wife sleeping her last sleep; his son and daughter grown to maturity. Worlds connected by cable, cities by telephones and bridges; electric lights, elevated railways, steam elevator, and woman's friend, the sewing machine, had come into existence. The Pacific and Atlantic clasped hands through the wonderful railway. The great civil war had been fought and ended, while he was in his living grave. Chicago had been a furnace of fire.

"So many improvements have been made, dear mother,' he said one day, but he shook his head sadly as he realized the increase of drinking places, '12,000 in New York city alone. God help us to do something to put a stop to this ungodly traffic in men's souls.'

"Now, dear ones, you know why Uncle Ralph is so earnest in fighting this giant evil, and why his children are so ready to help him in his work. Girls, did you ever throw a pebble in a stream of water and see how the ripples spread and spread until you lose sight of them in the distance? So one thoughtless and apparently innocent act may cause ruined bodies and souls, broken hearts and broken homes, anguish and sorrow, as did poor Nellie's act of urging that one glass of wine."

"Grandma," said Nellie, "while listening to you some facts have come to my mind that occurred at the Ellis House last summer, where we supposed temperance prevailed, as some of the best (?) Christian people of New York and Philadelphia were making this their summer home. In that large dining room I noticed that every table, excepting four, had wines or liquors upon them, and children were helped to sherry while the parents partook of something stronger. Grandma, haven't I heard that strong drink lost us our parents?" said Nellie.

"Yes, my dears, you were orphaned by the collision of trains, caused by the negligence of a slightly intoxicated engineer."

"Grandma," said Mabel, "could you trust a physician that you knew would take even a glass of wine as a beverage?"

"No, my dear, I could not; one of the dearest friends I ever had lost her life through her physician's unsteady hand. He drank socially, but never when he had a delicate operation to perform. This evening he was at a dinner party, and he had partaken quite freely of the wine, when a hasty summons came for him to go immediately to the bedside of my friend. He found, when there, that an operation must be performed immediately to save her life, and not realizing how unsteady his hands were he began. A slip of the lancet and damage was done that could not be repaired, and his only and much beloved sister was hastened into eternity by the habit of wine drinking; and Dr. Bellevue has had his bitter lesson and could not be induced these days to even taste wine, or any thing that can intoxicate."

"Oh! dearest grandma, what troubles you have seen coming from this social habit of wine drinking," said Grace.

"I shall look about me," said Mabel, "and see if any of my friends are in this blizzard's track, and if so try to rescue them."

"If it were not growing so late, my dear ones, I could give many instances of deaths—morally and physically—caused by this devastating blizzard, which causes more and greater suffering than nature's blizzard has ever caused."

TEMPERANCE.

MONUMENTAL KANSAS.

So I call Kansas a monument of light in temperance legislation to the whole region round about. And surrounding States are catching the brightness, and new focuses are being formed. More than eight years ago Kansas engrafted into its organic life positive law against the liquor trade and manufacture. These eight years tell some things which ought to be known, especially in the East. I am fully persuaded that no State in the Union has been vilified in recent years as has Kansas. This has generally run in three channels. (1) That population has decreased. (2) That farms are passing out of the hands of the sturdy farmers. (3) That drunkenness is greatly on the increase; and all this since the passage of the preventive liquor laws. Now all this is the very hyperbole of a last fit of desperation. The whole is to be traced to liquor men.

Now for my own observations in that State, and my convictions growing therefrom. Population decreased! Prior to eight years ago the annual increase in population was 12,000. During these years of prohibition it has had an increase of 75,000 yearly, and the population is 700,000 greater than it was eight years ago. In 1880 the assessed value of real and railroad property in the State was $160,200,000. Now it is $353,243,000, which shows that in wealth it has more than doubled in less than nine years. I know of no other State that can make such a showing. In 1880 there were 5,315 school-houses in the State, now there are 9,000. Then the salary of the school teacher was $28.20 a month, now it is $38.32 per month; and on the question of illiteracy the State has a showing of seventeen per cent better than the national average. In 1880 there were 860 church buildings, now 2,000. In brief, the history of the last nine years—the period of our statistics only covers eight and one-half years—as compared with the twenty-five years prior, shows that in moral, educational and national development Kansas doubled itself within these less than nine years.

So much as to material prosperity. Now as to moral conditions. Here I found exceeding great things. Some drinking in dark, cheerless rooms in some of the larger cities, Wichita being the worst; the smaller cities and the towns being almost wholly clear from this perilous habit. I found not a single saloon in the whole State. And I do believe a saloon sign cannot be found in the State. The saloon as a school for vice does not exist. I asked a twelve-year-old boy in a large town to direct me to a saloon. He said he did not know of any. He then said he had never seen a saloon in his life. That boy's confession was to me an eloquent panegyric on his State.—Rev. Scott F. Hershey in Intelligencer.

Prof. Richard T. Ely, the distinguished lecturer on Political Economy in Johns Hopkins University, in a recent communication to the Baltimore American, wrote:

"The more I reflect upon the question the deeper grows the conviction that a large proportion of our social troubles are due to intemperance. . . . I have the profoundest sympathy with all those who are trying to abolish that social, political, and economic curse—the saloon.

"I have recently been reading a distinguished German author on intemperance, and find the conviction forced upon me more strongly than ever before that those are seriously in error who maintain that the use of intoxicating beverages on the Continent of Europe does little or no harm. It appears that in Germany from 40 to 70 per cent and more of the criminals are intemperate. According to English authorities quoted by this author, three-fourths to four-fifths of all crimes in England are due to intemperance. It is difficult to give exact statistics in matters like these, but certainly both here and elsewhere intemperance is one of the greatest curses of the age."

Carson Parker was found dead in a South Side saloon at Pueblo, Colo. It was the striking end of a remarkable life. For years one of the most eminent preachers in the Methodist church in New York State, he became a drunkard and an outcast, wandered to Pueblo, reformed, and again joined the church. His reformation lasted a year, during which time he did editorial work and demonstrated great ability. His last fall was complete, all efforts of friends proving useless.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The character of Simeon, vs. 25-27. The Jewish church, however corrupt, had always its little band of separatists, its "come outers," who stood as witnesses for God amid the general unbelief. Simeon was one. We have in him the picture of a true holiness believer, and it will be profitable to consider what were his prevailing traits, for they are such as in all ages go to make up a holy character. (1) He was just and devout, thus fulfilling the whole law of love to God and love to man. (2) He was full of faith. He was one that "waited for the consolation of Israel." Faith is always in an attitude of expectation, ever looking towards the promised land. (3) The Holy Ghost was upon him. He was led and taught of God. (4) His mind was spiritually illuminated, as ours may be if we keep them in the same receptive condition. (5) He was obedient to the inner voice. He came by the Spirit into the temple without stopping to question or doubt. We miss a great many opportunities to bless both ourselves and others through not immediately attending to the Spirit's call.

2. A life of faith makes a happy death, vs. 28-30. It might seem to human view that the aged Simeon's life-work was finished. Very likely he himself thought so, and it is true that his years of active service were over; yet it is equally true that the blossoming of his life came when he took the infant Jesus up in his arms and uttered that testimony which has come down to us through the centuries, and will live even to the end of time. God often sets his especial seal of blessing on passive service, and honors those who, incapacitated by age and infirmity, can "only stand and wait," by making their testimony peculiarly precious. Here is a lesson of hope and comfort for all aged Christians. Their work is never accomplished until God calls them home, and it may be given to them in their closing days to do work for him that shall transcend in value all that they did when in youth and vigor. Simeon was willing and glad to depart. He did not fear death, for he had seen and embraced him who is the Conqueror of death. It is not enough to have Christ in our heads; we must have him in our hearts, for he is the salvation of God only to those who embrace him by faith. But Simeon, though a Jew, had outgrown all Jewish bigotry and narrowness. In the true missionary spirit, he thinks first of the benighted Gentiles, and rejoices in Christ as the world's Saviour. Even professing Christians sometimes tell us that they feel no interest in foreign missions, that the needs of our own country should absorb all the money and effort that we have to give. But the example of this Jew living under the old covenant, and taught to consider all Gentiles as outside its privileges, ought to rebuke such a spirit. "The glory of thy people Israel" follows on the enlightening of the Gentiles. It was the true glory of the Jewish nation that it gave a Saviour to the world. And it is not wealth or military prowess that constitutes real national greatness to-day in the eyes of God, of angels, or of good men; but the most Christian nation, the one whose influence on the world is most beneficent and Christlike, will always be the most truly glorious.

3. Simeon's prophecy of Christ, vs. 34, 35. Christ is still a stumbling-block to those who reject him; still the Rock of Ages to the trembling sinner who comes to him for refuge. And "the thoughts of many hearts" are now "revealed" by the different manner in which they treat his claims. It is a revealer of all systems and creeds. Romanism preaches a false Christ. Masonry rejects him entirely. Thus they show themselves not to be of God. If all who love Christ are taken into such loving kinship with him that he can say, "Behold my brother and sister and mother," Simeon's prophecy to Mary will be fulfilled in them also. Christ is still "a sign spoken against" in those of his followers who would live devout and godly lives. Vanity Fair will always have its Faithfuls to whom it is given to be called fools and fanatics for Christ's sake. But let us, like the apostle, glory in the reproach of the world, for it proves the closeness and dearness of our relation to the Master.

HELPFUL THOUGHTS FROM PELOUBET'S QUARTERLY.

WAITING FOR GOD.—The only true way to wait for the fulfillment of God's promises, for the coming of his kingdom, for a revival of religion, for growth in grace and goodness, is to wait as Simeon waited, by a holy life, a devout love and trust, by using every means. The idler is not waiting for God. Only they who look for him, use every means, pour forth earnest prayer, long "as one waiteth for the morning,"—such alone are waiting.

JESUS THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD.—Light is mysterious in nature, ineffably bright and glorious, everywhere present, swift-winged, undefiled, and undefilable. Light is the source of life, of beauty, of warmth, comfort, and joy, of health, and of power. It destroys all darkness; it unites in itself purity and clearness. Now what light does for the natural world, Jesus does for the world of man, for mind, soul and spirit.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Rev. H. H. Hinman is at Camp Nelson, Kentucky, holding meetings every night for more than a week. The feeble church is much encouraged and strengthened by his visit.

—The executive committee of the International Sunday-school Convention of the United States and British American provinces, met at Pittsburgh, Jan. 16, to arrange for the sixth triennial session of the International Convention, which is to be held the fourth week in June.

The convention will be attended by 1,200 delegates and at least 2,000 Sunday-school workers. It will be in session a week, and discuss the different methods of Sunday-school work and the question of fixing the time for the World's Sabbath-School Convention. Of the executive committee of the World's Fair, as soon as it is appointed, it will be asked that a suitable building be erected as a place for the World's Sabbath-school Convention.

—It will be one hundred years, the 11th of next July, since Jesse Lee stood under the old Boston elm on the Common, and proclaimed a Methodist Gospel. The progress made since the crying of that one voice has been marvelous. The Methodists have a good memory, and propose to show it by a centennial next July.—Ex.

—The entire population of the town of Poscar, Hungary, have gone over from Catholicism to Protestantism in a body.

—The net gain of Baptists last year was 106,904 members, according to their statistics; of Presbyterians, 43,428; of Methodists, 24,852; Congregationalists, 18,024; Episcopalians, 12,857.

—In the New Hebrides there is a babel of tongues, but the Presbyterian missionaries have reduced twelve of them to writing. The seventeen missionaries laboring on the group are all busy with the work of translation.

—Switzerland has 1,162 Sunday-schools, with 5,459 teachers and 84,000 scholars. Sweden has 6,340 Sunday-schools, with 15,000 teachers and 220,000 scholars. Austria has 140 Sunday-schools, with 312 teachers and 5,519 scholars.

—Christianity is now the faith of over 2,000,000 of the Indian population—a number twelve times as large as that of those who follow the teachings of Buddah. Whereas in 1830 there were only 27,000 native Protestants in all India, Ceylon and Burmah; in 1871 there were 318,363.—Dr. Hunter, in Gazetteer of India.

—Sir Charles Bernard recently stated that the Christian Karens number 200,000, or fully one-third of the Karen people. About 500 congregations are practically self-supporting. They tithe the produce of their lands for the support of their pastors. They also send missionaries to Siam, and furnish all their support.—N. W. Christian Advocate.

—From Alexandria to the first cataract there are seventy-nine mission stations. There are seventy Sunday-schools, which number 4,000 scholars. The day and boarding-schools have 5,250 pupils. There were sold last year 6,600 Bibles, 9,000 volumes of religious literature and 17,000 educational books.

—Years since, with an idea that the American Baptist Missionary Union would rapidly push the Congo Mission, Grattan Guinness made over his mission property and missionaries to this society. But inasmuch as this great society has hardly held its own, Grattan Guinness again enters this field in Balolo land. A dozen missionaries are going out in the first band from his Harley House, London, and more are to follow, trusting God for their lives and support even in Africa.

—Six years since Fort Wayne College was put under the wing of the National Local Preachers' Association, Bishop Taylor, who was present at that convention, held in Fort Wayne, subscribed and paid $5 for the college. That $5 note one of the officers took and wrote the Bishop's name on the back of it in red ink. Twenty-five dollars has been offered for it and refused. It has been determined to enlarge the powers of the college to a university, to be hereafter known as "The Bishop Taylor University." An additional amount of funds will be required to endow it. A subscription was taken in convention, amounting to $2,600. Chauncey Shaffer gave his check for $1,000.

—The Moravians report for the past year 29,283 communicants in their mission fields, with a total of 80,000 under the care of these missions. Their receipts during the year for missions are $120,000. A small sum for such a host of missionaries, and a very large sum for such a small communion of poor people to raise.

—Bro. C. B. Ward writes from India to the African News: "After ten years of fruitless efforts to get from this government land suitable and sufficient for a Christian colony, I secured, on the 10th of this month, a lease duly executed and legally registered in one of the high courts of the Nizam, 2,500 acres for $266 a year, for twenty-three years. After that we are to pay such rental as all other lands pay surrounding us. Our little colony now numbers 100. We are a proof of God's willingness to maintain us without subsidy or slavery. As no other way was open, I have taken the property in my own name, but as soon as a way is seen we shall see it secured to the M. E. church for indigenously supported mission work only. We value the 'village' more than we could $10,000 in cash. We can maintain ourselves in the future as in the past. But given a capital of $2,500 for the complete and early restoration of the village tanks, waterways and wells, with some small part for buildings, we can reach a productive base wherefrom we can become a missionary agency to the heathen all about us, without any foreign aid for 'capital or revenue' expenditure. We thank God for helping us, and our eyes are to him for the capital we need. Any friend wanting to know more of this work may address me direct, or W. J. Gladwin, Miles, Ia."

IN BRIEF.

During the year 1889 234,726,607 letters and 30,130,668 postal cards passed the New York postoffice.

There are 2,500 freight and 850 passenger trains coming and going daily at Chicago; and 250 persons were killed in 1889 by the surface railroads in this city.

It is said that women in New Orleans enter more occupations unusual to the sex than in any other city. They become merchants, hunters, florists, dairy farmers and manufacturers, and all make a good living.

The Congo State Government, as a civilizing power, is being gradually acknowledged by the tribes. Even at Stanley Falls, a thousand miles up the Congo from Stanley Pool, everything is quiet, and the tribes for hundred of miles around are giving in their adherence to the government, and even supplying soldiers and laborers with all the native products.

The Primitive Catholic says: "A Mrs. Jones, of Chicago, has had her daughter of 16 arrested recently for no other cause than that she went to work in a pious Protestant family. Here is the confession of the mother, which we clip from the Chicago Inter Ocean. She said: 'My daughter has done nothing bad; but we did not want her to work at a place where she could learn the Protestant faith. We are Catholic, and we want her to be one too.'"

One of the greatest snow blockades ever known on the Sierra Nevada mountains, has been raised by the Central Pacific railroad company's force and rotary snow plow. From Emigrant Gap the west-bound overland trains are able to follow the plow to Colfax, and from the latter point the plow returned to Cascade to free the snow-bound train at Summit. Four east-bound trains at Colfax were then able to proceed. The snow at Summit was sixteen feet deep.

The editor of the Chicago News, who has just returned from Europe, relates this incident, which he witnessed in St. Petersburg: "One day I saw a carriage containing a gendarme and another person. I asked our guide who it was, and he said it was a political prisoner. I asked him what would become of him. 'Oh, he'll never be heard of again. We don't have any bother about juries and trials. The papers won't take up the matter, and his friends won't attempt to do anything for him.' 'But if he were your brother wouldn't you try to do something for him?' I asked. 'No, sir. If I went to the officers and said I wanted to know what they were going to do with him, they would say: 'Come right in. You can have the cell next to his and go with him to Siberia to see what becomes of him.'" Monigona, Iowa, is the home of Iowa's heroine, brave Kate Shelley, whose fame is already written in prose and verse. On the night of July 8, 1881, Miss Shelley, then a girl of 16 years of age, saved a trainload of people from a horrible death. Just at that time the Des Moines river was swollen into a raging torrent by long-continued rains. On the night in question a locomotive had broken down the bridge over Honey creek, not far from the great iron bridge over the Des Moines. Kate Shelley, who lived close by the Honey creek bridge, started out alone to the nearest station to stop the midnight passenger, which was almost due. After a perilous journey over the iron bridge, which she crossed on her hands and knees in the midst of a furious storm, she reached the station, warned the agent, and fainted away. Kate Shelley is now living with her widowed mother and three small brothers and sisters on their homestead, left by her father and now heavily mortgaged. The brave girl has been teaching a country school for several years, endeavoring to keep the wolf from the door. But the family are in destitute circumstances and in urgent need of help.

Mr. Audon, who returned a while ago from a two years' stay in Shoa, reports an interesting discovery at Lake Assal, which is in east Africa, several days' march inland from the Bay of Tadjoura. This is one of the most remarkable of lakes, and is one of the few spots in Africa that is below the level of the sea, the surface of Lake Assal being about 372 feet below the Indian Ocean. The lake has no outlet, and one of its beaches, formerly a part of the lake, is little else than salt, which is carried for sale far and wide over east Africa. The lake is noted for its intensely salt waters; and, as previous white visitors never found any stream running into it, though it seemed to preserve a constant level, it was thought it had a subterranean connection with the Indian Ocean. Mr. Audon's party was more fortunate. Though the lake is walled in by precipices and mountains, they succeeded in finding three little brooks babbling over the stones, a good deal like our own mountain streams, and throwing themselves into the lake. The peculiarity of these brooks is that they are salt. There is no doubt, therefore, that they come from the Bay of Tadjoura, and a little of the Indian Ocean is constantly filtering into the lake, just enough to keep it at about the same level. As evaporation goes on the saline deposits are constantly increasing. The waters of Lake Assal are said to be heavier and more intensely salt than even those of the Dead Sea.

PAGAN COUNTERFEITS IN THE Christian Church.

A pamphlet of 52 pages, by Chas. A. S. Temple.

The following from Rev. H. H. Hinman shows his estimate of its contents:

"I have read with great interest 'Pagan Counterfeits in the Christian Church' by Chas. A. S. Temple. I regard the subject discussed as important, and its presentation both able and timely. There is a most manifest drift in all our Protestant denominations towards unauthorized ritualism and the substitution of human inventions in place of the simplicity of the Gospel, as given by Christ and his apostles. In calling attention to this tidal wave of formalism, the author has conferred a lasting benefit on the church; as of Protestantism."

Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by

REV ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

HOME AND HEALTH.

HOW TO PRESERVE THE EYESIGHT.

The editor of the Huntsville, Ala., Democrat, who has passed three-score years without the use of eye-glasses, and can still, with his natural eyes, read fine print, wishes to give other people nearing the sere and yellow leaf the benefit of his ocular experience. Therefore, he tells them that in 1865 he found his eyesight failing, indicated by dark specks flitting over the page and a hazy appearance of the letters when he was reading. Remembering to have heard his mother say that ex-President John Quincy Adams (who lived to about 80 years) had preserved his eyesight and read without glasses by pressing the outer and inner corners of the eye together, the editor tried the experiment. After retiring to his bed at night, he has, ever since the fall of 1875, before going to sleep, pressed gently together the outer and inner corner of each eye between the thumb and fore-finger of the hand corresponding to the right and left eye, applying equal, simultaneous pressure to both eyes. Or, using but one hand, he has put the middle finger on his forehead above his nose and pressed together the corners of one between the thumb and fore-finger, and the corners of the other eye between the third and fourth fingers, striving to give equal pressure to both eyes. The philosophy of the experiment is explained in this way: As people pass the middle age there is said to be (and we believe it) a tendency of the balls of the eye to lose their convexity—in common parlance, to flatten. The habitual pressure of the outer and inner corners of the eyes together prevents flattening, and thereby preserves the original normal convexity of the eyes, and thereby the original power of seeing. Near-sighted persons are exceptions to the rule. Their near-sightedness (as we understand) is caused by too great convexity of the eye. Oftentimes, as they advance in years, their eyes flatten; that is, lose their original convexity, and become more nearly like the good eyes of young people, and they can see better without glasses, and lay them aside.

Whether our philosophical explanation is right or wrong, this one thing we know, that whereas we, over seventeen years ago, were losing our original power of seeing, now, by the manipulation of our eyes as above explained, we can see clearly without the use of glasses, we can read small print almost, if not quite, as well as in our youth, while men and women many years our juniors, some of them our near blood relatives, who have not resorted to our mode of improving the eyesight, are compelled to use glasses. Believing it our duty to mankind to do them all the good we can, we overcome our native modesty about writing of ourselves by the consideration that we may benefit others by relating our own experience.

The reason why both eyes should be subjected to the equal simultaneous pressure is, that to see clearly, both eyes should behold objects at the same focal distance, and this cannot be if the two eyes have not the same convexity. If the two eyes should see objects at different distances, the object would present different images on the two retinae of the eyes, and produce a confusion of images, and, of course, impair distinct vision. Instances occur of persons who have a natural infirmity of the eyes with different foci—one eye seeing at one focal distance, the other seeing at another focal distance. In such cases oculists provide eye-glasses of different foci, so accommodated as to correct the natural defect and make both eyes see alike.—Herald of Health.

GOOD TEETH.

Savages, whether herbivorous or carnivorous, have good teeth. Our Pilgrim Fathers, who ate their grains and their meats as nature furnished them, with all their requisite elements, had good teeth, as have also the laboring classes of Europe, and indeed of the whole world, who live in a similar manner; and if there be a people, or any considerable number of people, living on natural food, who have much work for dentists, I have not heard of them.

On the other hand, we, the degenerate sons of our healthy and robust Pilgrim Fathers, laboring men and all, who make fine flour, butter, sugar, lard, and fat pork our staple articles of food, more generally than any other people in the world, have more work for dentists. And even our Celtic and Hibernian citizens who come to this country from their diet of oatmeal porridge, barley cake, cheese and buttermilk, with good teeth at any age, falling into our habits, and using the very finest flour, with butter and lard, and perhaps salt pork, with vegetables swimming in grease, soon begin to lose their teeth, and the teeth of their children are as bad as those of native born citizens of the purest Yankee blood.—Lutheran Observer.

The Fall of the Christians: An Historical Romance of Japan in the 17th Century. By Prof. W. C. Kitchin, Ph. D.

"The Fall of the Christians" is a history of the desperate struggle of Christianity against Paganism in Japan over two hundred and fifty years ago, as related in ancient manuscripts discovered by the author. There were then several thousands of Christians in Japan, and the attempt to exterminate them led to one of the most sanguinary struggles recorded in history. The heroism of the Christians, both men and women, and their fortitude under the most appalling dangers, as portrayed by Professor Kitchin, will enlist the sympathies of the civilized world.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

Herbert Ward, Stanley's Companion.

Herbert Ward, the companion of Stanley in his explorations in Africa, is one of the few men connected with Stanley's African explorations who has ever returned alive from the "Dark Continent." Mr. Ward's articles running through eight numbers of the "Ledger" are of the most intensely interesting description, and cover five years of his adventures in Africa, and they will be illustrated by sketches made by Mr. Ward, and by the reproduction of photographs taken by him in Africa. These pictures will throw much light upon the manners and customs of the hitherto unknown cannibal tribes of Africa.

Life in British America, By Rev. E. R. Young.

Being the adventures and experiences of Rev. E. R. Young, the celebrated missionary, and his wife during their residence in the Polar region twelve hundred miles north of St. Paul, in which Dr. Young narrates how he tamed and taught the native wild Indians of the Northwest; how he equipped himself for and how he made his perilous sledging and hazardous canoe trips when visiting all the Indian settlements within five hundred miles of his home.

Nihilism in Russia, By Leo Hartmann, Nihilist.

Leo Hartmann, a fugitive from Russian authorities, has been connected with the most daring feats of the Russian Nihilists. Mr. Hartmann shows how the intelligent people of Russia are becoming Nihilists in consequence of the despotism of the form of government. A participant in plots to kill the Czar, such as the blowing up of the Winter Palace, he is able to give true information as to how this and other great schemes were accomplished. The situation in Russia is sufficient to increase the love of every true American for our form of government.

Into Mischief and Out, By Elizabeth Stuart Phelps.

This is a story of college life. It describes, in a graphic manner, the troubles which overtake bright students who get into mischief, and their skillful manoeuvres to evade the consequences of their conduct.

The Character of the New York Ledger.

The New York Ledger directs its efforts towards crowding out that trashy and injurious literature which is poisoning the minds of American youth. The Ledger appeals to the intelligence of the people, and depends for its support on that taste which prevails for innocent and amusing entertainment and healthful instruction. The Ledger will contain the best Serial and Short Stories, Historical and Biographical Sketches, Travels, Wit and Humor, and everything interesting to the Household.

FARM NOTES.

IMPORTANCE OF GOOD COUNTRY HIGHWAYS.

Col. Albert A. Pope, of Boston, in an address on the subject of roads, before the Board of Trade of Syracuse, N. Y., as reported in the Buffalo Express, said in substance:

It has already been my privilege to speak in your city upon the benefit of good roads to an important branch of trade.

But there is a higher and broader view to take of the whole matter, and we may well consider the importance of good roads to us as Americans, as men of whatever social or business interests, as property owners, and finally as citizens of our respective localities.

I think that every one is prepared to grant the value of good roads to the country at large, since it is quite natural to any one to think of various things that benefit mankind in general, even though he may not take the pains to come down to the particular way in which they affect him personally.

The influence of good roads toward the development and increase in value of the agricultural regions will hardly be questioned.

The advantages of improvements are not confined to the proprietors or to those living immediately upon any road, but are shared by all who avail themselves of the increased facilities.

Agriculture is both directly and indirectly dependent, in a great degree, upon good roads for its success and rewards.

Directly, as these roads carry the production of the fields to the market, and bring to them in return their bulky and weighty materials, at a cost of labor which grows less as the roads become better.

Indirectly, as the cities and towns whose dense population and manufacturing industry make them the best markets for farming produce are enabled to grow and to extend themselves indefinitely, by roads alone, which supply the place of rivers; to the banks of which these great towns would otherwise be necessarily confined.

While, therefore, it might be an inexcusable waste of money to construct a costly road to connect two small towns which had little intercourse, it is equally wasteful, and is a much more frequent shortsightedness of economy, to leave unimproved, and almost in a state of nature, the communications between a great city and the interior region from which its daily sustenance is drawn, and into which its own manufactures and merchandise are conveyed.

The prosperity of any city depends largely upon the surrounding country, and the better the road facilities, the faster the country will grow in population and the more business the city will have in supplying their wants.

Some of the advantages thus to be attained have not long since been well summed up in a report of a committee of the English House of Commons:

"By the improvement of our roads every branch of our agricultural, commercial and manufacturing industry would be materially benefited.

"Every article brought into market would be diminished in price; and the number of horses would be so much reduced that, by these and other retrenchments, the expense of millions [pounds sterling] would be annually saved to the public.

"The expense of repairing roads and the wear and tear of carriages and horses would be essentially diminished, and thousands of acres, the produce of which is now wasted in feeding unnecessary horses, would be devoted to the production of food for man.

"In short, the public and private advantages which would result from effecting that great object, the improvement of our highways and turnpikes, are incalculable; though, from their being spread over a wide surface and available in various ways, such advantages will not be so apparent as those derived from other sources of improvement of a more restricted and less general nature."

It is always economy to spend enough to begin with to secure the best results, and it always costs less in the long run.

A good road should cost more to build than a poor one, but it is often the case that a poor road costs as much as a good one would. But even when a good one is more expensive, it will be easier and cheaper to keep in good repair, and will last many years longer; while its advantages, and the savings to those who daily use it, will very much more than compensate them for the extra expense they have been put in the building.

Mr. Edwin Chadwick, speaking on this subject, at the Institution of Civil Engineers, remarked:

"In the present condition of the country, it is of vast importance to reduce the cost of transit to the uttermost. If by the improvement of the rural roads four horses could be enabled to do the work of five, the saving of the country in agricultural horses would not be less than seven millions a year.

"If the city traffic be taken into consideration, we believe the cost of transit to be saved by improvement in roads would not be less than from seventeen to twenty millions a year."

A mile of good macadamized road is more easily supported than a poor horse.

Prof. Jenks says:

"On Illinois roads a full load for a two-horse team can be carried for three months of the year, two-thirds of a load for three months, and half a load for six.

"If the average load is not as low as in Illinois it will come near it. The Illinois roads cost $15,346,000 in extra hauling, and reduce the value of farms at a distance from railway depots by $160,000,000. If Illinois spent $250,000,000 on good roads the total interest on the sum would still leave enough of the sum now spent on hauling to build a new State Capitol every year, to say nothing of the nervous wear and tear and the prismatic profanity induced by country roads when the frost is coming out. Good roads would save the State its State taxes every year, and the labor misdirected and wasted on roads now would go far toward making good highways."

Good roads are then unquestionably cheaper to maintain and to use than poor ones.

It is safe to say that a perfect road once laid down will cost far less to keep in repair from year to year, and at the end of twenty years will have required a far smaller total expenditure than a poorer road costing half as much and improperly made.

A properly built highway, constructed upon any one of the systems accepted as the best for their various purposes and locations, must necessarily be made with a solid and firm foundation, effectually separating the surface from the soil below.

It should be thoroughly drained, and provided with watercourses at the side, and a hard and compact surface, as smooth as the nature of its composition will admit of, and free from mud, dust and loose stones.

To reach this degree of perfection the best obtainable materials must be used. It requires good labor, ample time in construction, and above all, the science and skill of a professional engineer, whose business is road-making.

Certain kinds of roads are accepted as the best under certain conditions. For the country, it is essential to make use of such material as nature furnishes for each locality, but more attention should be paid than generally is to the first principles laid down by such road-builders as Macadam and Telford; so far, certainly, as they provide for thorough drainage, and for homogeneous, even surfaces of the best materials within reach, and then for systematic care and repair.

Country roads need be no wider than is absolutely necessary for the accommodation of the traffic and travel that will come upon them. In many places a road wide enough for a single team is all that is necessary, with suitable turnouts, for it is unwise and expensive to attempt to maintain a country roadway wider than the requirements of the community de-

"Like Magic,"

THE effect produced by Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Colds, Coughs, Croup, and Sore Throat are, in most cases, immediately relieved by the use of this wonderful remedy.

It strengthens the vocal organs, allays irritation, and prevents the inroads of Consumption; in every stage of that dread disease, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral relieves coughing and induces refreshing rest.

"I have used Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in my family for thirty years and have always found it the best remedy for croup, to which complaint my children have been subject."—Capt. U. Carley, Brooklyn, N. Y.

"From an experience of over thirty years in the sale of proprietary medicines, I feel justified in recommending Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. One of the best recommendations of the Pectoral is the enduring quality of its popularity, it being more salable now than it was twenty-five years ago, when its great success was considered marvelous."—R. S. Drake, M. D., Beloit, Kans.

"My little sister, four years of age, was so ill from bronchitis that we had almost given up hope of her recovery. Our family physician, a skillful man and of large experience, pronounced it useless to give her any more medicine; saying that he had done all it was possible to do, and we must prepare for the worst. As a last resort, we determined to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and I can truly say, with the most happy results. After taking a few doses she seemed to breathe easier, and, within a week, was out of danger. We continued giving the Pectoral until satisfied she was entirely well. This has given me unbounded faith in the preparation, and I recommend it confidently to my customers."—C. O. Lepper, Druggist, Fort Wayne, Ind.

A GREAT SUCCESS.

The Equitable Homestead Corporation, an association incorporated under the laws of California, has now ONE THOUSAND ACRES of the finest raisin land in Fresno county in process of cultivation.

SO MANY INQUIRIES

have been made about the organization of this colony, and the profits of raisin culture, and such a desire manifested to have the Equitable enlarged so as to admit more members, that I have decided to organize another colony association on the same plan.

NOTE THIS:

I have 2,000 ACRES of land which I will dispose of in the following manner: It is divided into five-acre lots and multiples of five. It will all be planted in raisin grapes and other fruits and cultivated at actual cost, the purchaser paying in cash just what it takes to plant and cultivate it, which he may do in small installments during three years' time, which brings

Published by an ex-Romanist.

This work is a translation from the Latin of the "Secret Instructions of the Jesuit Society." Its revelations are startling, showing to what depths of deceit the Jesuit priest and all connected with this Order of "Spies" and "Traitors" will descend to accomplish their unholy aims. It is printed in the original Latin with the English translation parallel, thus doing away with the anticipated charge of forgery by those who set a premium on murder and treason.

A history of the Order of Jesuits and their expulsion from every Catholic country is given; also, the reason why the Public Schools must go.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

STORMS.

A terrible death-dealing cyclone or tornado swept through Clinton, Ky., at 7 o'clock Sunday night, Jan. 12, demolishing seventy-five buildings, instantly killing ten people and injuring fifty-five others more or less severely. The storm came swooping down upon the town with a horrible roar from the southwest, leveling everything in its path, filling the air with missiles of every description. The entire east side of the town is wrecked. The buildings went down like chaff, the force of the wind actually killing poultry and birds, many being picked up dead in the streets this morning. An eye-witness thus describes the deadly storm: "A cloud, black as tar, whirling about like mad, and shooting up and down, and athwart this pitchy mass were millions of sparks or balls of fire. They moved with lightning-like rapidity. The effect was like that of a great shower of sparks and flying embers that have sprung with a mighty roar from a burning building. Accompanying this was a dreadful noise. The rain poured a perfect deluge."

A cyclone Jan. 12 did $6,000 worth of damage to the town of Cooksville, Ill. A drug store and stock was completely destroyed. Great damage was done to trees and farm buildings. A deluge of rain fell simultaneously from Clay to Alton, filling streams to their brim. The mercury dropped fifty degrees from midnight to sunrise.

The wind is reported to have reached a velocity of ninety miles an hour at Buffalo, N. Y., Monday morning, but no serious damage is reported.

A hurricane at Rochester, N. Y., Monday, partly wrecked many buildings, including St. John's church, the Genesee Brewery malthouse, Curtis Brothers' canning factory, and the Jocelyn block. One man was killed, another fatally hurt, and several persons had narrow escapes.

John McDonald, a Mrs. Wilson and three children are thought to have perished in last Thursday's storm near Rosebud, N. W. T. They started in a sleigh to drive to Gleichen, and have not since been heard of.

COUNTRY.

The Utah legislature convened Monday, and Mormons captured all the official and employees' positions.

Owing to the prevalence of the grip among its employees the Pennsylvania Railroad at Pittsburgh has been compelled to refuse freight for the seaboard.

The first bill passed by the legislature of South Dakota—to provide for refunding the indebtedness of the State—was signed by the Governor Wednesday afternoon, both houses adjourning for five minutes to celebrate the event, loud cheering and exchange of congratulations being followed by a fervent prayer by the chaplain.

At the joint meeting of the Ohio legislature Wednesday, Calvin S. Brice was formally declared elected United States Senator.

In the old homestead at New Hackensack, N. Y., Tuesday, Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Mott celebrated her 100th birthday, and in the festivities five direct generations participated.

Sunday at Dover, Del., the mercury went to 106, and peach-buds are so far advanced that a heavy frost will ruin the crop.

It is reported that thousands of Negroes are migrating from South Carolina to Oklahoma, and that by spring there will be 50,000 colored people in that district.

A heavy log slid down the steep hill west of Miss Etta Douglas's school in Tumbidge, Vermont, burst through the side of the house and crushed into the school-room. Several pupils had narrow escapes from death. The log was about two feet in diameter and twenty-six feet long. It was being moved along a road by some lumberman, and acquired such a momentum that they were unable to control it.

Walker Blaine, son of the Hon. James G. Blaine, died in the family residence at Washington Wednesday night, from pneumonia, superinduced by an attack of la grippe. Deceased was Examiner of Claims in the State Department.

FOREIGN.

The Pope has issued an encyclical which sets forth the principles which shall guide Catholics in their relation toward the state, which, the encyclical says, they must obey when such a course does not entail disobedience to the divine laws. In countries where the state opposes Catholicism, Catholics must combat the enemy, but must not tie the church to any political party.

Seventy persons who were parading the streets and shouting "Down with England," were arrested in Lisbon.

H. M. Stanley and his party arrived at Cairo Jan. 14. They were received by General Sir Francis Grenfell and other notables. The Khedive has conferred upon Mr. Stanley the Modjidich decoration. Mr. Stanley said that Emin Pasha was animated with a desire to serve the Egyptian government, and that some appointment would be the best medicine for him. The terms upon which the Sudan was abandoned, he said, amounted to a political crime. He considers that the wisdom of choosing the Congo route has been incontestably proved.

Earl Derby, in a speech at Liverpool on the Irish question, admitted that a land purchase scheme was necessary as the lesser of two evils. The latest federal development of the home rule idea, he said, was much more reasonable than Mr. Gladstone's original proposals, and doubtless could be made to work, but he believed it to be impossible to create a satisfactory central body responsible for imperial affairs, because the English representation would outweigh the Irish, Scotch and Welsh together.

Chinese advices give particulars of the collapse of a theater at Hanting, near Shantung, on Oct. 3, by which over 200 lives were lost. The temple where the performance was being held was built on a high hill in the middle of the town. A portion of the hill had been cut away, and a perpendicular wall fifty feet high had been built up from the street to support the terrace on which the temple stood. The entire wall gave way and the whole mass of men, women and children were hurled to the street below. Over 200 dead bodies have been taken from the debris at last accounts.

A SKETCH OF MRS. J. BLANCHARD'S LIFE AND DEATH.

Miss Mary Avery Bent was born in Middlebury, Vt., Jan. 7, 1819; was married at her father's, in that town, Sept. 17, 1838, to Rev. J. Blanchard, then pastor of the Sixth Presbyterian church, Cincinnati, Ohio, since president of Knox and of Wheaton Colleges, Ill.

Mrs. Blanchard's grandmother, Mary Allen (Avery), was niece to the Puritan statesman and "Father of the American Revolution," Samuel Adams. Her mother, Catherine Avery, was youngest daughter of that niece who is mentioned in the biography of that patriot.

Her husband first met her in Harrisburg, Pa., when, at 17 years of age, she was preceptress of the Girls' High School of that city, with three lower schools under her.

At that time three Abolition lecturers had been driven from Harrisburg, and the fourth (her future husband) was sent by the Tappan committee to that post to get up the convention which Thaddeus Stevens attended. The writer was often hissed and stoned in daylight while crossing the streets of Harrisburg.

Miss Bent was popular, and was rallied as a Vermonter, and charged with being an Abolitionist. "You are not, are you?" said the leading lawyer (Foster), whose pride was the city schools. "So far as I understand it, I am," was her reply to the man who had her standing in his hands. She put her sister Catharine in her place, went South, taught a year in Montgomery, Ala., and has been the loved and honored wife of that Abolitionist lecturer nearly fifty-two years.

Mrs. Blanchard was but 19 when she went to Cincinnati to be a pastor's wife. The church and ladies' society had been divided in sentiment for three years. After she came there was not a divided vote for above eight years, when she went to Galesburg, Ill., where her husband was president of Knox College, and where she was loved and honored by all. She next removed to assist in the presidency of Wheaton College, where she has lived from 1860 to 1890, as universally loved and honored as she will be lamented; and where her son, C. A. Blanchard, is president of the College and three of her daughters are honored mothers of families; two, wives of Professors H. A. and W. H. Fischer, and one the wife of H. L. Kellogg, the loved and respected editor of the Christian Cynosure. Another daughter is Mrs. Ezra A. Cook, wife of the well-known publisher; and another still the wife of Thos. E. Kennedy, Inspector of schools in San Francisco, Cal. These six children survive their mother. Six others have preceded her to heaven, to whom she is now "gathered," as the Bible describes the departure of God's children.

On the 6th of January inst., she started with her husband, and the oldest daughter of Pres. C. A. Blanchard, to seek health in San Diego, Cal., and visit her daughter, Mrs. Kennedy, in San Francisco on the return. The beautiful car on the Santa Fe route, with its gentle motion, revived and renewed her at the first; but on ascending the Raton Mountain, beyond Trinidad, 6,722 feet high, her breath and strength gave way. She had cared for three sets of children: her own; those of Mrs. Secretary Stoddard, her daughter Catherine, who was killed by the cars; and four little daughters of her son, Pres. C. A. Blanchard, when their mother died. The mountain altitude caused her death. We stopped off at East Las Vegas, N. M., on Wednesday, and she died at the Central Hotel, Saturday night, Jan. 11, at 10 o'clock. "Who can find a virtuous woman? Her price is far above rubies. Her children rise up and call her blessed. Her husband, also, and he praiseth her. The woman that feareth the Lord, she shall be praised." Prov. 31: 10-30.

Half an hour before her death we saw she was fast sinking, her head resting on the lap of Mrs. Sophia E. Eames, her attendant, and her granddaughter, Belle, bending over her. She had been somnolent, but without pain or groan. I said, "Mother, is Jesus with you?" With that calm precision which characterized the workings of her mind, she said, slowly, "I wish—he—was," in a tone of expectation. I then asked, "Mother, do you wish to send any message to the children?" She strove to speak, when I added, "Do you wish them all to live to Christ and be good?" "Yes!" "Yes!" she replied. In about three or four minutes after that, her lips again moved and she said, "Jesus! Jesus! Jes-u-s!" and so passed away. "And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am, there ye may be also." John 14: 3.

The kindness of our fellow-travelers and of the train officials, in all this trying time, was such as children render to the parents they love. Especially, the attentions of the conductor of the Pullman car, who is a member of Dr. Noble's Union Park church, Chicago, and Mrs. Eames, were such as to be ever remembered with gratitude. Rev. Mr. Rush, of Las Vegas, the Presbyterian pastor, showed great brotherly kindness. He several times came in to minister sympathy, and conducted a brief service at the hotel before the return journey began. He spoke of Mrs. Blanchard's Christian firmness in maintaining her principles. The physicians had prescribed alcoholic stimulants, but she refused them, and requested her husband not to allow such medicines to be given. "Thus," said Mr. Rush, "this mother in Israel stood by her principles in the face of death." He also called attention to her opposition to secret societies, in which all, he said, might not agree with her, but he hoped most of those present did so. He also gave, to all those who wished them, tracts on the lodge, which she had provided for distribution on the journey.

Toward no question of great public interest, whether popular or not, was Mrs. Blanchard indifferent. In the higher education of young men and women she was always profoundly interested. She began teaching in a high school at Harrisburg, Pa., at the age of 17, and was later engaged in the same duty at Montgomery, Alabama. For the thirty-five years when her husband was college president she most ably assisted him, and most unselfishly also. She raised over $5,000 for Wheaton under appointment of the trustees, and instead of taking the $500 commission, she retained only her bare expenses of some $60. To every student who came under her personal acquaintance she was a wise and tender counselor, and many whose poverty caused them a double struggle for an education are more indebted to her than they may perhaps ever know.

The Sabbath reform was always close to her heart. An essay read on this topic before the Elgin Association was universally admired and was published. She attended all the Sabbath conventions possible, and encouraged the formation of the State Association of Illinois, which began in her family, where her influence and instruction always made the day peaceful and holy.

She was always very active in the temperance cause. When 12 years old she started a little girl's society. The most successful temperance society ever known in Wheaton she organized some twenty years ago, and the present W. C. T. U. was begun at her motion. She was a stockholder also in the Woman's Temperance Publishing company in Chicago.

When the slavery question divided the nation, she was from the first ready to meet it. As a young teacher, surrounded by those who favored the system, and her situation in their hands, yet she was calm and fearless in confessing for Christ as an Abolitionist. And in her home afterward the demon of Caste was never allowed to enter along with a black man.

So, too, her testimony for the truth against the lodge system has always been earnest, clear, firm and Christian. Though dead, she yet speaks in the records of many conventions; in her published writings, widely read; in her private letters, as those to Miss Willard, some of which were printed; and not least in her children, upon whom, in God's providence, the burden of this reform greatly lies, and who were prepared to bear it by the example of her life and the instruction at her fireside.

THE CHARITY BALL AND ITS PROCEEDS.

BY JOSIAH W. LEEDS.

Nearly nine years have elapsed since the writer of this first put forth a protest against the acceptance of charity ball proceeds by philanthropic institutions under the care of members of Christian churches. It was not at first evident to me the present season, after the managers of the annually recurring ball had made their announcement and named their intended beneficiaries, that anything additional to what had already been said would be required at my hands. The concern upon the subject, however, did make itself renewedly felt, and now, upon the morning of this day when I had definitely purposed to formulate a plea, there has unexpectedly and unsought been presented the argument not to accept, which follows:

Being opposite a place of amusement in the central part of the city, and noticing a number of people looking into a front window belonging to it, I observed that the objects of their attention were some markedly debasing pictures of female dancers. I pursued my way a few squares, but the impression grew upon my mind that the managers of the Opera House (who likewise manage two theatres in the city, and another, I believe, at the sea side), and also the owner of the property as well, should be brought to a realizing sense of their wrong doing. My steps were retraced to the City Hall, the magistrate at the new Central Station was seen, and a warrant for the arrest of the managers was obtained and placed in the hands of a special officer for service. A year and a half ago a like warrant for the arrest of the same parties was drawn up, but its execution was stayed by the managers quickly withdrawing the objectionable pictures. In the incident of to-day, the District Attorney, being seen, acquiesced in the suggestion that the officer bring before him the managers, and also the owner of the property, who was, technically, not liable to arrest.

All this was done. The District Attorney forcibly impressed upon the offending managers that they had violated the law and were liable to arrest and indictment; and as to the ballet dancing which they advertised he would say unhesitatingly that he could never lend his attendance to such a demoralizing spectacle. The officer stated that the managers had already removed every one of the pictures, and upon it being fully understood that in future no similar exhibits should appear, the proceedings were stayed. To the wealthy proprietor of the play-house—of whom it has been several times published that he has bestowed large gifts upon a charitable institution—the remark was more particularly addressed by the undersigned, that inquiry concerning offences such as had just engaged our attention was by no means confined to earthly courts, but that at the dread Tribunal of last resort it would be assuredly known who they were that tempted men with debasing pleasures that led down to death and the gates of hell.

Now, can it be said that this is clean money—that which is presumably from a variety opera house—to be handed forth in the name of charity for the founding or the maintenance of philanthropic institutions? And, further, is it wise and is it right for professing Christians to accept money from such a source? And while the Charity Ball is not an entertainment of which the ordinary stage ballet forms a part, yet it is nevertheless acknowledged to be a worldly entertainment in the fullest sense. The figure of charity, as we think of her, is as of a sweet-faced matron, of modest mien and simple apparel, who would surely cast her eyes down in despair and shame were she asked to attire herself in the satins and laces and jewels and decollete dresses which are the favorite adorning and costuming on such public occasions. The highway of holiness runs not that way, where extravagance, envy, pride of dress and of person, and temptation in many shapes and disguises, has free course. Truly it is these sensuous, fashionable entertainments which easily lead up to and gain immunity for the vicious displays of the so-called vaudeville theatre and opera house.

"It is our conviction," said the managers of the Presbyterian Hospital in rejecting their proportion of the proffered Charity Ball proceeds in 1884, "that it would be inconsistent in us to accept means for the support of the work which the church has given us to do, in its name and under its direction, which the church itself could not accept, which you would neither ask nor expect the church to accept." The Presbyterian Hospital lost nothing by this righteous stand for principle.

In 1885 the Roman Catholics gave a Charity Ball, the proceeds from which were to be devoted to an orphanage of their church. Archbishop Ryan, to whom the undersigned addressed a dissuasive plea, replied that he did not just then see his way clear to deprive the orphan children of the money; yet, in the following year, the Plenary Council, held at Baltimore, put forth such a declaration upon the subject that the then projected Charity Ball of the Catholics at the Academy of Music was given up, or rather, it was authoritatively announced that "the ball, therefore, is not the Catholic Charity Ball, as none of its proceeds can be devoted to charitable objects." Perhaps we need not to wait for a synod, convocation, or plenary council to enlighten us concerning our duty in this regard, seeing that the informing and directing Spirit of God is not far from any one of his children who incline to hear and to heed what he speaks.

In the winter of 1886-7, the Germantown Hospital and Dispensary being named among the Charity Ball's beneficiaries, an earnest protest against accepting the proceeds was laid before the managers, signed by all the Presbyterian, Episcopal, Baptist, Methodist, Reformed Episcopal and Lutheran ministers of Germantown, about twenty in number. The money was indeed taken, but the opposition manifested was so marked that a similar tender, the President of the Board said, was not likely to be again made.

The late lamented Richard Newton, a very little while before his death, was met by me on a train, and the conversation turning upon the Charity Ball of the winter which had just closed, most earnestly and with fervor did he refer to the objections that he had ineffectually expressed a year or two before, against the Episcopal Hospital consenting to accept the unholy gift that was tendered it.

Managers of charitable institutions, let me appeal to you. Do you feel free to graciously receive the proceeds of such worldly entertainments, as extended in the name of charity? Do you believe it will honor the name and further the cause of Christ to condone this terrible confusion and iniquity of the World and the Church walking together? Will it not embolden the gainsayers of our holy religion to mock at its verities and despise its testimonies, and timid seekers after God to be easily persuaded that the offence of the cross is ceased, and the narrow way an uncomfortable tradition of a way cast up for old-time saints and pilgrims to walk in, and not for the better informed people of this generation? What say the Scriptures concerning unworthy offerings: "Ye brought that which was torn, and the lame, and the sick; thus ye brought an offering: Should I accept this of your hand? saith the Lord." So, when we consider the lavish dressing, the display, the dancing, and all else that go to make up a great public ball, can we judge that the money offering which such a spectacle represents is a delight to the Lord our God, and that it is such a one as the Christian managers of philanthropic institutions can consistently take?

THE LODGE AND THE PIT.

BY REV. HOWARD S. WILSON.

The Pittsburgh Commercial Gazette of Jan. 13 gives an account of the death of Rev. J. W. Johnson of the M. E. church at Huntington, W. Va., from injuries received during an initiation into the Royal Arch degree of Masonry. One part of the exercises was the lowering of the minister of the Gospel into a pit by means of a rope. When Mr. Johnson was passing through this lowering process the rope broke, and death resulted from injuries received.

It is frequently asserted that all the published expositions of Masonry are false, that its methods of initiation are not disgraceful or undignified, and that the secrets of Masonry cannot be learned except by joining the lodge; and, consequently, those whose principles lead them to oppose secret-ism can never secure reliable data on which to base their opposition. It occasionally happens, however, that the necessity of defending Masons from the charge of murder, as in the Morgan case, or of accounting for an alleged accidental death, as in this case, compels the lodge to reveal some of its secrets and a part of its methods. And these confessions are so damaging as not only to be sufficient for its condemnation, but also to give the presumption of truth to all the bad things which were ever said about it.

What does it matter whether or not the Rev. Johnson and his companion passed around the lodge room half naked and half dressed, if Christian people must blush over the fact, which is admitted, that these ministers of our Lord Jesus Christ were made in the lodge room to dangle like criminals at the end of a rope? Hung by a rope! lowered into a pit! Can any treatment be conceived more out of harmony with the holy calling of the ministry, or with the dignity of manhood? Strange that men who had been set apart to lead the way to heaven should allow their associates to send them in a direction the opposite of their life's course, and by a method of treatment accorded only to murderers!

The initiatory exercise in all associations is an epitome of the nature of the organization and of the duties and privileges of membership. Initiation is supposed concisely and impressively to set forth to the new member all that he is to learn more fully afterward. If this is so, then it is now in order for some Masonic authority to make a further concession and tell us what lowering into a pit is intended to suggest; for it seems from the acknowledgment in this case as though these ministers had solemnly promised to lead men to heaven and then participated in an exercise suggestive only of leading them to hell.

In any case, we know that in this action they were not following Him who has said, "In secret have I said nothing;" and a further explanation and confession are necessary to relieve from the thought that in their lodge connection, as presented in the Commercial Gazette, they were going in the direction of his kingdom whose principal place of power is a pit.

SHOULD CHRISTIANS GO TO THE THEATER.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

Among the great majority of thinking Christians there is little difference of opinion on this question. True, there have been some who have thought that the theater, though manifestly evil in its character and influence, could be reformed. A part of their plan has been to secure the attendance of Christian people, and thus create a demand for purer and better exhibitions. But after more than a century of effort the results have been disheartening. Like the efforts to reform the lodge and the saloon, or to make drunkards into temperate men by marrying them to Christian women, the effects have disappointed the fondest expectations.

True, the elevating influences of Christianity have lifted the theatre somewhat out of its grossness; but this very partial and wholly inadequate reform has come, not because Christians have patronized the drama, but for the exactly opposite reason that they have been conspicuously absent. Their perpetual and silent protest has accomplished more than they could have done by their presence. Whatever advancement there is to be in the future will be the result of a similar course.

In a community distinguished for its elevated tone of piety and morals, I had supposed that this was the uniform conviction. I confess my surprise at learning that two of the professors of Oberlin went to Cleveland to attend a theatrical performance, and that one of them told his class that if they desired to attend a respectable theater permission would not be withheld. True, the performance was an amateur Greek play, and the ostensible object was a more thorough knowledge of the Greek. But that does not excuse the endorsement of theater-going. I do not believe the Oberlin people, as a whole, would tolerate a theater in their midst.

But why should not Christians attend the theater?

1. They have always something better to do. Grant that there is nothing in the play that is positively wrong, yet it is scarcely conceivable that there is no form of Christian meditation, investigation, or active endeavor that would not secure larger and better results for ourselves and for others than we could hope to obtain by an hour at the theater. God always requires us to choose the highest forms of usefulness.

2. Theater-going is expensive. The dollar spent for an hour's entertainment is so much drawn from the resources of the church. It means a dollar less for missions and a weaker interest in the spread of the Gospel. The stewards of the Lord have no right to squander his money for self-gratification while millions perish for the bread of life.

3. It leads to habits of dissipation. This is true of all forms of needless self-indulgence, but the habit of theater-going brings people into contact with the great mass of the worldly and the sensuous. The saloon and the harlot's house are hard by, if not merely an annex to the theater. [It is an old saying that when a young man takes up the life of a rake, he begins by going to the theater.—Ed.] "Evil communications corrupt good manners."

4. The theater is not Christian. It never pretended to be so. No theater was ever opened in the name of Christ nor with a prayer for his holy presence. The only attempt to make a Christian play was that made in New York to dramatize and exhibit the passion of our Lord. The moral sense of the people revolted, and the authorities suppressed it as arrogant blasphemy. The divine law is, "Whatsoever ye do, in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus." Col. 3: 17.

5. It has the appearance of evil. Many, perhaps most, theatrical displays have something that is absolutely pernicious. But suppose they do not, the great majority of thinking people, whether Christians or men of the world, hold theater-going to be out of harmony with a Christian profession. Mr. Munhall says that he was once persuaded to go and see Rip Van Winkle played by Jefferson. Next night, in his revival work, he besought a sinner to turn to Christ. The young man, with a look of scorn, replied, "Did I not see you last night at the theater? Talk to me about being a Christian!" Surely it is good neither to eat flesh, nor drink wine, nor (do) anything whereby the brother is offended or is made weak." Rom. 14: 20.

THE MISSION OF BEREA COLLEGE.

BY REV. J. M. FOSTER.

It was my privilege to visit this institution during the past week. This college is the outgrowth of Rev. John G. Fee's conflict with slavery in Kentucky. It now owns 300 acres, has buildings worth $100,000, and an endowment of $100,000. It is a mixed school. The object is to furnish a practical solution of the race problem in the South. This they are doing by educating white and black together on a perfect equality. Dr. Fairchild said: "As servants, colored people are welcome everywhere in the South; as equals, nowhere. A colored driver and a colored nurse may ride with the family in the family carriage, but one not a servant must not. Colored servants may ride in the ladies' car, but a colored woman, not a servant, must not. Colored waiters abound in hotels and restaurants, but colored guests must not appear. Colored barbers shave and shampoo the most fastidious white people, but the neatest colored man must not be shaved in the same shop. Colored men are good porters on sleeping cars and palace cars, but must not be admitted as passengers. They are cooks and waiters in the most stylish families, but never sit at their tables. A colored preacher, a graduate of a college and theological seminary, ever so able and cultured, would not be invited to dine with his white brother of the same presbytery, if the call to dinner should come while they were in consultation about matters of the church. This must not continue. White and colored people must be perfectly equal before the law. This is the mission of Berea College."

Prof. Phelps has a caustic review of Grady's Boston speech in the Congregationalist. He says: "We asked, When will the South give the colored people their rights? And Grady answers by telling us how he loved his old black mammy who tucked him in his little bed. We asked, When will the blacks be allowed to vote? And we are told of the heroism of refined Southern ladies who lost all by the war. We ask, When will the black vote be counted? And we are told that last year the South produced 7,500,000 bales of cotton, worth $50,000,000. It was just like the Jacobites defence of Charles I. They were asked, Did not Charles I. let loose the most hot-headed and hot-blooded prelates against the Reformers? And they answered, Charles I. was a good husband. They were asked, Did not Charles I. persecute the Covenanters? And they replied, He took up his little son on his knee and kissed him. They were asked, Did he not murder the faithful? And they answered, He was accustomed to attend prayers before six o'clock in the morning. Such irrelevancies characterize the Boston speech. It was, indeed, the eloquence of the banquet hall, but not the eloquence of affairs."

Berea College is looked upon with suspicion in the South. Prof Wright wrote an article on the poor whites in the mountains, of whom there are 2,000,000. He offered it to the Christian Observer, of Louisville. The editor, Dr. Converse, said: "I would be glad to publish those facts, but I cannot give them over the signature of any one connected with Berea College. I think you you are doing harm."

Prof Wright replied: "I have lately visited the schools in New York city, and I saw colored children in the graduating classes, and they were a credit to the schools."

J. G. FEE.

"Has New York got so low as that?" was the rejoinder.

This indicates the feeling. A South Carolina editor, after having been kindly entertained and led through the principal buildings, and shown all that he wished to see in Berea, gave in his paper a full and flattering account of the school and the buildings, expressing his opposition, of course, to the co-education of the races, and then pronounced the whole "the work of Northern spite."

The Atlanta University was receiving an annuity from the Georgia legislature. The report reached the legislature that twelve white people were being educated in the university. They proved to be the children of the professors who were educating them. The Glenn bill was introduced to the effect that the appropriation would be withdrawn unless the white children were removed. Dr. Haygood wrote an open letter to the legislature, and said, "It is a shame to forbid these Northern teachers, who came here to do the Lord's work among the poor blacks, to teach their own children. Perhaps they felt that, as we have ostracised them from our homes and society, their children would not be welcomed in our white schools." Prof. Wright wrote a letter to the Atlanta Constitution, telling them the Glenn bill did not go deep enough. They should fine and imprison all parents in the State who send their sons to Yale or Harvard or West Point, for colored students attend these. Also those parents who send their daughters to Vassar, for colored ladies attend there. Grady headed the article, "Against Co-education," and printed it. He seemed to realize that the Glenn bill went too far.

Berea College is opposed to secret societies. Bro. Fee saw slavery abolished. May he live to see secret societies abolished also! A Methodist minister in Lexington told me that he never offered a Masonic prayer because they left out the name of Christ. St. Paul's M. E. church in Cincinnati has a new pastor, Rev. Geo. K. Morris, D.D., of Philadelphia. As a recommendation the papers announce him as a 32-degree Mason. He is thirty-two degrees lower in your correspondent's estimation. Berea has a student from Switzerland, one from Bohemia, one from England, and there are young people attending from sixteen States.

GLIMPSES OF GERMAN LIFE.

AS SEEN BY OUR ARTIST FRIEND IN EUROPE.

HANOVER.

I came via Wurzburg to Eisenach, the nearest village to the Wartburg, where, you remember, Martin Luther made the first translation of the Bible into German. His room is kept nearly as he had it; his own bedstead, writing table and footstool are there, and the furniture which is missing has been replaced by other old similar pieces. The spot of ink on the wall where he threw his inkstand at the devil at that time, has all been carried away, piece after piece, by tourists; and now the guide only can point at the gap and say, "Here was once an ink stain made by Martin Luther." I don't know why people are so greedy to steal a piece of something forbidden when they travel. Some Americans and several Germans, too, had cut their names in great letters into Luther's writing desk. Now no one is allowed to enter the room alone, and the bedstead is chained around to prevent people hacking into it. The little chapel where he preached and most of the other rooms have been restored, it is said, just as they originally were. If they were as beautiful then as now, Luther lived in a very pleasant castle and was not at all in a pitiable condition there. Besides, the view from his windows, and especially from the windows on the opposite side, is grand. One can see for miles over the village and wooded hilly country to the mountains beyond. The castle, itself, stands upon a high, rocky hill, that is covered with woods, mostly evergreen, to the top. The foundations are a reddish gray stone, and are covered now perfectly green with moss. It is the most picturesque old castle I have ever seen, even if it had no historical associations.

From there I came to Cassel and stayed one day to see the gallery. There is a very good collection of Rembrandt's there—twenty or more—and much finer than those in Munich. The ones I liked best were a portrait of his wife, and his picture of "Jacob blessing his grand-children." Almost all his pictures have a warm yellowish light like sunshine coming through some half opaque substance into a half-dark room.

From Cassel here the railway comes through hilly country again, but here it looks like Illinois prairie land, except that there is always a blue fog or haze in the air. There are many factories here and it is consequently a "sooty city." It looks odd to me after seeing Munich's white lime dust so long.

I like Hanover for some reasons much better than Munich, and if Jakobides and the other artists and the galleries were here, I would rather stay the winter through than to go back. The climate is much more agreeable, and I like all the North-Germans better than the Bavarians. In all the time I have been in Munich I have not made single acquaintance that I cared much for, who is a South-German.

We were in the "palm-garden" here a few days ago. The largest palm-tree in Europe is here. It is seventy feet high, and they had to build another glass-house over it because it had grown on to the roof of the one first built. The whole building is glass, sides and all, and about half way up a gallery goes around the whole length and through the middle. It was so much like walking in the air that I got quite dizzy and had to go down. Then we went to the royal stables to see what are called the "white-born" horses; that is a breed of white horses which has not a speck of any other color anywhere, not even on the lips; and the only ones in the world are these here and some belonging to the King of Denmark. They used to be harnessed in blue and silver, and looked very grand drawing the king's and queen's coaches. But now, you know, the King of Hanover is exiled and all his possessions are in keeping of the Prussians, until he takes the oath of allegiance to the Emperor of Germany; and that he never will do, he says. So the beautiful horses only go out with the lackey for exercise, and the race will most likely die out. The palace even now stands empty. There is an immense royal garden here, where I go walking nearly every day; to-day I noticed quite a large monument, and asked who was buried there? They said, "Nobody; it is a monument to the king's favorite dog!" I wish you could see the old houses, with their beams all on the outside, and the high-pointed roofs. But it is the sootiest city I ever was in. I don't believe Pittsburgh can be dirtier.

I am back in Munich again, by way of Dresden, which I left Friday night; and the most uncomfortable journey I ever made was that one. You know the cars here are divided into little compartments, for eight or ten persons, and there is no possibility of getting any air except by opening a window and sitting in the draft. They are heated by pipes along the floor, and that night it was so hot underneath the seats that we couldn't put our feet down, but had to sit curled up in every way. Then we opened the windows and froze for a change. There are arrangements for shutting off the hot-air pipes. It was after midnight when I came on the train, and not one of those people ever had thought of turning off the heat, but sat there almost burning, with the indicator crowded into the very last corner of the "warm" side, until, I suppose, the whole car was so heated through that it couldn't cool before morning. I believe I never was so nearly roasted alive even in our very hottest weather. I staid two days in Dresden to see the gallery, which is very large. It has 2,300 oil paintings, mostly by old masters. The most celebrated one is Raphael's Madonna, the one that was originally in the Sistine chapel at Rome, just opposite Michael Angelo's "Last Judgment." At least that is what most people say, and I supposed so too; but in the catalogue of the Dresden gallery it says this most celebrated of Raphael's Madonnas was bought in 1753, "from a little convent church called San Sisto, in a small town in Italy, for 20,000 ducats."

I go now to speak English with two baronesses from 2 till 5 every afternoon; and, as I am in the studio from 8:30 to 1 P. M., and again from 5 to 7, and have twenty minutes' walk to come home, my time is quite filled. The two baronesses showed me a large illuminated manuscript book with the history of all their ancestors and their coats of arms back to A. D. 1300. One of their forefathers was saved by Joan of Arc at Orleans, they say; and two others helped at the burning of Huss quite surely. There was a picture of Huss at the stake, in colors, with Duke Ludwig, of Bavaria, and her (the baroness) ancestors looking on. I said, without thinking, that it was "Huss, the martyr," at which she was quite indignant, and said he was no martyr, he was a heretic. "Indeed, he was an arch-heretic!" And she showed me how the words were printed on his cap in the picture. Some of the illustrations were so finely done that they must have been made through a magnifying glass, and the printing just as accurately done as by a printing press. It took some lady a lifetime to do it.

THE INFLUENZA EPIDEMIC.—It is a noteworthy fact that in all the comments of the daily journals on this widespread affliction, there has been, so far as we have seen, no recognition whatever of the fact that sickness and health, for individuals and communities, are in the hand of God, or that such dispensations as these have any connection with his moral government of the world. Yet the Scriptures clearly teach these truths, and if they are to be believed at all are to be believed in this. When Jehovah brought his people out of Egypt "there was not one feeble person among their tribes," while all the first-born of the Egyptians were stricken with death. This was a representative and typical example of the providence which constantly dispenses life and death, health and sickness, to the children of men as means of reaching and moving their hearts and drawing them to God. The present infliction is a lesson of the world's dependence on Divine favor and help, an admonition to repentance for public sins, and a warning that if we refuse to repent the chastisement may be greatly intensified. How easily diphtheria instead of influenza might have been borne on the wings of the wind and have overspread the nations! The utter absence of such thoughts as these in the organs of public opinion is an alarming proof of the atheistic spirit which marks our age, especially in reference to God's dealings with men in their public relations.—Christian Statesman.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24, 1890.

At last something tangible is about to be done toward diminishing the number of drinking saloons in the District of Columbia. The city Commissioners are alive to the necessity, and yesterday one of them said: "The saloons must be thinned out, and though it will fall heavily upon some, it cannot be helped." It is estimated that there are six thousand persons in the District who live off the receipts from the sale of liquors, and that there are fifteen hundred saloons. The Commissioners began the work of an investigation on Wednesday last, and since they themselves now admit that the matter must be carefully and conscientiously considered, some good results may be expected.

The subject of Sabbath observance is agitated by Washington pastors these days. The physical necessity of a day of rest is dwelt upon as the right of every man, as well as the duty of the state to protect him in that right. Upon the ground that Sunday amusements corrupt the morals, it is also claimed that it is the duty of the state to guard the day of leisure from uses dangerous to public morality.

The fact that Hon. Samuel Randall joined the church last Sabbath, revived stories to the effect that his health is declining, and that he is preparing for the approach of death. On the contrary, the distinguished invalid is apparently more cheerful and hopeful than he has been for a long time. He expresses himself as perfectly confident of recovery, and does not seem to join any anxiety that his friends may feel in regard to his condition.

In a recent letter I mentioned that Congressman Butterworth was preparing to strike a blow at big speculators through a bill to suppress gambling in farm products. This measure, which has long been demanded by the people of the Western agricultural States, made its appearance in the House of Representatives this week. It proposes to levy a high tax, its author holding that the evil can only be reached through the taxing power of the Federal Government, since the States are unequal to the task. He says of the bill: "It deals with a subject which is of transcendent importance to the whole country. While raising revenue, it will tend to suppress gambling in farm staples, a system of gambling which is more hurtful to the people than a thousand Monte Carlos in the United States would be. The evil can only be reached through the taxing power of the Federal Government. The States are either unequal or indisposed to touch the evil. The bill will not interfere with legitimate dealing which rises above the dignity of common gambling, but it will, if passed, relieve the great agricultural interests of the country from the paralysis which has seized upon them."

The tendency of the tax, Mr. Butterworth holds, will be to confine transactions to the actual contents of the markets, whereas now there are bought and sold on 'change millions of pounds and bushels more of all staples than there are in existence.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

George W. Cable—A "find" in the Boston public library—Rogers' statue of John Eliot—Chloe Lankton's death—Daniel Dougherty answered—The Knights of Labor at Woburn—The Grange in Connecticut—The true secret of reform power.

Among the scores of Southern authors who have come to the front since the war, Geo. W. Cable is the one who has made the most enduring mark on American literature. His genius in catching the very aroma of a well nigh vanished social condition is almost like Scott's. His stories of the old Creole regime remind me of the jars of preserved rose-leaves in which our grandmothers used to delight. Open the lid and out flit, as it were, the imprisoned ghosts of a hundred Junes, shadowy as ghosts ought to be, and sad like all earth's sweetest things. As in a magic mirror we see the fair mistress of that old-time garden, who so long ago lay down in her bloom to sleep under the mossy marbles, in the clinging short-waisted dress of the First Empire, and two or three curls falling down each side of her face, a la Josephine.

"Down this side of the gravel walk
She went, while her robe's edge brushed the box;
And here she paused in her gracious talk
To point out a moth on the milk-white phlox."

But with all the subtle refinement of his style he has much of the mental make-up of a native New Englander, and for this reason he represents the New South better than almost any other Southern-born man of letters. But his native section cannot forgive him his deadly sin of being a champion of the colored race. At least the Atlanta Constitution says that he has so offended Southern society by accepting the hospitality of, and associating with, colored people during his recent visit to Nashville, Tenn., that it will henceforth bar its doors to him. Of course this decision involves no particular loss to Mr. Cable, who has a lovely home in "the hill country" of New England, where he has settled with the evident intention of spending the rest of his days. But this ostracism of one of her most gifted sons, the massacre of helpless Negroes, and the horrors of her convict system, which might put Siberia to the blush, seem to place the epoch of complete reconstruction a long way in the future.

Now that I am on literary subjects, I will just mention that the librarian of the Boston public library is rejoicing over a rare find—no less than an autograph of Shakespeare found in a copy of North's Plutarch of 1603. If this is really genuine—as good judges believe—it contains more of Shakespeare's own handwriting than has ever been discovered anywhere else, even in his native England. Strange that such a man could live an ordinary lifetime on this earth and leave so little of his individual self behind him! Some men when they depart from this world seem to leave almost endless material for that small gossip in which humanity delights. Posterity knows all about them: how they looked, how they dressed, how they wore their hair, and all their little pet idiosyncracies. Others are only known through the work they have accomplished.

John Eliot, the Apostle to the Indians, was one of this class, although Jared Sparks contrived to write his biography—a very unsatisfactory one, by the way, but probably as good as could be made out of such scanty material by such a matter-of-fact historian, who never would have dreamed of "filling up" with any romancing of his own. As he left no portrait, the colossal statue of New England's first home missionary, just modeled by John Rogers, whose charming statuettes have made him so well known, is entirely ideal. It represents him preaching to two Indians, and pointing with one hand skyward, while in the other he holds an open Bible. On his head he has a skull cap, and his long robe opens in front, showing the case in which he carries his Bible, fastened by a belt at the waist. It is intended to be executed in bronze on a pedestal of granite, and if it comes to Boston, as is hoped, it will be an ornament worthy of the city. Those calm, grand features, and that uplifted finger, must be like a continual witness to a higher and more satisfying life than the majority of the busy, bustling crowds below are leading.

Chloe Lankton, bed-ridden for more than sixty years, recently died at her home in New Hartford, Conn., aged 77, one of the victims of la grippe. Her life was made the subject of a book one or two years ago that was on the shelves of most of our Sabbath-school libraries. Mysterious is the Providence that consigned her and another life-long sufferer, Lizzie Smith, to so many years of patiently-endured suffering. But what we know not now eternity will reveal.

Rev. T. E. Leyden replied to Daniel Dougherty last Sunday evening at his Reformed Catholic meeting in Boston, and is reported by the American as having "a grand audience which entirely filled the house." Mrs. Shephard also gave a scathing review of his speech at Music Hall; so between these two eloquent anti-Romanist leaders, Mr. Dougherty ought to consider himself sufficiently answered.

The labor troubles at Woburn, not yet ended, adds another instance of the folly of trusting to lodge leadership. Wherever the Knights of Labor gain power the old story is repeated. A most unhappy spirit of antagonism is roused on both sides, and the manufacturers, angered and provoked by the tyrannical demands of men who generally have not the least knowledge of business and live by stirring up discord, too often feel themselves justified in fighting even the righteous claims of their employes.

The Grange is said to have a strong hold upon the farmers of Connecticut. During the last two years the membership has increased one fourth, and there are now 110 local granges with a membership aggregating between 4,000 and 5,000. The State Grange lately closed its annual meeting in Willimantic. Of course in its debates the vexed old question had the lion's share, but the Home, in a lengthy report, has this significant paragraph: "The subject of temperance will be introduced in the discussions, and its general principles inculcated, as they are in local granges, but the State Grange does not go any further than this, not deeming it wise to formulate any expression as to political methods." The Grange can always be trusted to stand firm for the cider interest.

In my next letter there will be some important plans to lay before its readers regarding our work in New England for the coming year. It is a great work which lies before, and to do it we need it—the rank and file as much as the leaders—a large endowment of the Spirit. We need more daily communion with the Highest, and a stronger grasp on the Rock of Ages. Wilberforce used to spend four hours daily in close Bible study and prayer. This was the secret of his mighty spiritual power, as the great leader of the anti-slavery cause, facing almost alone the entire House of Commons. That is the great force which lifts life out of the commonplace, and makes the weakest strong to give battle to the most strongly entrenched giants of iniquity.

ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

CORRESPONDENCE.

AMONG THE KENTUCKY CHURCHES.

RICHMOND, Ky., Jan. 22, 1890.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—At last we have a little touch of winter. Peach and japonica blossoms, that looked bright yesterday, are badly frozen today; however, it is bright and beautiful, and the cold seems likely to be of short duration. I never travel over this beautiful Blue Grass region without renewed admiration. Its natural advantages are unsurpassed by any part of the United States. But in the matter of railroads, hotels, and restaurants, it excels all others in high prices and studied inconvenience. Less attention to horse-racing and whisky-making would be an immense advantage to the State.

I have just spent ten days at Camp Nelson, preaching eleven sermons during my stay. Owing to sickness, the attendance was not so large as I hoped, but there was a deep and growing interest to the last, and I trust much good was accomplished. The church here is undenominational, has about 100 members, and all but two are colored. Camp Nelson Academy is conducted by Miss Mary Robe and Miss Etta Stewart, who are doing a most excellent work for a needy people. There is a fine three-story frame building in a most beautiful location, designed for a dormitory and boarding hall, and a good school building fairly well furnished. The dormitory, though occupied, is not quite completed. Four or five hundred dollars invested here would add greatly to the value of the school. Has not some one, who is a steward of the Lord, some money that could be wisely bestowed on this object? Bro. J. G. Fee and myself are trustees, and would see the funds wisely appropriated.

I first visited this place in the fall of 1880. There was at that time a secret society which had fairly gotten underway. I lectured there several times on the lodge system and the society was given up. No attempt has ever been made to revive it. The church has had much sound doctrine on this question from Bros. Fee, J. F. Browne and myself. Another church of fifty members, four miles away, has been built up on reform principles. They have a good house of worship erected by their own means, and give a meager support to Bro. Overstreet, a member of the Camp Nelson church, who ministers to them on the Sabbath. Bro. Overstreet is a radical prohibitionist and anti-secretist. On the 12th six members were added to his church by baptism.

These little churches are standing for correct Christian principles, and are as lights shining in a dark place. I was glad to see white Christians coming in and taking part in our meetings at Camp Nelson. Nothing breaks down the color line like an out-pouring of the Holy Spirit. I am satisfied that in no way can so much be done for the welfare of the colored American, and for the general interests of the nation, as by building up local churches that are opposed to caste, to sectarianism, to whisky and the lodge. There is an open door for such a work as this.

Yesterday I visited the Chandler Normal School at Lexington. They have but just moved into a fine, large new building, erected and owned by the A. M. A. The school, under the care of Prof. Foster, is fairly prosperous, and together with the Daniel Hand School, with which it is connected, enrolls about 275 pupils. They are doing a most excellent work. I found here the Cynosure in their reading-room, but no anti-secrecy books. Prof. Foster, who, I infer, has paid little or no attention to the lodge question, said they would be glad of such a library. He kindly invited me to meet them at their morning exercises and address them on secret societies. This I hope to do soon.

The affliction under which the good people of Kentucky literally groan is the whisky business. As I write a trial is progressing of a shooting affair in a saloon last night. Whisky was the beginning, middle and end. "How long, O Lord!" I go to Berea, and expect to visit Jackson county in the mountains this week. Yours for Christ,

H. H. HINMAN.

WAYSIDE NOTES.

MRS. BLANCHARD'S DEATH.

BLANCHARD, Iowa.

We have felt under the shadow of a bereavement since the news came of Mother Blanchard's death. I met her last at the Monmouth Convention, a little more than two years ago. I remember no mother's face so familiar at our reform conventions as hers, and it was a real benediction. She was a Christian of rare equipoise; not of the noisy, demonstrative kind, but her convictions moved as the deep river, without a swirl or eddy. She will be sadly missed at our State conventions and meetings. But she rests from faithful service, and that familiar form which we shall see no more on earth, shall come forth to glory and immortality when the last trumpet will shake the heavens and the earth.

At the Belvidere, Ill., State Convention three years ago, Sister Blanchard was present and gave us some cheering words in Bro. Arnold's big tent, where the convention was held. I had the privilege, with several others, of being lodged at the same home with her. I well remember the interesting conference Sister Blanchard held with our hostess, a Free Methodist lady, just before we all retired for the night. It was a late hour, and I had been lecturing every night for four weeks in Wisconsin, and was nearly overcome with drowsiness. Our hostess closed the conference with a season of prayer, and with Free Methodist fervor she prayed, "O Lord, thou knowest how Bro. Gault needs waking up!" I felt it would have been more appropriate if she had prayed, "Thou knowest how Bro. Gault has been deprived of so much sleep, and how much he needs rest!"

PAY THIS DEBT.

The subscribers in Iowa to Bro. C. F. Hawley's work will please remember how faithfully this devoted servant of Christ traveled and lectured in summer's heat and winter's cold for several years in Iowa, depending on your subscriptions to meet his expenses. Each year there was a deficit of unpaid subscriptions, the total amounting to over $700. Bro. Hawley is still in debt for expenses incurred while working in our State, and depends on these unpaid subscriptions to meet it. Will not the friends who are thus in debt to Bro. Hawley make an effort to pay it?

While it may be a small sum to each subscriber, yet in the aggregate it lifts a burden of $700 from the shoulders of this devoted brother. Brethren, think and pray over this matter. No debt you ever contracted presents stronger claims for payment than this one. The money may be sent direct to Bro. C. F. Hawley, Wheaton, Ill., or to Rev. C. D. Trumbull, Morning Sun, Iowa.

OPTIMISM OR PESSIMISM.

Several years ago Ned Forrest, the converted gambler, held two week's meetings in the M. E. church at Blanchard, during which about a hundred professed conversion. It is difficult now to find one of those converts who has held out. We are losing faith in those special evangelistic meetings. When we visited Winchester, Kan., in November, Bro. Coulter was feeling encouraged over an interesting revival going on in the M. E. church, which was bringing in quite a number of the toughs of the town. But a letter just received from him says, on New Year's Day the Masons of Winchester made a great spread, and had a parade on the streets, at which the M. E. pastor, who had led the revival services, went in with the roughs of the town, was installed chaplain of the lodge, and carried the Bible in the procession. Bro. Coulter writes, "This demon of Masonry, with all the legions of unclean spirits hatched from its frog-like spit and spawn, has entered into and possessed both church and state, till we can do but little more than cry out, 'O Lord, how long!'" He says, "Recently I taught my congregation that there are times when a man does well to be angry, and the man who did not become righteously indignant at the daring iniquities of these times had not force enough to follow Him who in holy displeasure scourged the traders out of the Temple." Bro. Coulter says, "I have been preaching optimism, but am coming to the opinion that we will have pessimism enough first and the optimism will come in later on."

M. A. GAULT.

CHRISTIANITY IN THE STATE.

CINCINNATI, O.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—The Christian Convention was a grand success. The first session had a full house, and the last was not less. All the speakers but one appeared on the platform, and he was prevented by a sudden attack of pneumonia. The Commercial Gazette gave a column and a half report each day. Strong resolutions were adopted. The last was:

"Resolved, That this convention cannot but reprobate in the strongest terms the disregard of the sanctity of the judicial oath, and the principles which have heretofore made trial by jury the bulwark of personal liberty, by juries, which, contrary to admitted evidence of guilt, have, nevertheless, acquitted culprits because they did not approve of the laws which they had violated."

The most stirring address was by Rev. Howard Henderson, D.D., on "The Race Problem." The Negro has one true friend. He wants the famous action of the committee adopted:

"Resolved, That every one have a fair chance."

The most logical address was by Rev. D. McAllister, D.D., LL.D., on this theme: "A Legal Argument against Secular Common Schools." It was a masterpiece. It was firm as the rock. The most polished and scholarly address was by Pres. Sylvester F. Scovel, D.D., on "The Limitations of Personal Liberty." But for a combination of wit, sarcasm, logic, eloquence and force, Judge M. B. Hagans on "The Civil Sabbath" surpassed all. All the addresses were of the highest order. Pres. W. K. Brown, D.D., desires to have them published in a book of 150 pages.

J. M. FOSTER.

OUR INVALID SOCIETY.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—If you will allow me a little space in your excellent paper I would like to tell all, and especially your invalid readers, about our society. It is not a secret order, but an unorganized association, consisting of invalids and Christian workers, who find that blessedness comes to both those who give and those who receive kindly ministrations. To be a sufferer, shut out from the world, constitutes one a proper candidate for membership. This is secured by a subscription to the organ of the society, the Invalid's Visitor, costing only fifty cents, which will secure the magazine for one year and a card of membership, with all other benefits to be derived from union with many hundreds of loving, praying Christian hearts. The address of each new member is given a Christian worker whose office is to convey messages of welcome and sympathy. At the same time all members enjoy the privilege of addressing each other; of sending reading, both periodicals and books; of exchanging tokens of regard of various kinds; and, best of all, to pray for each other at set times, daily, at the twilight hour. The associate members are not themselves invalids, but being in tender sympathy with the suffering, have volunteered in this ministry of love for "Jesus's sake." The associate fee is one dollar, one-half of which is designed to furnish the magazine to the destitute. The Invalid's Visitor is edited by one of the associate members, Mrs. Kate Sumner Burr, Williamson, N. Y., to whom all inquiries concerning the Band should be addressed. There are no officers in this society, the associate members occupying places of equal importance and respect.

This is not, properly speaking, an aid association, though many kind offices are performed for the needy. Though the Visitor is the especial organ of the Invalid's Band, its list is not limited to the members and associates, but any others are cordially invited.

F. G. H.

SHALL THE N. C. A. BE A MISSIONARY AGENCY?

WEATOGUE, Conn.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—You are a dear friend to me, my guiding star for years. It has been a pleasant journey. Your friends have become dear friends to me. I love you all, and that is the reason that I write to you. My sympathy and best wishes have been with you in all your endeavors to advance the cause of truth and righteousness. I have suffered with those of you who have been insulted, mobbed and abused in every way—your names cast out as evil, your lives threatened; yea, more than that, murder was in their hearts, and but for the strong Deliverer, whose arm overshadows all God's people, a number of crimes of the first magnitude would have been added to the long indictment. I have felt it all with you, and the Master has felt it; and it is all recorded in his book of remembrance. I know that I love you, but I know that I love Christ more.

I have become convinced, however, that our work is not as successful as it should be, or as the Lord would have it. Will you bear with me, an humble farmer, if I attempt to point out some of the mistakes and hint at a remedy?

What is the object for which we are all striving? I think I can hear you all answer as one voice, The upbuilding of Christ's kingdom and the overthrow of the power of Satan.

I have been a reformer from childhood. I heard the crack and felt the blows here in Connecticut of the slave-driver's whip on the Southern plantations. I offered my life in the service of our country at the very first call for aid, not to save the Constitution, but to save our country from the terrible curse of slavery. I know what it is to be reviled in a righteous cause. Always on the side of temperance, I have felt the woes of the drunkard and his family, and have always been working and praying with all the true temperance workers for the complete overthrow of the power of rum. I have watched until I have felt the terrible destruction that is being wrought in our race by tobacco, and for more than thirty years have been in the foremost ranks against this terrible foe. What I have done in aiding you against the prince of darkness in the anti-secrecy cause, I will leave it for others to answer, but I think that I can honestly say that I have done what I could.

As I look back I ask myself what great victories have been won. Satan is stronger to-day than ever before. He had to give up the system of property in man, but he is left with all of his powers and skill unimpaired to carry on his work of destruction in other ways. Our guns have been of too short range and weight of shot to reach the citadel of the enemy and be effective. The powder we have been using has been mixed with too much human skill and wisdom, and not enough of "thus saith the Lord." I cannot find where Christ tells us to go and fight the devil, but to go and preach the Gospel. Christ could have had complete victory over the devil to-day if he would. When his enemies had him in their power, and one who was with him made an attempt to deliver, he forbade him and said, "Thinkest thou that I cannot now pray to my Father, and he shall presently give me more than twelve legions of angels!"

The Scriptures must be fulfilled. Satan must continue his work, and can only be hindered in God's own way and time. We must always remember that the Word tells us not to be ignorant of the devices of the devil, and thus the Lord would have us make a good use of our knowledge of secrecy when we are teaching the way of salvation. With all that we have been doing, methinks that I can see Satan smiling at us. He cares for nothing so long as souls are left within his reach. Our business is to get them into the fold of Christ, where they are safe, and safe only there.

I think that a very wise thing was done at the late meeting of the N. E. C. A., when a committee was appointed to consider the importance of more missionary work. I trust that committee will report promptly, and the needed work be begun at once. We have the commission for this work in our hands from the Lord, and the promise that he will bless it. The great mass of people have not been taught that clean hearts and holy lives were the necessary fruits of repentance and faith in God. It does not require a very powerful glass to see that the "popular" gospel of to-day is not the Gospel that saves. Sinners cannot be caught with such chaff, and thus the devil has almost undisputed sway. What chance has God's true messenger when more than ninety per cent of all the so-called church members are on their way to Vanity Fair, and have no time or disposition to stop and listen to the words of life. Just so long as Satan is allowed a place in the churches (when I say the churches I do not mean the church of Christ; he is never allowed to remain there), just so long will he keep the people in the lodges.

The reform must begin at Jerusalem. So long as we are content to see Christ cast out in the house of his friends, we must not expect that he will have many friends in the camps of the enemy. God's command is to slay. For a few days' worship of the golden calf there were three thousand slain. Think you such things are done in these days. I say, nay verily. They would all be rewarded with a fat office, or a place in the ministry.

There must be a change. God calls for a change, and we have the means to do it. The consecrated men and women are in our ranks who can in God's name fill our land with a knowledge of his truth.

Who will send forth the proclamation of emancipation from a bondage a thousand times worse than were the laws which upheld slavery? As I write I remember that such a proclamation was sent forth more than eighteen hundred years ago, and we are blessed to-day because a few faithful men and women have heard it, and have dared to make it known. We need no new commission, but that the heralds of it may be multiplied by thousands.

In some way I was made acquainted with the fact that when one of our lecturers was given his commission to speak against the lodge, he reserved to himself the right that when souls were to be saved he should stop and help. When this faithful servant of the Lord was lecturing to a half score of people in my neighborhood he would not close the service until he had given an opportunity to any who wished to be saved to make it manifest. Such men must not be shut away from the great masses who are perishing, to speak to the few who will gather to hear an Anti-masonic lecture. It must not be so. God does not want it so. Let the true and noble N. C. A., with all of its auxiliaries, adopt itself into one grand missionary society, and send men and women commissioned of the Lord to go and preach Jesus Christ as the truth and the life, and the only way of salvation. God's Word for it the lodge will tremble, and Dagon will be slain. Your fellow worker,

P. BACON.

PITH AND POINT.

THE PETITION AND THE LEAGUE.

I return the petition to Congress with only a few names. The men around here nearly all belong to the Farmers' Alliance, and many of the women, and although they claim it is hardly a secret society, yet they did not sign it. The two men that have signed the Anti-Secrecy League are good Christian men, and if you send them literature I think it will be well used. The papers you sent me have set some people to thinking. I will try to get up a club for the paper. When you have extra copies if you will send them I will be glad to distribute them, hoping that the public mind may be so awakened on the subject that it will be unpopular to belong to a secret society.—SARAH PATTERSON, P. M., Sternerton, Kans.

ONE HUNDRED TO ONE WANTED.

I enclose postal note for one dollar. Will you be so kind as to send the Christian Cynosure. I would that the amount were one hundred instead of one dollar to be used in shedding light among the people in this benighted land.—G. M. ELLIOTT, Selma, Ala.

THE ROYAL ARCH TRAGEDY.

Wasn't that a dignified performance for grave preachers of the Gospel? Vaults and rope tackles are necessary to a degree in Royal Arch Masonry! This time it proved to be a pit of destruction. I fear that a worse pit than this will await some people who fellowship the unfruitful works of darkness.—SIMPSON ELY, President of Christian University, Canton, Mo.

LITERATURE.

Our Day is the only monthly of its kind in America. Edited by Joseph Cook, the well-known Boston lecturer, assisted by Miss Frances E. Willard, Prof. L. T. Townsend, Anthony Comstock, Rev. W. F. Crafts, Prof. E. J. James, and ex-President Cyrus Hamlin, with contributors in Japan, Siam, India, Honolulu, Berlin, Scotland, England, Canada, and throughout the United States, no important topic of reform escapes attention. It discusses fearlessly the Jesuit, Negro, Liquor, Mormon, and kindred questions, and is invaluable to all who desire information of the world of reform. The January number, which opens its fifth volume and third year, contains the second part of a poem by Pres. Rankin of Howard University, entitled "Broken Cadences," which is one of the Doctor's best productions, and has justly been placed in contrast with Wordsworth's "Ode on Immortality." "Sunday and the Saloon in Cincinnati," is discussed by Rev. H. F. Steward, and is a vivid presentation of the condition of affairs in that city. "Commerce and Christianity," by Rev. Dr. R. S. Storrs. "Self-Contradictory Claims of Catholics," by Rev. I. J. Lansing, the author of "Romanism and the Republic," is one of the brightest and keenest of papers. In the department of "Vital Points of Expert Opinion" is presented the opinion, with criticism thereon, of ex-Pres. McCosh on "German Theological Faculties and Revision of the Creed," Dr. Storrs' "Oration on the Puritan Spirit," lately delivered in Boston, "The Action of the American Board as to Missionary Candidates," Thomas G. Shearman on the "Owners of United States." The "Editorial Notes" embrace such topics as "Mr. Stanley in Africa," "German Treaties with Japan," "Vindication of Mr. Comstock in a Philadelphia Court," etc. This number contains other matter, relating to "Edward Everett Hale's and Edward Bellamy's Views on Nationalism," (to which the magazine does not commit itself), and a careful notice of the new Biography of Harriet Beecher Stowe. Price $2.50 per year; clergymen and students $2; single copies 25 cents. Bound volumes (6 months each) cloth, $2 each, prepaid. Our Day Pub. Co., 28 Beacon St., Boston, Mass.

The leading paper of the Missionary Review for February is by Rev. James Johnston, of London, on "Protestant Missions a Hundred Years Ago and Now." The contrast is sharply drawn, and is a bright prophecy for the future. Dr. Pierson's first letter from Scotland is given, and will be read with intense interest. There is a very remarkable paper on "The Charities of Germany," by Dr. A. H. Bradford, which is instructive reading. Dr. Steel, of New South Wales, has a ringing article on "The Jubilee of the New Hebrides Mission." J. Hudson Taylor, of the China Inland Mission, rings out a clarion appeal "To Every Creature." Secretary Ellinwood sketches with skillful hand "The Credulity of Skepticism." Then follows a graphic picture of pioneer missionary life in Alaska. Dr. Starbuck gives another chapter of translations from the foreign Missionary magazines—a unique and valuable feature of this review. And the literature section closes with an account of the student uprising and work. All the other seven departments are replete with facts, intelligence and correspondence.
